(A) IN GENERAL.—Research shall be treated as conducted for the purpose described in this paragraph if it relates to—

"(i) a new or improved function,

"(ii) performance,

"(iii) reliability or quality, or

"(iv) cofiring natural gas with coal in order to improve the coal combustion process and reduce sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides emissions from the coal.".

(b) FIVE-YEAR RECOVERY OF COST OF COFIRING EQUIPMENT.—Section 168(i)(11) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(11) RESEARCH AND EXPERIMENTATION.—The term 'research and experimentation' includes—

"(A) the same meaning as the term research and experimental has under section 174, or

"(B) equipment that cofires natural gas with coal in order to improve the coal combustion process and reduce sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides emissions from the coal.

(c) EXCLUSION FROM ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAXABLE INCOME.—Section 56(a)(1)(B) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN PROPERTY.—This paragraph shall not apply to property described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of section 168(f) or property described in (11)(B) of section 168(i).

(d) COFIRING AND NEW SOURCE PERFORMANCE STANDARDS.—Section 302 of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding a new section as follows:

"(r) the terms 'modifications' and 'reconstruction' shall have the meaning provided by regulations promulgated by the Administrator, provided that such terms shall not include any physical change or change in the manner of operation of an electric utility or industrial boiler related to cofiring natural gas with coal."

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE COFIRING PROMOTION ACT OF 1989

Section 1: Short Title—The short title of this legislation is the Cofiring Promotion Act of 1989.

Section 2: Findings—It is found that it is in the national interest to encourage the utilization of natural gas cofiring technologies that reduce sulfur dioxide (SO_2) and nitrogen oxide (NO_x) emissions resulting from the combustion of coal.

Section 101: Research and Demonstration Program.

Subsection (a): The Secretary of Energy is authorized to carry out a research, development and demonstration program to determine optimal natual gas cofiring levels for environmental and operational benefits in electric utility and large industrial boilers.

Subsection (b): The Secretary of Energy shall enter into cooperative agreements to demonstrate cofiring technolgies.

Subsection (c): Not more than $6 million is authorized to be appropriated in each of fiscal years 1990, 1991 and 1992 for the purposes of this section.

Section 102: Incentives for Cofiring.

Subsection (a): The definition of "qualified research" for purposes of the credit for increasing research activities under section 41 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is expanded to include research relating to cofiring natural gas with coal for purposes of improving the coal combustion process and reducing SO_2 and NO_x emissions from coal.

Subsection (b): Cofiring equipment shall qualify for five-year cost recovery under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. The definition of "research and experimentation" for purposes of the accelerated cost recovery system under section 168 of the Code is amended to include cofiring equipment.

Subsection (c): Section 56 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 which details adjustments in computing alternate minimum taxable income is amended to include cofiring equipment among the property excluded for purposes of computing alternate minimum taxable income.

Subsection (d): The status of electric utility and industrial boilers that use natural gas cofiring is clarified for purposes of new source permitting review and new source performance standards under the Clean Air Act. In particular, the terms "modification" and "reconstruction" shall not include any physical or operational change related to cofiring natural gas with coal in an electric utility or industrial boiler. Since natural gas cofiring provides a cost-effective means to reduce SO_2 and NO_x emissions from coal-fired boilers, it should not be subject to the modification/reconstruction provisions of the Clean Air Act which were intended to prevent sources from being rebuilt without complying with new source performance standards.●

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] in sponsoring legislation which I believe will make a major contribution toward alleviating an important environmental concern while at the same time perserve the jobs of coal miners in my State and elsewhere in the coalfields.

What we are talking about is combining two of our country's greatest fuel resources—coal and natural gas—in establishing a meaningful research and development program to promote cofiring of these two fuels.

Although there is some existing research taking place as part of DOE's Clean Coal Program, a much more focused effort should be made by the Government and the private sector as early as possible. It is time to step up the research and provide the incentives to get this technology in the marketplace.

Mr. President, cofiring is a modest portion of the current clean coal program of DOE. In fact, five projects have been selected for DOE funding, one each in Ohio and Indiana and three in Illinois, to test various methods of cofiring natural gas with coal in different types of utility boilers. This technology combines the clean burning characteristics of natural gas with the attractive economics of existing base load coal powerplants. For certain types of boilers, combined coal-natural gas technologies may be the only practical method of achieving substantial SO_2 and NO_x reductions.

What we need to do is expand and emphasize this program. Our legislation will do this.

Without being too technical, the cofiring of natural gas with coal can be divided into three separate categories: basic cofiring, natural gas reburn, and reburn with sorbent injection. Let me briefly describe each technology and its benefits.

First, simple cofiring of natural gas with coal involves the injection of gas into the boiler to provide a fraction of its total heat input. Originally, it was thought that this technique would reduce the amount of SO_2 and NO_x emissions in the same proportion that gas was used in the boilder. However, recent experience with the Cheswick power station in Pennsylvania found that even greater than proportional reductions of SO_2 occurred. That test, which involved a 570 megawatt tangentially-fired boiler, found that cofiring 1 percent to 3 percent gas could obtain SO_2 reductions or approximately 3 percent to 10 percent. Similarly, 6 percent to 12 percent cofiring could reduce NO_x by 10 percent to 15 percent.

Second, reburn technology is aimed at reducing powerplant NO_x emissions. It also involves using gas as a small portion of the boiler fuel, but unlike basic cofiring, reburn technology involves injecting that fuel into a zone beyond the primary combustion zone to create a natural gas rich "reburn" zone. Overfire air is added in a final burnout zone to complete the overall combustion process. In this reburn zone, much of the NO_x present is converted to elemental nitrogen. Pilot tests indicate that a majority of cyclone boilers could successfully apply this technology in order to reduce their NO_x emissions by approximately 60 percent. It is particularly significant that reburn technology is effective in reducing emissions from cyclone boilers, as no commercially demonstrated combustion modification technique exists for these boilers.

Third, gas reburn with sorbent injection refers to combining reburn techniques with the injection of dry calcium-based sorbent in the overfire air area of the boiler to reduce SO_2 emissions. This method of sorbent injections avoids the cost and complexity of other systems of sorbent injection, improves sorbent utilization, and reduces the amounts of sorbent required. Using 15 to 20 percent proportion of natural gas in a reburn/sorbent injection configuration can achieve the NO_x reductions cited above and also reduce SO_2 emissions by 50 percent.

The economics of using a particular natural gas cofiring technology at any given utility facility depend on various factors, including capacity, technical options, age of the plant, capacity factors, the sulfur content of the coal used, and the availability of gas.

One reason that cofiring is so promising is that the top 100 SO_2 emitting powerplants are an average of 5 miles from a natural gas pipeline, and sometimes are that close to two or more pipelines.

Mr. President, I made reference to the positive impact a successful cofiring technology could have on both the natural gas and coal industries if it is brought to the marketplace. We know that undoubtedly pending environmental legislation is going to impact today's utility industry and adversely affect employment in the high sulfur coal industry. That is the thrust of the President's program. We need to do all we can to minimize the economic dislocation a new regulatory regime would impose.

Cofiring could, in many instances, actually help protect certain mining jobs that might otherwise be in jeopardy.

Faced with the need to reduce emissions from existing plants, utilities can choose to install a scrubber, switch to low sulfur coal, or cofire. Undoubtedly, the scrubber option will preserve current coal industry employment patterns by allowing plants to continue using the current coal supplies. But for many plants, scrubber may be impractical—scrubbers economics will be less favorable for older and smaller plants. In other cases, plants may not have the physical space for a scrubber, or an operator may need to achieve NO_x reductions in addition to SO_2 reductions. In these instances, the choice is between fuel switching, plant output reductions, and cofiring. Given these alternatives, cofiring preserves jobs by allowing plants to remain in normal operation and use current coal supplies.

A significant number of plants could be in this situation. While it is difficult to determine with precision the thresholds beyond which scrubbing becomes impractical, there are 550 boilers units under 300 MW in size and over 30 years of age. These 550 plants burn 84 million tons of coal annually which, based on industry employment indices, would support the employment of 16,000 mine workers.

Thus the employment impacts of cofiring must be viewed in light of the alternatives facing the utility. In many cases, cofiring may be the least disruptive and most economic option and may preserve jobs that would otherwise be lost.

By generating additional demand for natural gas, cofiring would also help stimulate additional employment opportunites in the gas production sector. An economic impact study done at Southern Methodist University assessed the impact of higher natural gas production in Texas on employment. The study found a potential gain of 22,614 new jobs in Texas from an increase of just 379 Bcf of natural gas production. Based on this relationship, the employment growth resulting from expanded gas demand of 200 Bcf of 750 Bcf would be 12,000 to 45,000 jobs.

Natural gas cofiring is one of the most promising and cost-effective near-term clean fuel technologies, especially or retrofitting existing coal-fired boilers. As I noted, several demonstration projects are currently being funded through DOE's Clean Coal Program, but this option should be given a higher priority within the Department and encouraged in the marketplace.

Again, I am pleased to join with Senator BINGAMAN in supporting a new initiative into this promising area. I urge our colleagues in the Senate to join us in this worthwhile effort.●

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, and Mr. BOND):

S. 1741. A bill to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to increase competition among commercial air carriers at the Nation's major airports, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

AIRLINE COMPETITION ENHANCEMENT ACT

● Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, 11 years ago we deregulated the U.S. airline industry. Through the first few years deregulation worked as its promoters predicted: 215 new airlines were formed, prices were slashed, more Americans flew than ever before. Competition effectively replaced regulation to the consumers' benefit. However, over the last couple of years some disturbing trends have developed.

The industry has lost its early vitality. Only 59 of the 215 airlines remain in some form. The People Expresses and Frontiers have disappeared. The top eight airlines now control nearly 90 percent of the market, up from 78 percent at the time of deregulation. Recent studies by the General Accounting Office, the Department of Transportation, even the Air Transport Association show a direct correlation between increasing concentration at certain airports and higher fares. The evidence also indicates that concentrated markets have failed to move in the opposite direction.

I fear that we are entering, if we have not entered, a state of de facto reregulation. This is not the promise of deregulation. This will not result in long-term benefits to the consumer nor to the industry. We must find a way to reverse these trends. Today, together with the ranking member of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, I am introducing legislation designed to address what we consider to be the most egregious airline practices that are inhibiting competition.

The Commerce Committee's Aviation Subcommittee has held 3 days of hearings over the last year, at which we examined the findings of three GAO studies, one DOT study and part of another, as well as one industry study. The legislative recommendations we are making have been based on this exhaustive examination. Additionally, Aviation Subcommittee Chairman FORD has assured us that he will give this measure prompt and complete examination.

The first area the legislation addresses is computer reservation systems. There is virtual unanimity that something must be done in this area to restore the competitive balance. We believe the cleanest answer to this problem is to separate CRS's from airlines. Currently, $300 million is transferred from have-nots to haves by way of booking fees. Also, estimates range from 10 to 15 percent of the bookings on an airline owning one of the top CRS's come from the fact of this ownership, not from some competitive factor associated with the airline service.

In conjunction with the above, we proposed to outlaw code sharing. This is when two independent airlines share the same two-letter code on the CRS screen. This stifles competition at the regional level. One flying from across country to a rural town will believe they are flying the same airline when they are not. Because of code sharing they may not realize that competition exists from a hub to a particular spoke destination.

We also propose to remedy the oversight of the Deregulation Act that failed to lift the prohibition on FTC action in the airline field. Every other deregulated industry is subject to FTC oversight. The airlines should be no different.

The next section of the legislation would amend section 411 of the Federal Aviation Act. This is a little known and little used law which theoretically gives DOT the ability to police unfair competitive practices in the airline industry. We would strengthen that section. Besides CRS's, the area most discussed as needing action is access to the actual facilities at airports. This section would give airlines wishing to begin service at a particular airport the ability to crack concentrated hubs.

In conjunction with the above, the legislation calls for a new approach to slot-constrained airports. The GAO, when asked what they considered the number one problem in the industry, responded that it was access to slot-constrained airports. We would call on DOT to construct a new mechanism that would lease such slots in a more competitive fashion.

Finally, we would give the Secretary of Transportation the authority to waive the antihead tax law in limited circumstances. If an airport is concentrated and in need of new facilities, we want to give them flexibility to do so, consistent with our National Transportation Policy. This waiver is limited to capacity, security, and noise abatement.

I believe the facts are clear. Action is needed. This measure contains our view of what is appropriate. We welcome the views of all, there will be opportunity for expression. However, we must move forward.●

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, when Congress passed the Airline Deregulation Act, our intention was to substitute competition for regulation. We believed that vigorous competition would ensure consumers quality, low-priced service.

In the early years of deregulation it looked like we had made a good choice. We saw the creation of 215 new airlines. Many of those new airlines were aggressive, low-cost carriers that brought air fares down.

Mr. President, recently something has gone terribly awry with airline deregulation. Only 59 of those 215 new airlines have survived. Virtually all of the low-cost carriers, such as World, Capitol, Air Florida, Frontier, and People Express, have vanished.

My home State of Missouri presents two good examples of the problems with airline deregulation. In St. Louis, TWA has purchased its major competitor, Ozark, and has contructed a "fortress hub." It controls 81 percent of the gates and its share of boarding passengers has reached 82 percent. On the other hand, in Kansas City, Braniff Airlines, a medium-sized carrier, has just filed for reorganization under chapter 11 of the bankrupty laws. Its GEO, William McGee, explained that it could not compete with the mega carriers that have arisen since deregulation because of their marketing advantages, such as computer reservation systems, and their control of airport facilities and slots at capacity-controlled airports. Braniff's problems have had repercussions around the State. Service has been reduced or eliminated by Braniff and its commuter affiliates in Columbia, Joplin, Kirksville, and Springfield.

Missouri's airline passengers are facing problems that are shared by travelers across the country. Consumers are not getting the benefits that vigorous competition was supposed to provide.

Mr. President, these problems have arisen because airlines have been allowed to purchase their competitors. As a result, we now have eight mega carriers that control 90 percent of the U.S. air travel market. Moreover, airlines have changed the way in which they operate from linear patterns to hub-and-spoke systems. The dominant airlines have kept competition down at their hubs by using their control of terminal space, baggage carousels and gates to deter new entry. Finally, the marketing and pricing practices of the dominant airlines have greatly reduced the life expectancy of small- and medium-sized carriers.

Numerous studies requested by the Commerce Committee demonstrate that the concentration of the airline industry and the anticompetitive practices of the mega carriers are driving up air fares. The General Accounting Office [GAO] reported that at St. Louis, TWA was able to raise its prices three times higher than the average national fare increase in the year after it merged with Ozark. The GAO also reported that, at concentrated hub airports, dominant airlines received 27 percent higher average fares than airlines get at nonconcentrated airports. Further, it found that in 13 of 15 cases, the dominant airline at an airport is getting a higher average fare than the nondominant airlines operating out of those airports.

A Department of Transportation [DOT] study confirmed the results of the GAO's work. It found that between 1985 and 1988, fares at seven of nine concentrated airports surveyed rose at two to three times the 11-percent increase in the national average of air fares.

At the same time that dominant airlines have been growing and raising fares, new entrants and smaller competitors have been systematically eliminated. Through purchases or joint marketing arrangements the large carriers have obtained control 48 of the 50 largest regional airlines. The ability of smaller carriers to grow has been inhibited by the major carriers obtaining 20- to 40-year leases on gates at the busiest airports. A new airline must pay exorbitant fees to gain access to these gates. For example, in Detroit, Southwest Airlines pays Northwest Airlines $150 per flight to use a gate. This is 19 times what Northwest pays the airport authority for gate space. The former president of People Express, Harold J. Pareti, believes the mega airlines advantages are so great that starting a national carrier today is an impossible dream.

SOLUTIONS

Mr. President, we know what the problems are. At the Commerce Committee's urging, four reports have been done, three by GAO and one by DOT. Another DOT report is underway. The committee had 3 days of hearings on these reports. All the evidence points to the same conclusion. Concentration, anticompetitive practices and capacity limits are raising air fares. Given this knowledge, our mission is to breathe new life into fading airline competition. Today we are taking the first step by introducing the Airline Competition Enhancement Act of 1989. If enacted, the bill would eliminate barriers to entry and anticompetitive practices that are keeping airlines from providing the public quality air transportation at reasonable prices. Our proposal is divided into two parts. First, it would reduce the market power of dominant airlines by divestiture of computer reservation systems, eliminating code-sharing and providing avenues for challenges to dominant airlines' predatory pricing and stranglehold on airport facilities. Second, it would work to expand capacity by opening up slot-constrained airports and permitting the use of passenger facility charges to expand airports.

1. MARKET POWER CONTROLS.—DIVESTITURE OF COMPUTER RESERVATION SYSTEMS

Our bill would require the mega carriers to sell their computer reservation systems [CRS]. CRS's are used by travel agents to make 85 percent of airline reservations. DOT studies have found that travel agents favor CRS-owning airlines in booking flights. This is not surprising since CRS owners require travel agents to book a minimum number of their flights on the system. Moreover, the CRS-owning airline can out-maneuver its competitors because it updates its own fare and seat availability in the system more quickly than its competitors' information. CRS owners charge non-owner airlines a booking fee of about $2 a flight segment. This gives the CRS-owning airline an annual subsidy of $300 million from their competitors. If a fledgling airline attempts to create its own CRS, it finds that the travel agents have contracts that severely penalize them for switching from one CRS to another.

The mega airlines recognize the advantage a CRS gives them. Earlier this year, American Airlines attempted to sell an interest in its CRS to Delta Air Lines for half a billion dollars.

It is time to level the playing field. Our bill would require the CRS-owning airlines to sell their systems to nonairlines. This would eliminate favoritism resulting from "minimum use" requirements and penalties for switching from one airline's system to another. It would also keep CRS owners from accumulating a war chest from booking fees to fend off competitors.

ELIMINATING CODE-SHARING

Our bill would invigorate small and regional airline competition by eliminating code sharing. Under code sharing, a large airline shares its CRS two letter designation with a commuter airline. When a travel agent books a flight, the CRS shows the large carrier providing service from smaller communities to many destinations, although the display does not show that some travel takes place on commuter airlines.

This practice reduces competition in three ways. First, because travelers are led to believe that the flight takes place on a single airline, such arrangements make it more difficult for a new carrier to challenge an established carrier at its hub. Second, it reduces competition among small airlines. A commuter with a code-sharing arrangement gains an advantage over its rivals because it is fed passengers by the dominant airline. Finally, the small and regional airline sector used to be a fertile breeding ground for carriers that would grow to challenge big carriers in long haul markets. Now many of these small carriers opt for a cozy market division with their bigger code-sharing partners, rather than aggressively challenging them on longer routes.

By eliminating code sharing, our bill will give all commuters an equal chance to have their flights booked by a travel agent. Passengers will also know that they are flying a commuter for a leg of their flight.

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION AND ANTI-COMPETITIVE PRACTICES

Targeted pricing by dominant airlines has driven low-cost, fare-cutting airlines out of business and has kept others from expanding. For example, this summer, medium-sized Midway Airlines tried to challenge mega-carrier Northwest Airlines at its Milwaukee hub. Northwest responded by cutting prices at Midway's mini-hub at Chicago's Midway Airport and by skillfully using its CRS and fare management abilities to match Midway's low Milwaukee fares. Within 3 weeks, Midway called off its fare war.

Our bill would encourage challenges to dominant airlines by extending the Federal Trade Commission [FTC] Act prohibitions against unfair competition and unfair practices to the airline industry. Airlines are no longer regulated so the only way they are governed is through competition. They should play by the same antitrust laws as other industries. Applying the FTC Act to airlines will allow airlines who suspect they are the target of unfair pricing techniques to seek relief from the FTC. It would also enable them to challenge dominant carriers' control of terminal, gate and baggage handling facilities.

STRENGTHENING SECTION 411 OF THE FEDERAL AVIATION ACT (FAA ACT)

Section 411 of the FAA Act is a little used provision that gives the Secretary of Transportation authority to hear complaints by airlines and travel agents about unfair methods of competition or deceptive practices. Our bill would make it easier to bring a claim under this provision. It would create a presumption that a dominant airline at a hub had acted unfairly or deceptively if a complaint were filed against it. The Secretary would hear evidence and could issue a cease and desist order or go to Federal court and get an injunction to stop unfair practices. For example, a carrier could use this authority to challenge a dominant airline if it used a majority-in-interest clause in an anticompetitive way. These clauses give the big airlines power over airport expansion or improvements that would be funded by landing fees. Challenges might also be raised to long-term—20- to 40-year—exclusive leases for airport facilities and to dominate carriers' attempts to extract exorbitant fees for subleasing these facilities.

2. INCREASING AIRPORT CAPACITY—OPENING UP SLOTS

Slots are takeoff and landing rights at four important airports: Chicago O'Hare, Washington National, and Kennedy and LaGuardia in New York. According to GAO, slots affect air traffic around the whole country, because airlines want to reach slot-constrained airports from other points.

In 1985, we saw one of the great Government giveaways of all time when DOT gave airlines, without charge, the slots they were then holding. DOT allowed them to buy and sell these scarce rights, which have commanded prices of up to $1 million each. Even at this price, airlines have found that slots are too precious to be sold. During a 9-month period in 1986, there were 384 slot sales but during the first 9 months of 1988, there were only 61. Slot holders know that without a slot, no competitor can enter a market with one of these four airports as an end-point. Small or medium-sized airlines cannot afford slots and even if they could, those holding them will not sell.

Our bill would eliminate the buy-sell rule and recapture the windfall that was given the dominant airlines in 1985 by taking the slots back and auctioning them off. The proceeds of the auction would go for airport expansion, which will help eliminate capacity problems at overcrowded airports. Also, it would encourage new entry by giving entrants slot preferences and limiting the number of slots any airline can own.

PERMITTING PASSENGER FACILITY CHARGES [PFC'S] TO INCREASE CAPACITY

Mr. President, our bill would permit local airport authorities to assess PFC's. These charges on passengers using an airport were prohibited in 1973 because they were sometimes used for off-airport purposes. Instead, airport projects are bankrolled, in large part, by the Airport and Airways Trust Fund, which is funded by a Federal surcharge on airline tickets. That trust fund will not be sufficient to meet our aviation system's capacity needs. Among the needs that have been identified are: a $1 billion runway for Lambert Field in St. Louis; a $3.5 billion third airport for the Chicago area; a $1 billion Phoenix-Tucson jetport to relieve congestion in southern California; and Denver's new $2 billion airport. These needs are over and above an estimated $30 billion in airport capacity needs that will occur during the next 5 years.

Our proposal would give the Secretary of Transportation the ability to allow airport authorities to impose PFC's to meet these expansion needs. The Secretary would serve as an impartial arbiter to decide whether an airport's proposed charge and improvements were in the interest of aviation consumers and whether it was consistent with our national transportation policy.

Airports need the power to expand because capacity is critical to increasing competition in the airline industry. New entrants need ground facilities to successfully operate at a hub airport.

CONCLUSION

Eleven years ago, we had a vision that through deregulation we could create a competitive air transportation system. Today, many Americans are not reaping deregulation's benefits because competition has been trampled by predatory marketing practices and airport capacity limits.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this proposal to ensure vigorous airline competition that will provide travelers the quality, low-priced service they deserve.●

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 1742. A bill to further the goals of the Paperwork Reduction Act and provide for comprehensive information resources management of Federal departments and agencies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL INFORMATION RESOURCES MANAGEMENT ACT

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce an important and timely bill, the Federal Information Resources Management Act of 1989. This legislation is designed to reduce the burden of duplicative government paperwork for businesses, educational institutions, and individuals; to improve the information infrastructure and statistical database of the Federal government; to set a national information resources management policy, including the improvement of public access to government information; and to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office of Management and Budget's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs [OIRA].

These issues were addressed in hearings held before the Subcommittee on Government Information and Regulation. The bill reflects the many recommendations and ideas developed from the hearings, as well as in extensive meetings with such interested parties as: the Office of Management and Budget and agency officials, the General Accounting Office, congressional staff, the business community, statisticians, scholars, librarians, and the public interest community.

I. STRENGTHENS PAPERWORK REDUCTION EFFORTS

First, the bill reauthorizes the Paperwork Reduction Act with emphasis on its original intent and purposes and increases efforts to reduce duplicative Federal information collection and minimize paperwork burden on the public.

The final report of the 1977 study by the Commission on Federal Paperwork reported that "the total cost of Federal Paperwork is huge . . . it may exceed $100 billion a year." More than a decade later, despite the significant effort to reduce paperwork burden, such burden has continued to increase. A recent report by the General Accounting Office [GAO] concludes that there has been little actual burden reduction in recent years. One business group estimates that American businesses now spend approximately 8.2 billion hours at a cost of $330 billion (7.3 percent of our GNP) each year responding to Federal paperwork requests.

It is clear that the Office of Management and Budget and Federal agencies must do more to attack the continuing growth of excessive or duplicative paperwork, and to reduce the burden of such paperwork on individuals, businesses, educational institutions, State and local government, and others. Simultaneously, information collection policy must serve the important purpose of creating an accurate, timely, and valuable Federal database.

The importance of a strong and ongoing government-wide effort to reduce the burden of unnecessary government paperwork cannot be overstated. A renewed and unified effort by the Congress, the executive branch, and Federal agencies is required to attack the mountain of paperwork faced by businesses, university researchers, and other individuals.

To continue the task of minimizing the paperwork burden, this legislation reauthorizes the existing Federal information collection review provisions of law and continues the overall reduction goal of reducing paperwork by 5 percent each year.

The bill also requires OIRA to identify initiatives to reduce paperwork burdens associated with individuals, business, educational institutions, State and local governments especially with respect to procurement and Federal grant programs. A report to Congress is required which specifically addresses the impact of burden reduction programs for those most heavily burdened.

The bill reinforces the requirements that agency information collections are necessary for the proper performance of an agency's functions, are not duplicative of information reasonably accessible to the agency, have practical utility, are written using plain and unambiguous terminology and are understandable to those who are to respond, and explain the need and ultimate use of the information to be collected, and the importance of an accurate and timely response.

II. STRENGTHENS RESOURCES MANAGEMENT

Second, the bill strengthens the information infrastructure and statistical database of the Federal Government, including improving agency capabilities and public access to Government information.

The proper functioning of the Federal Government requires accurate and timely information for decisionmaking at all levels. Federal information resources benefit Government and the public, and require sound management of information collection, archiving, dissemination, protection of security and privacy, and more. In an era of rapid technological advances more needs to be done by OMB to coordinate Government information policy. Moreover, we need to articulate a national information policy that helps to preserve and improve our information infrastructure.

The bill sets a national information resources management policy, which serves to integrate all information functions within a life-cycle management system in Federal agencies. The bill will strengthen information resources management in Federal agencies, establish stronger leadership and policy guidance from the Office of Management and Budget, and improve the level and participation by the public in the development and implementation of information policy.

Government information must be recognized as a valuable and useful resource to Government and society. As such, it must be managed in a coordinated and systematic manner based on established principles for information resources management. OIRA, in conjunction with other Government entities with centralized information management responsibilities, must take leadership in developing coherent information policy which gives balanced and needed emphasis to all information functions. Federal agencies must establish parallel, but independent, information resources management programs.

To establish the positive position of information, this legislation creates a new purpose which emphasizes public benefit, quality, and use of Government information as important priorities.

To promote the concept of information resources management as an integrating principle, the bill creates a new definition for "managing information resources" emphasizing a comprehensive life-cycle approach to information policy development. The legislation also requires the OIRA Administrator to give balanced and needed emphasis to all major information policy functions and to coordinate information policy with other central information agencies as well as encourages OIRA to devote significantly more of its limited resources to functions required under this law—for example, statistical policy, privacy, information technology—which have been neglected in the past.

The bill increases the responsibility of the OIRA Administrator in the area of statistical policy in order to strengthen the leadership and coordination of our decentralized statistical system. Specifically, there is a new overall leadership role, a new international coordination role, and an emphasis on dissemination of statistics to the public.

The bill also establishes interagency working groups to strengthen information policy coordination as part of OIRA's information policy functions. These working groups are charged with coordinating both the development and the implementation of information policy. A specific statistical policy interagency working group is also required, to be headed by the chief statistician and including at least the heads of the major statistical agencies. This working group is charged with coordinating all of OIRA's statistical functions.

III. REAFFIRMS OIRA RESPONSIBILITY FOR POLICY GUIDANCE

Third, the bill improves the efficiency and effectiveness of the Office of Management and Budget's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs [OIRA] in carrying out all its responsibility under this law.

OIRA's responsibility for agency information activities is to ensure that they are well run, not to run them. OIRA's relationship to Federal agencies must be structured to provide policy guidance, not day-to-day approval or disapproval of agency information activities. Federal information resources management capabilities must be strengthened, and agencies must take greater responsibility for fulfilling the full range of information functions.

In this regard, the legislation requires OIRA to develop policy, guidance, and stardards to provide direction to agencies and to ensure the development of formalized training programs in information resources mangement concepts for OMB staff and agency officials. The bill clearly emphasizes OIRA's responsibilities to provide guidance, not operational authority, for agency information activities.

The bill also strengthens agency responsibility and accountability in all areas of information resources management. Each agency head is directed to appoint a career chief information resources management official with appropriate credentials, and each agency is required to establish an agency-wide IRM program, to provide formalized training programs for agency officials, and to integrate IRM programs and agency activities.

Importantly, the bill creates a self-certification of continuing information collection activities by Federal agencies which is designed to shift OMB's resources away from "routine, reoccuring, and regular" information collection approval, and to encourage agencies to assume responsibility for the quality and necessity of information programs. This applies only to ongoing information collections which currently have to be submitted at the end of every 3 years for reapproval—and which OMB argues is a time consuming rubber stamping function. The new provision retains OMB's authority to conduct a reapproval on request.

IV. ESTABLISHES A COMMISSION ON FEDERAL INFORMATION

Mr. President, one of the tasks we seek to accomplish in this bill is to improve the quality of Federal information, especially statistical information. To this end, the bill establishes a Commission on Federal Information to look at the broad question of the health of the Federal information, including statistical, system. The functions of the Commission are to look at the contribution of information to economic and social welfare and to competitiveness, to identify long-term information needs, to identify gaps and other problems in the current system especially with respect to quality, timeliness and relevancy, to set priorities for information in light of changes in the economy and society, and to look at how better to organize the information system for better coordination and to ensure that the system is capable of keeping up with changes in the economy and society. In part, these functions represent an update of the 1970 President's Commission on Federal Statistics.

The structure of the Commission is patterend after the Federal Paperwork Commission. Membership includes two Senators (from different parties), two Representatives (from different parties), the OMB Director, two other Federal officials, two representatives of State and local government, and 7 members of the public. Except for the Members of Congress and the OMB Director, the appointments are by the President. The Commission must report back its findings to Congress by July 1991, before authorization for OIRA expires.

That our Federal statistical system is in need of an overhaul is clear. One example of the problem is our economic statistics. Earlier this year, I asked the Office of Technology Assessment to look into the question of the adequacy of our economic statistics, especially in light of the ongoing changes in the United States and global economies. Their report, "Statistical Needs for a Changing U.S. Economy" demonstrates how staggering defects in the existing statistical system can hinder the understanding of key economic issues. It also highlights the ways in which better management and coordination of existing statistical agencies can lead to improvements in the quality of the data.

The report points out that the problem with data stems from the dynamic nature of our economy. Although U.S. statistics are very good, the domestic economy is changing so rapidly and in so many different directions that keeping track of our statistical needs is becoming more and more difficult.

Recently, an example came to my attention of how outdated statistics can lead to distorted policy analysis. As many of my colleagues are aware, Congress and the administration are currently debating the issue of voluntary restraint agreements [VRA's] on steel imports. In May of this year, the U.S. International Trade Commission [ITC] published a study on the effects of such VRA's on steel users. However, the ITC's analysis was based on the 1977 input-output table of the U.S. economy instead of the 1982 version which indicates that steel input required in many manufacturing processes has declined significantly. Thus, according to a Congressional Research Service report:

> The USITC utilized information for its efforts that may have been valid in the 1970's but not for the mid-1980's. The use of the 1977 input-output table could result in a substantial overstatement of the effects of the VRAs on the U.S. economy.

Another example is the increasing number of significant revisions to many of our basic economic statistics. For example, the number of new jobs created was drastically revised in April, in May, and then again in June. May's figures for retail sales were revised from a preliminary announcement of a decline to a healthy growth. June's data for new orders for durable goods was also significantly revised as was the third quarter's GNP data. While revisions are a normal part of updating statistics, these examples are of such a magnitude that they call into question their basic soundness. We must have accurate data for decision making by both business and government. Important policy decisions of the Federal Reserve Bank and investment and production decisions of industry are determined by this data. Such large revisions undermine our ability to make these decisions correctly.

As these examples point out the United States needs good statistics in order to have good economic policy. To quote the OTA report:

> It is clear, however, that the price paid for public policy mistakes that stem from defects in national statistics can be many times higher than the entire national statistical budget.

The Commission on Federal Information created in this legislation will move us one step closer to resolving these problems and stengthening our statistical system.

V. INCREASES PUBLIC PARTICIPATION AND OIRA ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. President, the record of the past 8 years shows that there is a need to increase public participation in, and improve the accountability of, OIRA and Federal agency decision making.

This legislation strengthens OIRA accountability by requiring OIRA to maintain a public record of any information collection or regulatory review, which includes a written justification of any OIRA denial, disapproval or modification and by requiring that OIRA provide agencies with written materials sent to OMB and a summary of oral communications involving nongovernmental representatives regarding a rulemaking activity and that OIRA invite agency heads to all scheduled meetings with nongovernmental representatives.

The bill also limits ex-parte communication by OIRA officials on regulatory review activity with nongovernmental representatives to OIRA Administrator and Deputy Director, and limits OIRA regulatory review to 30 days for nonmajor rules and to 90 days for major rules with an allowable 30-day extension if required.

To increase public participation, the bill strengthens consultation and creates advisory committees on information policy and committee on statistical policy, as discussed earlier. The bill also reorients the Federal Information Locator System [FILS] so that it can better serve as a tool for agencies and the public in the information collection process and requires OIRA to develop a plan to create a system to help the public find Federal information dissemination products and services.

VI. STRENGTHENS FEDERAL LEADERSHIP AND OVERSIGHT

Mr. President, no matter how we design this piece of legislation, there is no effective substitute for strong leadership, management, guidance, and oversight to ensure that the goals of this Act are met. Both the Congress and the executive branch must provide greater leadership and guidance, and conduct vigorous oversight.

To strengthen that leadership, this legislation gives responsibility and authority for functions of OIRA directly to the OIRA Administrator, which was made a confirmable position in 1986. The OMB Director still specifically retains overall responsibility for OIRA activity, but this forces the Administrator to assume responsibility for expenditures and fulfillment of OIRA functions under law.

The bill requires professional credentials of the Administrator to be related to the enumerated functions of OIRA in the law. Especially in light of forthcoming vacancy at OIRA, this changes stresses the need for an Administrator who can fulfill the information policy functions and management needs of OIRA. It also seeks the selection of an OIRA Administrator who is driven by the functions of OIRA as stated in law, and not other activities chosen by the White House.

The bill creates a separate budget line item for OIRA which will establish stronger congressional oversight and accountability of OIRA. This will allow Congress to better monitor the resources spent on the function required under this law. Importantly, during off-reauthorization years, this will result in an annual appearance by OIRA before Congress.

The bill also requires a review by the GAO to measure OIRA effectiveness in carrying out its responsibilities under the Act.

Finally, the bill reauthorizes the legislation for a two year period in order to strengthen congressional oversight. Frankly, Mr. President, I view this period as a time of change in the operation of this Act. We are asking OIRA to try to do things differently than they have in the past. A 2-year reauthorization will give us a chance to come back in a reasonable period of time to see how things are going.

VIII. CONCLUSION

In closing, let me just state that I believe that the Federal Information Resources Management Act of 1989 is the necessary instrument for achieving the important goals laid out in the original Paperwork Reduction Act. I urge my colleagues to look carefully at this legislation.●

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the following bill be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1743

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Interbrand Competition Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. APPLICATION OF ANTITRUST LAWS TO LIMITATION ON DISTRIBUTION OF PRODUCTS FOR RESALE.

(a) LAWFULNESS OF CERTAIN DISTRIBUTION LIMITATIONS.—Except as provided in subsection (b), it shall not be unlawful under the antitrust laws for any manufacturer, importer, trademark owner, or trademark licensee of a trademarked product and for any wholesale distributor of a trademarked product to agree, or to carry out a provision in a contract which provides, that such wholesale distributor shall—

(1) have the sole and exclusive right to distribute and to sell such trademarked product in any defined geographical area within any State, and

(2) be limited to the distribution and sale, directly or indirectly, of such trademarked product only for ultimate resale to consumers within that defined geographical area,

When such trademarked product is in substantial and effective competition with other products within the relevant market or markets.

(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to affect any liability under any of the antitrust laws arising from any price-fixing agreement, horizontal restraint of trade, or group boycott if such agreement, restraint, or boycott would otherwise be unlawful.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of the Act—

(1) the term "antitrust laws" has the meaning given it in subsection (a) of the first section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12(a)), except that such term includes section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 45) to the extent that such section 5 relates to unfair methods of competition,

(2) the term "State" has the meaning given it in section 4G of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15g).

SEC. 4. APPLICATION OF ACT.

This Act shall not invalidate or affect any provision of the laws of any State.●

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 1746. A bill to initiate actions under section 310 of the Trade Act of 1974 with respect to agricultural trade barriers, and to extend and initiate the triggered marketing loan program or an expanded export enhancement program, of an international trade agreement under the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade is not submitted to Congress by February 15, 1991, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

AGRICULTURAL TRADE ACT

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Agricultural Trade Act of 1990 on behalf of myself and Senator BOREN.

Agriculture has been the United States' most consistent export performer. The United States has consistently run a substantial annual trade surplus in agricultural products. In 1988, the United States exported 35.3 billion dollars' worth of agricultural products. One in every three acres of America's cropland raises crops for export. America exports about 75 percent of its wheat and 40 percent of its soybean crop as well as substantial amounts of beef, corn, rice, cotton, and many other agricultural products. Continued strong agricultural exports are essential if America is to eliminate its mammoth trade deficit.

But the United States could be exporting far more if U.S. agricultural exports were not blocked by foreign trade barriers and forced to face subsidized competition. The National Trade Estimate—the annual U.S. Government listing of foreign trade barriers—spent many pages listing foreign trade barriers that block U.S. agricultural exports. The European Community maintains an extensive series of barriers, including variable levies, production subsidies, and export subsidies. If all the barriers were removed, the U.S. Trade Representative's Office has estimated that the U.S. trade balance would improve by $7 billion. On top of these barriers, the EC recently imposed a ban on U.S. meat exports under the guise of a health and safety restriction. Japan has begun to liberalize its agriculture markets, but still maintains extensive restrictions on agricultural products ranging from rice to feed grains. Korea still maintains a virtual ban on beef imports. Taiwan restricts import of many agricultural products with import licensees. Unfortunately, this list could literally go on and on.

This is not to say that the United States is without sin, but compared to other major developed nations the United States is a free trader. A recent OECD study concluded that taxpayers and consumers in the EC spend $75 billion annually subsidizing agriculture, Japan spends $50 billion, while the United States spends only about $20 billion. An earlier OECD study concluded that United States protection in the agricultural sector was lower across the board than protection in the EC and Japan. Furthermore, many of the U.S. trade practices that our trading partners complain about—such as the Export Enhancement Program [EEP]—were implemented only to counter our trading partners unfair trade practices.

Given this state of affairs, the United States decision to make liberalization of agricultural markets the top priority in the Uruguay Round of GATT talks is a sensible one. Unfortunately, some of our trading partners have not supported our efforts. The EC has drug its feet in the negotiations and Japan has resisted import liberalization.

To support the efforts of our negotiators in Geneva, the Congress should make it clear that the United States will press for agricultural liberalization unilaterally if the GATT Round breaks down. Therefore, I am today introducing legislation—the Agricultural Trade Act of 1990—that will take effect if the GATT negotiations do not yield an agreement that meets United States objectives by the scheduled conclusion of the Uruguay Round.

SUMMARY

If legislation to implement a GATT Agreement that meets U.S. objectives on agricultural trade as specified in the 1988 Trade Act is not submitted to Congress by February 15, 1991, then:

(1) The U.S. Trade Representative is directed to identify the major foreign barriers to U.S. agricultural exports and initiate section 301 investigations under the Omnibus Trade Act of 1988 to eliminate them;

(2) The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to implement a marketing loan or across the board export enhancement program on all major agricultural commodities. (This provision is essentially a straight extension of the Triggered Marketing Loan provision of the 1988 Trade Act which expires on January 1, 1990 if the President certifies that adequate progress is being made in the negotiations. The provision is not intended to waive the requirement that the administration make a certification that the negotiations are proceeding or implement a marketing loan or EEP by January, 1990. Rather, it creates an additional decision point on February 15, 1991.)

This legislation sends a message to all nations that the United States is serious about opening world agricultural markets. It also charts a course that the United States will pursue to protect its interests if the Uruguay Round breaks down. I plan to work to make this legislation a part of the 1990 farm bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from various agricultural groups on this topic, and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1746

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ACTION TO BE TAKEN IF AGRICULTURAL AGREEMENT NOT IMPLEMENTED.

If a draft of a bill implementing a multilateral agreement entered into under section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (19 U.S.C. 2902) as part of the Uruguay round of negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that meets the objectives of the United States regarding agricultural trade which are described in section 1101(b)(7) of such Act (including health and safety issues, export subsidies, and import barriers) is not submitted by the President to the Congress before Febraury 15, 1991—

(1) the United States Trade Representative shall submit an additional report under section 310(a)(1)(D) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2420(a)(1)(D)) by no later than May 31, 1991, that—

(A) limits the identification of priority practices under section 310(a)(1)(A) of the Trade Act of 1974 to major trade barriers and trade distorting practices, the elimination of which are likely to have the most significant potential to increase United States exports of agricultural products.

(B) limits the identification of priority foreign countries to those foreign countries that satisfy the criteria described in section 310(a)(2) of the Trade Act of 1974 with repect to exports of United States agricultural products and

(C) limits the estimate described in section 310(a)(1)(C) of the Trade Act of 1974 to consideration only of increases in exports of United States agricultural products, and

(C) the President shall instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to implement a marketing loan program in accordance with section 4301(b) of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-418; 7 U.S.C. 1446 note), or if the President waives or discontinues such program, an export enhancement program in accordance with section 4301(c) of such Act.

SEC. 2. TRIGGERED MARKETING LOANS AND EXPORT ENHANCEMENT.

Section 4301 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-418; 7 U.S.C. 1446 note) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking "(a) CERTIFICATION.—" and all that follows through "such date—" and inserting the following:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(1) if, before January 1, 1990, a law has not been enacted in accordance with section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2191) that implements an agreement negotiated under the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations conducted under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (hereinafter in this section referred to as 'GATT negotiations') concerning agricultural trade, the President; and

"(2) if before February 15, 1991, a draft of a bill implementing a multilateral agreement entered into under section 1102 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988 (19 U.S.C. 2902) as part of the Uruguay round of negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (hereinafter in this section referred to as 'GATT negotiations') that meets the objectives of the United States regarding agricultural trade that are described in section 1101(b)(7) of such Act (including health and safety issues, export subsidies, and import barriers) is not submitted by the President to Congress, the President; not later than 45 days after such date—";

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B); and

(C) by striking subparagraph (C) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B)) and inserting the following new subparagraph:

"(B) shall instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to implement a marketing loan program in accordance with subsection (b), or if the President waives or discontinues such program, an export enhancement program in accordance with subsection (c).";

(2) in subsection (b), by striking paragraph (1) and inserting the following new paragraph:

"(1) IMPLEMENTATION.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), if a draft of a bill is not submitted by the President to Congress in accordance with subsection (a), the President shall, not later than 60 days before the beginning of the marketing year for the 1991 crop of wheat, instruct the Secretary of Agriculture to permit producers to repay loans made under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) for each of the 1991 crops of wheat, feed grains, and soybeans at a level that is the lesser of—

"(A) the loan level determined for each such crop; or

"(B) the prevailing world market price for each such crop, as determined by the Secretary."; and

(3) in subsection (c)(1), by striking "1990 through 1992 fiscal years" and inserting "1991 through 1993 fiscal years".

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WHEAT GROWERS,
Washington, DC, September 29, 1989.

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BAUCUS: If the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is to be successful, the European Community, the Japanese and others must bargain in good faith on the liberalization of agricultural trade. Negotiators must promote broad and general trade reform. There must be an absolute, "level playing field" for agricultural trade.

All nations involved in the GATT process, and those standing on the sidelines as observers, need to understand the U.S. Congress remains strongly committed to providing U.S. agriculture access to all markets. The Agricultural Trade Act of 1990 demonstrates this commitment.

We, the undersigned U.S. commodity groups, support the efforts of the U.S. GATT negotiators. Our trading partners were put on notice early that the United States viewed agricultural trade liberalization as a top priority. As the Uruguay Round reaches its final critical months, there should be no doubt about the determination of the Congress, the Administration and American agriculture to see that liberalization in international agricultural trade is achieved.

Sincerely,
American Soybean Association.
Rice Millers' Association.
National Association of Wheat Growers.
National Corn Growers Association.
North American Export Grain Association.●

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I join the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] in introducing this important legislation—the Agricultural Trade Act of 1990. Senator BAUCUS is recognized as a Senate leader on trade issues and I truly appreciate his leadership.

Agriculture is a vital part of the United States' position in the international economy. In an era of record overall trade deficits, U.S. agricultural trade has continuously resulted in a trade surplus. Last year, American agriculture exported over 35 billion dollars' worth of food and fiber products, an increase of more than $8 billion over 1987 levels.

Foreign markets are especially important to the agriculture industry in my home State of Oklahoma. Over 70 percent of Oklahoma's hard red winter wheat crop is exported. These sales generate well over $200 million for the economy of my State.

However, American agriculture could potentially sell much more in overseas markets. Foreign trade barriers and heavy export subsidies have impeded the growth of U.S. overseas sales. I have always maintained that the American farmer can compete with any foreign farmer in the world. However, U.S. farmers are continuously asked to compete with foreign governments—especially European and Asian governments whose taxpayers pay many times more in relative support for domestic farm programs than does the U.S. taxpayer.

Mr. President, this bill seeks to encourage agricultural trade reform, a top priority for the United States during the current round of GATT talks. If our competitors do not commit to real reforms during the GATT process, this bill will trigger two actions that will strengthen our agricultural trade position. First, this bill will require the U.S. Trade Representative to identify the major foreign barriers to U.S. agricultural products and initiate section 301 investigations to eliminate them. Second, the Secretary of Agriculture would be required to expand the use of the Export Enhancement Program or to implement marketing loans for all major commodities.

In short, this bill sends a two-part message to our competitors. First, we will not continue to tolerate foreign trade barriers, even if they are disguised as health and safety concerns. Second, we will beat them at their own game of heavy export subsidies if they are not willing to refrain from such practices.

I hope our colleagues will join us in sending this message by supporting this legislation.●

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S.J. Res. 214. Joint resolution to express the sense of the Congress regarding the removal of offensive sexual material from television broadcasting; to the Committee on the Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

REMOVAL OF OFFENSIVE SEXUAL MATERIAL FROM TELEVISION BROADCASTING

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce along with my distinguished colleague from Arizona, Senator DECONCINI, a joint resolution to express the sense of the Congress regarding the removal of offensive sexual material from television broadcasting.

It is readily apparent that through thinly veiled innuendo or with unbridled candor, sexually explicit material is growing by leaps and bounds on network television. I have received calls and letters from many citizens who feel the networks have pushed much of its programming beyond that which a reasonable viewing audience would find respectable as family entertainment.

Why have the standards changed so rapidly? Why have the boundaries shifted drastically with regard to what the networks find as suitable broadcast material? I believe there are several reasons for increased broadcasting of sexually explicit material.

DISMANTLING OF NETWORK CENSORS

It is widely acknowledged that the three major networks have reduced or eliminated their standards and practices departments. These departments within the networks have traditionally reviewed programming for objectionable material prior to broadcasting. Last November, Newsweek reported that the standards and practices at CBS and NBC no longer exists as a separate department within these networks. Also, ABC has made deep cuts in the standards and practices department.

Heretofore, the standards and practices departments served to defend audience sensibilities. The composition of the broadcast audience was given due consideration with regard to programming content. Over the years, objectionable material has increased dramatically and has crept into our homes through television. Unfortunately, much of this type of programming is viewed as commonplace.

Too many TV programs portray a casual image of sexual activity which would earlier not have been considered suitable for broadcast.

However, recently there have been individuals and vigilant citizens' groups who are demanding more responsible broadcasting. They are writing producers and sponsors as well as organizing product boycotts to make their views known.

ADVERTISING

One minute to advertising on a prime time television program costs about $375,000 for the sponsor. Companies that can afford to advertise on television want to reach the largest possible number of potential customers. Also, the networks are eager to produce programs that attract a large viewing audience to entice a potential sponsor. For whatever reason, risque programming tends to produce higher ratings and, of course, this is a prime concern for sponsors with a limited number of advertising dollars.

Yet, what we may be seeing now is that television producers are offending and alienating more viewers than they attract. Again, this revulsion to offensive programming could be attributed to parents, individuals, and citizens' groups who have reached their tolerance level for objectionable TV shows.

COMPETITION

It has not been too long ago that the major networks were in competition solely among themselves. But with the advent of cable television, pay television, and VCR's, the landscape of broadcast television has been forever changed. Competition for audience share is ferocious among the players in broadcast medium. The three major networks are now in the unfortunate position of competing with cable television, music videos', independent stations, and movie rentals which offer a wide variety of programming.

This type of environment is much of the reason networks choose to air more explicit programs on network television. Lorne Michaels, the well-known executive producer of "Saturday Night Live"—one of the racier late night programs—was quoted earlier this year as saying, "My competition isn't the 'Late Show' anymore, its cable and VCR's."

Mr. President, I believe that quote gives a good indication that the networks are under a great deal of pressure to appeal by aggressive means to a large viewing audience. All too often, their response is to air programs with sexually explicit material.

The above reasons are what I believe to be the primary causes for much of the objectionable material which is being broadcast today. However, I believe there is a quiet majority across our country who have witnessed and been offended at the casual and cavalier manner in which sexual activity is portrayed on network television. What message is this image sending to our young children? Are American teenagers to believe that network television sets the standard for determining proper behavior and if they do not conform then they are an oddity? I sincerely hope that is not the case. Yet, we continue to see an unfortunate downward spiral in television programming.

I encourage all of my colleagues to join us in swiftly passing this joint resolution which would express the sense of the Congress that sexually offensive material should be removed from television. We have an opportunity to send a clear message to the networks that public officials representing families all across America want to see more responsible programming. Television is a prevalent fixture in almost every home in America and this body should be on record that boundaries must be drawn as to what is acceptable for network television.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 214

Whereas the physical attributes of the broadcast medium are such that it is reasonable to assume that minors are likely to be in the broadcast audience during most of the broadcast day; and

Whereas, based on contemporary community standards, there is concern over a growing number of television broadcast programs which at times constitute indecency; and

Whereas there are instances in network broadcast television programming which involve the depiction of sexual activity directly or by inuendo which is patently offensive under contemporary community standards; and

Whereas broadcast television programs that depict sexual matters in ways which are obscene, indecent, or profane erode our sense of traditional American values; and

Whereas the three major networks have reduced or eliminated their "Standards and Practices" departments which have traditionally reviewed programming for objectionable material: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is the sense of the Congress that the television networks and producers should increase their activity to monitor and remove offensive sexual material from their television broadcast programming.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleague and friend from South Carolina in a resolution to encourage television networks and producers to remove offensive sexual material from television programming.

More and more, networks are forced to compete with new entertainment mediums such as subscription cable channels and video cassette recorders for viewer attention. Faced with dwindling audiences, television networks are responding with bolder language and explicit sexual materials. These materials are not reserved for adults, who may have developed a sense of self-regulation, but are viewed at prime time when impressionable children are most likely to be in front of the set.

When the public complains of this situation, the networks answer that they do not possess the financial resources to retain an in-house monitor—known in the industry as a Standards and Practices department. Networks have significantly cut back in this area. Without a standards department, the networks must rely on a show's producers to screen out questionable material. Clearly, self-policing does not work. In the past television season, a viewer could witness sexual bondage, rape, and sadomasochistic acts.

Television sets are in virtually every American home. The television industry has a unique role in shaping the shared values of our society and culture. Our children log thousands of hours of television viewing time each year. For many children, TV is the greatest singular influence, replacing traditional role models of extended family, school, and church. We must be more cautious of the message we are sending to children of how men and women relate to each other in their personal and sexual lives. Television producers and executives have an ethical responsibility to present decent television fare. We here today share this responsibility.

American viewers are not passive observers. I have received many calls and letters from citizens who are justifiably outraged by these trends in television programming. I urge my colleagues to join us in passing this resolution.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

SENATE RESOLUTION 192—RELATIVE TO TESTIMONY BY SENATE EMPLOYEES

Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 192

Whereas, in the case of United States v. Jorge Artalego, Crim. No. M-7121-89, pending in the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, the United States Attorney has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of Frances Murrah, and counsel for the defendant has obtained subpoenas for the testimony of Melissa Ferring and Erin Mewhirter, employees of the Senate on the personal office staff of Senator Lloyd Bentsen;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that the testimony of employees of the Senate may be needed in any court for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges and rights of the Senate;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§ 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2)(1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent employees of the Senate with respect to any subpoena or order directed to them in their official capacity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Frances Murrah, Melissa Ferring, and Erin Mewhirter are authorized to testify in the case of United States v. Jorge Artalego, except concerning matters for which a privilege should be asserted.

SEC. 2. That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Frances Murrah, Melissa Ferring, and Erin Mewhirter, and any other staff assistant of Senator Bentsen who may be subpoenaed to testify in the case of United States v. Jorge Artalego.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

REPEAL OF MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE PROVISIONS

KENNEDY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 985

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. KERRY) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1726) to repeal Medicare catastrophic coverage provisions effective in years after 1989 and the supplemental Medicare premium, and for other purposes, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989".

TITLE I—PROVISIONS RELATING TO PART A OF MEDICARE PROGRAM AND SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM

SEC. 101. REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM AND FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 111 and 112 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act (hereafter in this Act referred to as "MCCA") are repealed and the provisions of law amended by such sections are restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) DELAY IN STUDY DEADLINE.—Section 113(c) of MCCA is amended by striking "November 30, 1988" and inserting "May 31, 1990".

(c) DISPOSAL OF FUNDS IN FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.—Any balance in the Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund (created under section 1817A(a) of the Social Security Act, as inserted by section 112(a) of MCCA) as of January 1, 1990, shall be transferred into the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and any amounts payable due to overpayments into such Trust Fund shall be payable from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 201(i)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(i)(1)) is amended by striking "Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund,".

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990.

(2) REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM.—The repeal of section 111 of MCCA shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

SEC. 102. REVISION OF EXPANSION OF MEDICARE PART A BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), sections 101, 102, and 104(d) (other than paragraphs (2)(C) and (7)) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-360) (in this Act referred to as "MCCA") are repealed, and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such section had not been enacted.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES.—

(A) The repeal of section 101(1) shall not apply insofar as such section amended paragraph (1) of section 1812(a) of the Social Security Act (relating to inpatient hospital services).

(B) The repeal of section 102(1) of MCCA shall not apply insofar as such section amended paragraph (1) of section 1813(a) of the Social Security Act (relating to the inpatient hospital deductible).

(3) EXCEPTION OF BLOOD DEDUCTION.—The repeal of section 102(1) of MCCA shall not apply insofar as such section amended paragraph (2) of section 1813(a) of the Social Security Act (relating to a deduction for blood).

(4) EXCEPTION FOR HOSPICE BENEFIT CHANGES.—The repeal of section 101 of MCCA shall not apply insofar as such section—

(A) amended paragraph (4) of subsection (a) of section 1812 of the Social Security Act (relating to hospice care benefits), and

(B) amended subsection (d) of such section (relating to a subsequent extension period of an election).

(b) TRANSITIONS FOR EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.—

(1) In the case of an individual who on December 31, 1989, is receiving extended care services for which payment may be made under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, this Act shall not apply to the provision of extended care services under such part during a continuous period of stay in 1990, but—

(A) the number of days of coverage under this subsection shall not exceed 150 less the number of days for which benefits for extended care services were payable under such for the individual in 1989, and

(B) coinsurance shall be applicable under section 1813(a)(3) of such Act only for those days (if any) in 1990 before the 9th day in which the individual was furnished extended care services in 1989 and 1990.

(2) In applying sections 1812 and 1813 of the Social Security Act, as restored by subsection (a)(1), with respect to extended care services provided on or after January 1, 1990, except as may be provided under paragraph (1)—

(A) no day before January 1, 1990, shall be counted in determining the beginning (or period) of a spell of illness; and

(B) the limitation of coverage of extended care services to post-hospital extended care services shall not apply to an individual receiving such services from a skilled nursing facility during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, until the end of the period of 30 consecutive days in which the individual is not provided inpatient hospital services or extended care services.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendments made by subsection (c) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

TITLE II—PROVISIONS RELATING TO PART B OF THE MEDICARE PROGRAM

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1990.

SEC. 302. REVISION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS; OTHER AMENDMENTS RELATING TO MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT.

(a) REVISION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS.—

(1) Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss), as amended by section 221(d) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, is amended—

(A) in the third sentence of subsection (a) and in subsection (b)(1), by striking "subsection (k)(3)" and inserting "subsections (k)(3), (k)(4), (m), and (n)";

(B) in subsection (k)—

(i) in paragraph (1)(A), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (m)," before "subsection (g)(2)(A)", and

(ii) in paragraph (3), by striking "subsection (l)" and inserting "subsections (l), (m), and (n)"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(m)(1)(A) If, within the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'Association') amends the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A) and adopted on September 20, 1988) to reflect the changes in law made by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A)) as amended by the Association in accordance with this paragraph (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'revised NAIC Model Regulation').

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation or 1 year after the date the Association first adopts such revised Regulation.

"(2)(A) If the Association does not amend the amended NAIC Model Regulations, within the 90-day period specified in paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall promulgate, not later than 60 days after the end of such period, revised Federal model standards (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as 'revised Federal model standards') for medical supplemental policies to reflect the changes in law made by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the revised Federal model standards.

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised Federal model standards or 1 year after the date the Secretary first promulgated such standards.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section (except as provided in subsection (n))—

"(A) no medicare supplemental policy may be certified by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a),

"(B) no certification made pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain in effect, and

"(C) no State regulatory program shall be found to meet (or to continue to meet) the requirements of subsection (b)(1)(A), unless such policy meets (or such program provides for the application of standards equal to or more stringent than) the standards set forth in the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) by the date specified in paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B) (as the case may be).

"(n)(1) Until the date specified in paragraph (4), in the case of a qualifying medicare supplemental policy described in paragraph (3) issued in a State—

"(A) before July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to remain in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the transition provision described in paragraph (2), or

"(B) on or after July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to be in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) before the date of the sale of the policy.

"(2) The transition provision described in this paragraph is—

"(A) such transition provision as the Association provides, by not later than December 15, 1989, so as to provide for an appropriate transition to reflect the changes in benefits under this title made by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, or

"(B) if the Association does not provide for a transition provision by the date described in subparagraph (A), such transition provision as the Secretary shall provide, by January 1, 1990, so as to provide for an appropriate transition described in subparagraph (A).

"(3) In paragraph (1), the term 'qualifying medicare supplemental policy' means a medicare supplemental policy which has been issued in compliance with this section as in effect on the date before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4)(A) The date specified in this paragraph for a policy issued in a State is—

"(i) the first date a State adopts, after the date of the enactment of this subsection, standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation (or revised Federal model standards), as the case may be, or

"(ii) the date specified in subparagraph (B), whichever is earlier.

"(B) In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(i) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet standards described in subparagraph (A)(i), but

"(ii) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1990 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1990. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(5) In the case of a medicare supplemental policy in effect on January 1, 1990, the policy shall not be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless each individual who is entitled to benefits under this title and is a policy holder under such policy on such date is sent a notice in any appropriate form by not later than January 31, 1990, that explains—

"(A) the changes in benefits under this title effected by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, and

"(B) how these changes affect the benefits contained in such policy and the premium for the policy.

"(6) In the case of an insurer which had in effect, as of December 31, 1988, a medicare supplemental policy with respect to an individual, for which the individual terminated coverage as of January 1, 1989 (or the earliest renewal date thereafter), no medicare supplemental policy of the insurer shall be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless the insurer—

"(A) provides written notice, by January 15, 1990, to the individual (at the most recent available address) of the offer described in subparagraph (B), and

"(B) offers to the individual, during the period beginning on January 1, 1990, and ending on March 1, 1990, continuation of coverage under such a medicare supplemental policy (with coverage effective as of January 1, 1990), under the terms respecting treatment of pre-existing conditions and group rating of premium which are at least as favorable to the individual as such terms as existed with respect to the policy as of December 31, 1988.".

(2) It is the sense of Congress that States should respond, at the earliest practicable date after the date of the enactment of this Act, to requests by insurers for review and approval of riders and premium adjustments for medicare supplemental policies in order to comply with the amendments made by paragraph (1).

(b) ADJUSTMENT OF CONTRACTS WITH PREPAID HEALTH PLANS.—Section 222 of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "December 31, 1988," each place it appears.

(c) NOTICE OF CHANGES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide, in the notice of medicare benefits provided under section 1804 of the Social Security Act for 1990, for a description of the changes in benefits under title XVIII of such Act made by the amendments made by this Act.

(d) TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS RELATING TO MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT OF 1988.—

(1) CORRECTIONS RELATING TO CATASTROPHIC DRUG BENEFIT.—

GRAHAM AMENDMENT NO. 986

Mr. GRAHAM proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1726, supra; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. MODIFIED BENEFIT PACKAGE FOR INDIVIDUALS HAVING PRIVATE INSURANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle C of title XVIII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"MODIFIED BENEFIT PACKAGE FOR INDIVIDUALS HAVING PRIVATE INSURANCE

"SEC. 1893. (a) Upon request made by an individual, in such manner and including such information as the Secretary may require, the Secretary shall determine whether such individual is entitled to hospital insurance benefits and supplementary medical insurance benefits under any benefit plan other than this title, which are equal to or greater than the benefits added by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, as amended. If the Secretary makes an affirmative determination with respect to such individual, such individual shall not be entitled under this title to such benefits, and shall not be required to pay the premium under section 59B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and the premium under section 1839(g) of this title, for so long as such individual continues to be entitled to such benefits under such other plan.

"(b) An individual may request the Secretary to determine whether such individual has ceased to be entitled to such benefits under such plan, or the Secretary may make such a determination on the Secretary's own motion. If such a determination is made, such individual shall thereafter be entitled to such benefits, and shall be required to pay the premium determined under section 59B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and the premium under section 1839(g) of this title.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply with respect to items and services furnished in, and premiums payable for, months beginning on or after November 1, 1989.

"(ii) outlays made under this part that are attributable to section 1833(c).."; and

(3) in subsection (b)(4), by striking ", receipts that are also" and all that follows through "Reserve Fund".

TITLE III—MAKING PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL CATASTROPHIC BENEFITS OPTIONAL

SEC. 301. NEW OPTIONAL, PART C PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title XVIII of the Social Security Act is amended by redesignating part C as part D and by adding after part B the following new part:

"PART C—INSURANCE PROGRAM FOR CERTAIN ADDITIONAL BENEFITS

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

"SEC. 1851. There is hereby established a voluntary insurance program to provide certain benefits provided under amendments made by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 in accordance with the provisions of this part for individual entitled to benefits under part A or part B who elect to enroll under such program, to be financed from premium payments by enrollees.

"SCOPE OF BENEFITS

"SEC. 18552. (a) DESCRIPTION OF BENEFITS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, except as provided in this section, the amendments made by the following provisions of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 shall only apply to individuals enrolled and covered under this part:

"(1) Sections 101, 102, and 104(d), insofar as they relate to changes in benefits with respect to extended care services or hospice care.

"(2) Section 202 (relating to coverage of expenses for prescription drugs and insulin), other than subsections (g) and (m)(4) thereof.

"(3) Section 203 (relating to coverage of home intravenous drug therapy services).

"(4) Section 204 (relating to coverage of screening mammography).

"(5) Section 205 (relating to in-home care for certain chronically dependent individuals).

"(6) Section 206 (relating to extended home health services).

"(b) TREATMENT OF PART A ONLY INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of an individual enrolled under this part who is entitled to benefits under part A but not enrolled under part B, for purposes of this title the individual shall be deemed enrolled under part B but only with respect to covered outpatient drugs, home intravenous therapy services, screening mammography, and in-home care.

"(c) TREATMENT OF PART B ONLY INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of an individual enrolled under this part who is entitled to benefits under part B but not enrolled under part A, no benefits shall be available under part A by virtue of this part.

"(d) TRANSITION FOR EXTENDED CARE BENEFITS.—In the case of an individual who, as of December 31, 1989, is entitled to benefits under part A and is receiving extended care services for which payment may be made under part A, the individual shall remain entitled to extended care services under such part during a continuous period of stay in 1990 subject to the following:

"(1) LIMIT ON NUMBER OF DAYS.—The number of days of coverage under this subsection shall not exceed 150 less the number of days for which benefits for extended care services were payable under part A for the individual in 1989.

"(2) TREATMENT OF COINSURANCE.—Coinsurance shall be applicable under section 1813(a)(3) only for those days (if any) in 1990 before the 9th day in which the individual was furnished extended care services in 1989 and 1990.

"(e) 6-MONTH WAITING PERIOD FOR PREEXISTING CONDITIONS.—Except as provided in subsection (d), during the 6-month period beginning with the first month in which an individual is covered under this part, benefits are not available under this part for treatment of any condition which existed before the first day of such coverage period.

"ELIGIBILITY, ENROLLMENT, PREMIUMS

"SEC. 1853. (a) ELIGIBILITY TO ENROLL.—Every individual who is entitled to benefits under part A or enrolled under part B is eligible to enroll in the insurance program established by this part.

"(b) ENROLLMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the provisions of section 1837 (other than subsections (c), (f), and (g)) shall apply to this part in the same manner as they apply to enrollment part B, and, for this purpose—

"(A) any reference to paragraph (1) or (2) of section 1836 shall be deemed a reference to subsection (a) of this section; and

"(B) any reference to a coverage period under section 1838 is deemed a reference to subsection (c).

"(2) INITIAL GENERAL ENROLLMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of individuals who are entitled to benefits under part A, or enrolled under part B, as of December 1989, the initial general enrollment period shall begin on January 1, 1990, and end on February 28, 1990.

"(B) INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall provide for the dissemination of such information to each individual described in subparagraph (A) as may be necessary to assure the individuals are fully apprised of the benefits of this part and the requirement to enroll under this section to obtain such benefits.

"(3) SUBSEQUENT INITIAL ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—In the case of individuals who are not entitled to benefits under part A, or enrolled under part B, as of December 1989, the initial general enrollment period shall be the initial enrollment period described in section 1837(d).

"(c) COVERAGE PERIOD.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The period during which an individual is entitled to benefits under this part shall begin as follows:

"(A) In the case of an individual who enrolls under subsection (b)(2), January 1, 1990.

"(B) If the individual enrolls under subsection (b)(3), the first month of the coverage period (described in section 1838(a)) for which the individual satisfies subsection (a).

"(C) If the individual enrolls during a general enrollment period (described in section 1837(e)), July 1 following the month in which he so enrolls.

"(2) APPLICATION OF OTHER COVERAGE PERIOD RULES.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the provisions of section 1838 (other than subsection (a)) shall apply to this part in the same manner as they apply to part B.

"AMOUNT AND COLLECTION OF PREMIUMS

"SEC. 1854. (a) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF PREMIUM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this part, the monthly premium for each individual enrolled under this part shall be—

"(A) $15.40, for months in 1990,

"(B) $30.30, for months in 1991,

"(C) $33.60, for months in 1992,

"(D) $35.80, for months in 1993, and

"(E) the amount determined under paragraph (2) for months in years after 1993.

"(2) PREMIUM FOR YEARS AFTER 1993.—The Secretary shall, during September of 1993 and of each year thereafter, determine the monthly premium for enrollees under this part for the succeeding year. Such premium shall be the amount the Secretary estimates to be necessary so that the aggregate amount of the premiums for such calendar year with respect to such enrollees will equal the total of the benefits and administrative costs which the Secretary estimates will be payable under this title due to the application of this part. In calculating the premium, the Secretary shall include an appropriate amount for a contingency margin.

"(3) PENALTY FOR LATE ENROLLMENT AND ROUNDING.—Under regulations of the Secretary, the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of section 1839 shall apply to premiums under this subsection in the same manner as they apply to premiums under such section, except that the percent increase in premiums effected under section 1839(b) with respect to any individual may not exceed 80 percent.

"(d) PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the provisions of section 1840 shall apply to payment of premiums under this part in the same manner as they apply to payment of premiums under part B.

"(2) TRANSITION.—In the case of individuals who enroll under this part under subsection (b)(2) (or during such succeeding period in which the Secretary is unable to apply the provisions of section 1840 under this part), the Secretary shall provide for the collection of premiums for previous months through a 1-time addition to the premium otherwise imposed or in such other manner as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

"(3) DEPOSITS.—Amounts paid to the Secretary under this part shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Sections 226(c)(1) of the Social Security Act and section 7(d)(1) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974 are each amended by striking "part D" and inserting "part C".

(2) Section 1862(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking "under part A or part B" and inserting "under this title".

(3) Section 104(b) of the Social Security Amendments of 1965 is amended by inserting "or part C" after "part B" each place it appears.

(c) TRANSITION PROVISIONS FOR POST-HOSPITAL EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.—In applying sections 1812 and 1813 of the Social Security Act with respect to extended care services provided on or after January 1, 1990, other than for an individual entitled to benefits under part A of title XVIII of such Act in December 1989 who enrolls under part C of such title during the period described in section 1852(b)(2) of such title—

(1) no day before January 1, 1990, shall be counted in determining the beginning (or period) of a spell of illness; and

(2) the limitation of coverage of extended care services to post-hospital extended care services shall not apply to an individual receiving such services from a skilled nursing facility during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, until the end of the period of 30-consecutive days in which the individual is not provided inpatient hospital services or extended care services.

SEC. 302. FUNDING AND ACCOUNTING.

(a) TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE TRUST FUND.—Section 1841(j) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395t), as added by section 203 of this Act, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(j), and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) There shall be transferred periodically (but not less often than monthly) from the Trust Fund to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund an amount equal to the Secretary's estimate of the additional amounts of expenditures made from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund that are attributable to individuals enrolled under part C.".

(b) REPEAL OF FEDERAL CATASTROPHIC DRUG INSURANCE TRUST FUND.—

(1) Section 212 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-360) is repealed, and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such section are restored or revived as if such section had not been enacted.

(2) Any balance in the Federal Catastrophic Drug Insurance Trust Fund as of the date of the enactment of this Act shall be transferred into the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund and any amounts payable due to overpayments into such Trust Fund shall be payable from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1844(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w(a)) is amended by striking "or section 59B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986" and inserting "or part C".

TITLE IV—INFORMATION TO BENEFICIARIES

SEC. 401. NOTICE TO BENEFICIARIES OF CHANGES.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide, in the notice of medicare benefits provided under section 1804 of the Social Security Act for 1990, for a description of the changes in benefits under title XVIII of such Act made by the amendments made by this Act.

ROTH (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 989

Mr. ROTH (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. REID, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. COATS, and Mr. GRAHAM) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1726, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. REPEAL OF EXPANSION OF MEDICARE PART A BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), sections 101, 102, and 104(d) (other than paragraph (7)) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-360) (in this part referred to as "MCCA") are repealed, and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such section had not been enacted.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR BLOOD DEDUCTION.—The repeal of section 102(1) of MCCA (relating to deductibles and coinsurance under part A) shall not apply, but only insofar as such section amended paragraph (2) of section 1813(a) of the Social Security Act (relating to deduction for blood).

(b) TRANSITION PROVISIONS FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.—

(1) INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES AND POST-HOSPITAL EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.—In applying sections 1812 and 1813 of the Social Security Act, as restored by subsection (a)(1), with respect to inpatient hospital services and extended care services provided on or after January 1, 1990—

(A) no day before January 1, 1990, shall be counted in determining the beginning (or period) of a spell of illness;

(B) with respect to the limitation on such services provided in a spell of illness, days of such services before January 1, 1990, shall not be counted, except that days of inpatient hospital services before January 1, 1989, which were applied with respect to an individual after receiving 90 days of services in a spell of illness (commonly known as "lifetime reserve days") shall be counted;

(C) the limitation of coverage of extended care services to post-hospital extended care services shall not apply to an individual receiving such services from a skilled nursing facility during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, until the end of the period of 30-consecutive days in which the individual is not provided inpatient hospital services or extended care services; and

(D) the inpatient hospital deductibles under section 1813(a)(1) of such Act shall not apply—

(i) in the case of an individual who is receiving inpatient hospital services during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, with respect to the spell of illness beginning on such date, if such a deductible was imposed on the individual for a period of hospitalization during 1989;

(ii) for a spell of illness beginning during Janaury 1990, if such a deductible was imposed on the individual for a period of hospitalization that began in December 1989; and

(iii) in the case of a spell of illness of an individual that began before January 1, 1989, and has not ended as of January 1, 1990.

(2) HOSPICE CARE.—The restoration of section 1812(a)(4) of the Social Security Act, effected by subsection (a)(1), shall not apply to hospice care provided during the subsequent period (described in such section as in effect on December 31, 1989) with respect to which an election has been made before January 1, 1990.

(3) TERMINATION OF HOLD HARMLESS PROVISIONS.—Section 104(b) of MCCA is amended by striking "or 1990" each place it appears.

(c) TERMINATION OF TRANSITIONAL ADJUSTMENTS IN PAYMENTS FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES.—

(1) PPS HOSPITALS.—Section 104(c)(1) of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before Janauary 1, 1990," after "October 1, 1988,".

(2) PPS-EXEMPT HOSPITALS.—Section 104(c)(2) of MCCA is amended—

(A) by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "January 1, 1989,"; and

(B) by striking the period at the end and inserting the following: ", without regard to whether any of such beneficiaries exhausted medicare inpatient hospital insurance benefits before January 1, 1989.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendments made by subsection (c) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

SEC. 2 REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM AND FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 111 and 112 of MCCA are repealed and the provisions of law amended by such sections are restored or revivied as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) DELAY IN STUDY DEADLINE.—Section 113(c) of MCCA is amended by striking "November 30, 1988" and inserting "May 31, 1990".

(c) DISPOSAL OF FUNDS IN FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.—Any balance in the Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund (created under section 1817A(a) of the Social Security Act, as inserted by section 112(a) of MCCA) as of January 1, 1990, shall be transferred into the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and amounts payable due to overpayments into such Trust Fund shall be payable from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990.

(2) REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM.—The repeal of section 111 of MCCA shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

SEC. 3. REPEAL OF EXPANSION OF MEDICARE PART B BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), sections 201 through 208 of MCCA are repealed and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to subsections (g) and (m)(4) of section 202 of MCCA.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1905(p) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(p) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3)(C)—

(A) by striking "Subject to paragraph (4), deductibles" and inserting "Deductibles", and

(B) by striking "1813, section 1833(b)" and all that follows and inserting "1813 and section 1833(b)).''; and

(2) by striking paragraph (4) and redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990.

SEC. 4. REPEAL OF CHANGES IN MEDICARE PART B MONTHLY PREMIUM AND FINANCING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 211 through 213 (other than section 211(b)) of MCCA are repealed and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) 1-TIME TRANSFER OF NET ADDITIONAL PREMIUMS.—There shall be transferred, as of January 1, 1990, from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund an amount equal to—

(1) the amount of the premiums collected pursuant to section 1839(g) of the Social Security Act, minus

(2) the amount of administrative expenses incurred under part B of title XVIII of such Act relating to implementation of MCCA, plus

(3) the amount of interest accrued to the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund attributable to balance described in paragraphs (1) and (2).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of subsection (a) shall take effect January 1, 1990, and the repeal of section 211 of MCCA shall apply to premiums for months beginning after December 31, 1988.

SEC. 5. AMENDMENT OF CERTAIN MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) REVISION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS.—

(1) Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss), as amended by section 221(d) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, is amended—

(A) in the third sentence of subsection (a) and in subsection (b)(1), by striking "subsection (k)(3)" and inserting "subsections (k)(3), (k)(4), (m), and (n)";

(B) in subsection (k)—

(i) in paragraph (1)(A), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (m)," before "subsection (g)(2)(A)", and

(ii) in paragraph (3), by striking "subsection (1)" and inserting "subsections (1), (m), and (n)"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(m)(1)(A) If, within the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'Associaiton') amends the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A)) and adopted on September 20, 1988) to reflect the changes made in law to the Medicare Catastrophic Act of 1988 and any additional provisions enacted relating to such changes, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A) as amended by the Association in accordance with this paragraph (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'revised NAIC Model Regulation').

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation of 1 year after the date the Association first adopts such revised Regulation.

"(2)(A) If the Association does not amend the NAIC Model Regulation, within the 90-day period specified in paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall promulgate, not later than 60 days after the end of such period, revised Federal model standards (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as 'revised Federal model standards') for medical supplemental policies to reflect the changes made in law to the Medicare Catastrophic Act of 1988 and any additional provisions enacted relating to such changes, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the revised Federal model standards.

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised Federal model standards or 1 year after the date the Secretary first promulgates such standards.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section (except as provided in subsection (n))—

"(A) no medicare supplemental policy may be certified by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a),

"(B) no certification made pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain in effect, and

"(C) no State regulatory program shall be found to meet (or to continue to meet) the requirements of subsection (b)(1)(A), unless such policy meets (or such program provides for the application of standards equal to or more stringent than) the standards set forth in the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) by the date specified in paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B) (as the case may be).

"(n)(1) Until the date specified in paragraph (4), in the case of a qualifying medicare supplemental policy described in paragraph (3) issued in a State—

"(A) before July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to remain in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the transition provision described in paragraph (2), or

"(B) on or after July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to be in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) before the date of the sale of the policy.

"(2) The transition provision described in this paragraph is—

"(A) such transition provision as the Association provides, by not later than December 15, 1990, so as to provide for an appropriate transition to reflect the changes in benefits under this title made in law to the Medicare Catastrophic Act of 1988 and any additional provisions enacted relating to such changes, or

"(B) if the Association does not provide for a transition provision by the date described in Subparagraph (A), such transition provision as the Secretary shall provide, by January 1, 1990, so as to provide for an appropriate transition described in subparagraph (A).

"(3) In paragraph (1), the term 'qualifying medicare supplemental policy' means a medicare supplemental policy which has been issued in compliance with this section as in effect on the date before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4)(A) The date specified in this paragraph for a policy issued in a State is—

"(i) the first date a State adopts, after the date of the enactment of this subsection, standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation (or revised Federal model standards), as the case may be, or

"(ii) the date specified in subparagraph (B), whichever is earlier.

"(B) In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(i) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet standards described in subparagraph (A)(i), but

"(ii) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1990 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1990, for purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(5) In the case of a medicare supplemental policy in effect on January 1, 1990, the policy shall not be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless each individual who is entitled to benefits under this title and is a policy holder under such policy on such date is sent a notice in any appropriate form by not later than January 31, 1990, that explains—

"(A) the changes in benefits under this title effected by the changes made in law to the Medicare Catastrophic Act of 1988 and by any additional provisions enacted relating to such changes, and

"(B) how these changes affect the benefits contained in such policy and the premium for the policy.

"(6) In the case of an insurer which had in effect, as of December 31, 1988, a medicare supplemental policy with respect to an individual, for which the individual terminated coverage as of January 1, 1989 (or the earliest renewal date thereafter), no medicare supplemental policy of the insurer shall be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless the insurer—

"(A) provides written notice, by January 15, 1990, to the individual (at the most recent available address) of the offer described in subparagraph (B), and

"(B) offers to the individual, during the period beginning on January 1, 1990, and ending on March 1, 1990, continuation of coverage under such a medicare supplemental policy (with coverage effective as of January 1, 1990), under the terms respecting treatment of pre-existing conditions and group rating of premium which are at least as favorable to the individual as such terms as existed with respect to the policy as of December 31, 1988.".

(2) It is the sense of Congress that States should respond, at the earliest practicable date after the date of the enactment of this Act, to requests by insurers for review and approval of riders and premium adjustments for medicare supplemental policies in order to comply with the amendments made by paragraph (1).

(b) ADJUSTMENT OF CONTRACTS WITH PREPAID HEALTH PLANS.—Section 222 of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "December 31, 1988," each place it appears.

(c) NOTICE OF CHANGES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide, in the notice of medicare benefits provided under section 1804 of the Social Security Act for 1990, for a description of the changes in benefits under title XVIII of such Act made by the amendments made by this part.

(d) MISCELLANEOUS TECHNICAL CORRECTION.—Section 221(g) (3) of MCCA is amended by striking "subsection (f)" and inserting "subsection (e)".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendment made by subsection (d) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

SEC. 6. OTHER MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 421 through 425 and 427 of MCCA are repealed and any provision of law amended or repealed by such sections is restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) MISCELLANEOUS TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS.—

(1) Effective as if included in the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, section 1834(b)(4)(A) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 4049(a)(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, is amended by striking "insurance and deductibles under section 1835(a)(1)(I)" and inserting "coinsurance and deductibles under section 1833(a)(1)(J)".

(2) Section 1842(j)(1)(C)(vii) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 4085(i)(7)(C) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, is amended by striking "accordingly" and inserting "according".

(3) Section 1886(g)(3)(A)(iv) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 4006(a)(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, is amended by striking "may) be" and inserting "may be)"

(4) Section 1866(a)(1)(F)(i)(III) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking "fiscal year))" and inserting "fiscal year)".

BRADLEY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 990

Mr. BRADLEY (for himself, Mr. BENTSEN, and Mr. PRYOR) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1726, supra, as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . RESPITE CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the amendments made by subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) of section 205 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 shall take effect and apply to items and services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

(b) AMENDMENT TO PAYMENT THRESHOLD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (4) of section 1861(ll) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(ll)), as added by section 205 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The 12-month period described in this paragraph is the 1-year period beginning on the date that the Secretary determines that a chronically dependent individual has incurred out-of-pocket part B cost sharing in an amount equal to $1780 in 1991 and equal to an amount in each succeeding year which is equal to an amount (rounded to the nearest multiple of $1) as the Secretary estimates will result, in that succeeding year, in 5.5 percent of the average number of individuals enrolled under this part (other than individuals enrolled with an eligible organization under section 1876 or an organization described in subsection (a)(1)(A)) during the year incurring such amount. In the case of an individual who qualifies under this paragraph within 12 months after previously qualifying, the subsequent qualification shall begin a new 12-month period under this paragraph."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this subsection shall apply to items and services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

MICHIGAN MINORITY BUSINESS MONTH

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the minority entrepreneurs of my home State of Michigan.

Since 1984 the Michigan Department of Commerce has designated the month of October as Minority Business Month in recognition of its commitment to foster the development of minority-owned businesses in the State.

Mr. President, the Michigan Department of Commerce's Minority Business Enterprise Office [MBEO] is charged with the responsibility of providing specific help to the minority business community in Michigan. Business owners can receive services including direct financing, marketing, networking, and other assistance. Additionally, the MBEO provides seminars and workshops around the State to help minority-owned businesses run more effectively and to grow stronger in an ever-increasing competitive marketplace.

Recently, the MBEO launched its first Young Minority Entrepreneur Awards Program. This program goes far in addressing the many problems inherent in trying to run a minority business. By recognizing the achievements of the innovative, successful young people that comprise the future of minority-owned corporations, the program encourages many to push themselves further than ever. The self-confidence this generates resounds throughout the business community by spurring young people on to greater achievements which, in turn, provides leadership by example for the many minority youths of this Nation.

Mr. President, the following individuals have been nominated to receive the Young Minority Entrepreneur Awards, and I salute them for their achievements.

Kathy Carter Boles, founder of Salad Express.

Danny D. Brown, president, D&B Equipment & Service.

Yvette Holloway, founder of HHS Employees Unlimited.

Randy Rainey, owner of Albion Ford.

Reness M. Griffin, president, R&R Temporaries, Inc.

M. Cole and B. Copeland, founders of Red Carpet Maintenance, Inc.

Andrew G. McLemore, president, Ameritech Capital Corp.

Andra M. Rush, CEO, Rush Trucking Corp.

Jerome Harvey, president, A&H Machine and Tool.

S. Baxter Jone, president, Busy Bee Production Co., Inc.

Robert and Marcia Cavin, owners of Exquisite Centerpieces.

George A. Bayard III, founder of Bayard Gallery.

Hilmer J. Kenty, president, Kenty Financial Services, Inc.

Roger C. Johnston III, president, RCJ Oil Co.

While it is important to recognize young entrepreneurs, we must also recognize the achievements of the more established entrepreneurs who are trailblazers in their own right and who provide counseling and guidance to younger entrepreneurs. This year a number of these individuals will also be recognized for their success in business. They are:

Jack P. Moore, president, Moore & Assoc., Inc.

Mike Navarro, founder, El Matador Tortilla Chip.

Lewis Driskell, Sr., president and CEO, Union Printing Co.

Frank Madison, coowner, Madison Food Center.

Brady Keys, Jr., owner, Keys Group Co.

Betty J. Walker, owner, BJW Associates, Inc.

The State of Michigan and our country as a whole can benefit from the creation and strengthening of minority business. I believe that the services provided by the Minority Business Enterprise Office of Michigan are invaluable in attempting to redress the grim reality of the many difficulties that must be overcome by minority entrepreneurs. I urge my fellow Senators to join me in recognizing this outstanding program that serves as a guiding light for the rest of the Nation in the area of minority business development.●

EDWARD DOYLE

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in honor of a constituent of mine, Mr. Edward Doyle.

Edward Doyle, a citizen from Yonkers, NY, will be receiving a humanitarian award from the Yonkers Columbus Day celebration committee, for the services and contributions he devoted to the City of Yonkers. He became part of the Teamsters in 1958 and was elected as vice-president of Local 456 in 1961. After his appointment, Mr. Doyle was called into active duty in the Reserves when President Kennedy activated the Reserves during the Berlin crisis. He served our country well in the United States Army and was in the Reserves for 5 years.

Mr. Doyle has served the community of Yonkers with much dedication. In 1976 he was, once again, elected as vice-president of Local 456 and also the business agent. He progressively proved his abilities and is now the secretary-treasurer and business manager. In addition to his professional achievements he has also contributed to his community by serving on political committees for both Democrats and Republicans. He is also a member of the board of directors of the Angel Guardian for the Elderly, the Brighter Tomorrow Group, and the Dr. I Foundation and Yonkers P.A.L.

Mr. Doyle has received multiple awards, including the Westchester-Putnam Affirmative Action Program for the Union Award. His commitment to the less fortunate is remarkable. His devotion to children; Cerebral Palsy; March of Dimes; Children's Village and Special Education for the underprivileged children is something that should commended.

Mr. President, I am proud of the achievements and dedication of Mr. Doyle.●

LAW LIBRARIANS' SOCIETY OF WASHINGTON, DC

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, this month the Law Librarians' Society of Washington, DC, celebrates its 50th anniversary. Founded in 1939 with 40 members, the Society now represents over 650 government, academic, bar association and law firm librarians in the Washington, Virginia, and Maryland region.

Librarians by profession are dedicated to offering open, unrestricted service to their users and facilitating the exchange of information and ideas among all levels of society. In the field of law, they assist in every stage of the legal process from the background research needed in writing a new piece of legislation to the final judicial review in court.

Law librarians at the Library of Congress maintain the largest collection of legal literature in the world and provide essential research services to Congress, scholars, attorneys, and the general public. Law librarians employed at each of the Federal departments and major agencies serve the legal needs of the Government both in Washington and around the country. Their expertise in quickly assembling the vast amounts of technical and legal data needed to administer Government functions allows regulations to be written more quickly and implemented more fairly.

Judges from the U.S. Supreme Court to local county courts are called upon to render opinions on complex questions requiring knowledge of social and scientific conditions often going beyond narrow legal bounds. They rely on their librarians to provide access to a comprehensive and current collection of both legal and general literature so that their decisions reflect the most recent research and scholarship in all fields.

The Washington area, befitting its site as the Nation's capital and the source of legislation, contains more librarians at more law schools than any other region in the country. Members of the Society at the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, the University of Richmond, and George Mason University serve faculty, students, and the citizens of their State, as well as offer legal reference to local government officials. Librarians provide similar services at the five law school libraries of Washington, DC—American, Catholic, Georgetown, George Washington, and Howard—and at the two law school libraries of Maryland, the University of Maryland, and the University of Baltimore.

At the numerous law firms in the area, librarians utilize print, database, media, Government, and institutional sources of information to assist attorneys in furnishing cost-effective service to clients seeking advice on international business matters, counsel on pending legislation, or representation before the Federal courts and agencies.

The Society maintains a scholarship fund for disadvantaged students and annually distributes thousands of dollars to those pursuing a professional library education. Volunteers from the Society maintain law book collections at local prisons and provide reference services to prisoners who may not otherwise have access to legal counsel. The Society's annual book drive supports the nonprofit bar association libraries in the region.

I congratulate the members of the Law Librarians' Society of Washington, DC, on half a century of service to their constituents and the community at large and wish them continued success in their profession.●

CLOSING A GAPING HOLE IN FLOW OF COCAINE

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, last night I offered an amendment to the national drug control strategy bill that would have closed a gaping hole in the flow of cocaine to this country. By a close vote, my amendment was tabled.

Mr. President, the only people celebrating last night's outcome were the drug cartels and the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association. Last night's vote told drug dealers, "Buy a plane and come on in. Our skies are open, you have nothing to fear." We told the cartel we are not prepared to close our skies as their avenue of choice to Main Street, U.S.A.

The cartel kingpins must be asking themselves: Why risk being stopped at the border, when there is no deterrent to smuggling by air? I think the Senate's decision is nothing short of an invitation to increase drug smugglers' flights.

Forty-eight Senators are ready to close this avenue, Mr. President. Not one of them is "posturing" as some have argued. This amendment could make a profound difference in our war on drugs, and I say, Mr. President, that you have not heard the last of it.

While we were debating this issue yesterday, 5,000 Americans tried cocaine for the first time. Five thousand new users in 1 day. Another cartel pilot collected $200,000 for a few hours' work dropping a half ton of cocaine off our coasts. Countless crimes were committed and lives were ruined because of crack and cocaine abuse. The time to end this madness is today—not tomorrow, or a week from now.

It is a fact that 50 percent of America's cocaine supply enters this country by air; it is a fact that cocaine and crack are rocking the foundation of this country. There is nothing short of a cocaine airlift to the United States underway which is feeding crack clearance sales on our streets.

I would like to leave my colleagues with the questions very much on my mind: Why didn't you end this airlift, once and for all? Why did you choose to protect the drug smuggler who operates by air? Why did you preserve the gaping hole in our wall of defense against the cartel's assault on America?●

YESHIVA UNIVERSITY HONORS HERBERT TENZER

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on Wednesday evening, September 20, Herbert Tenzer was honored by Yeshiva University in New York City upon his retirement after 12 years of distinguished service as chairman of the University's Board of Trustees.

From 1964 to 1968, Mr. Tenzer served with distinction as U.S. Representative from New York's Fifth Congressional District, which encompasses the South Shore of Long Island. Elected by an overwhelming majority, he was the first Democrat ever to be elected from that district.

During his two terms in the House, Herb Tenzer played a major role in the struggle against cancer, heart disease, and stroke. He was one of five original sponsors of landmark legislation which allocated and appropriated funds to establish new care centers and rehabilitate existing ones for the treatment of these major diseases. He also provided spirited leadership in support of programs benefiting the elderly, handicapped, and disadvantaged. In yet another realm, he was a sponsor of the Wetlands Preservation Act, protecting valuable wetlands areas in his district and throughout the United States.

Yeshiva University's tribute to Herbert Tenzer was in recognition of his selfless and heroic leadership—from 1977 through June of this year—as chairman of the board of trustees of the university. In that capacity, Mr. Tenzer was the highest ranking lay leader of an educational institution which is America's oldest and largest university under Jewish auspices.

The dinner marked the establishment of the Herbert and Florence Tenzer Fellows Program, the first universitywide program to award substantial grants to outstanding students attending any of Yeshiva University's graduate schools or affiliates.

Mr. Tenzer has enjoyed an illustrious career in public and communal service, spanning more than six decades on the local, national, and international scene.

He is the founder of Rescue Children Inc., an organization which from 1945 to 1948 cared for more than 2,200 European war orphans in 15 orphan homes in Belgium and France. One-third of these children were reunited with their parents, another third were adopted by relatives in America and elsewhere, and the remaining "full orphans" emigrated to Israel.

Mr. Tenzer served in a leadership capacity in the establishment of Yeshiva University's Albert Einstein College of Medicine, one of the world's leading centers for biomedical research. He is on the board of overseers of the school of medicine, and the board of governors of the university's Wurzweiler

School of Social Work—America's only graduate social work education program under Jewish auspices in a university setting—and on the board of directors of Stern College for Women, the university's undergraduate division of liberal arts and sciences for women.

In 1972, Mr. Tenzer received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree from the late Dr. Samuel Belkin, the university's second president. Twelve years later, the university's current president, Dr. Norman Lamm, conferred upon him an honorary doctor of laws degree. In awarding this degree, Dr. Lamm said: "For more than four decades, you have labored zealously to ensure that this great institution continues to serve as a beacon of academic excellence to the Jewish community and the world."

Mr. Tenzer has held leadership positions in some two dozen philanthropic and communal organizations. He is the founder and chairman of America-Israel Friendship League, an organization devised to promote and strengthen the friendship between Israelis and Americans of all races, creeds, and religions. Many of my colleagues have joined me in support of the league's important work.

For the past 41 years, Mr. Tenzer has served as president of Fight for Sight Inc., a leader in the effort to find cures for blindness and blinding eye diseases.

He is also a founder of the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York, now the UJA-Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of Greater New York, and has served as its chairman, president, and campaign chairman.

Mr. President, Mr. Tenzer's accomplishments are varied and profound. He is a leader and a "mensch" and was quite deservedly honored by Yeshiva University. I send my own congratulations to this fine American and, if I may, that of this body as well.●

AN OUTSTANDING GREEK AMERICAN

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as Americans are taught from an early age, the Greek people have made important contributions to our culture, to our society, and to our system of government. Greeks established many of the foundations of Western civilization. Greek historical, cultural, and political tradition helped shape our Nation and lives today in the activities of our businessmen, philosophers, entrepreneurs, government, and community leaders.

California is fortunate to have an organization of Greek-Americans, the AXIOS Foundation for Worthiness, who have joined together to encourage quality leadership and community service, to further educational opportunity by providing scholarship assistance, and to promote and preserve Greek tradition and culture.

On October 13, 1989, AXIOS will honor Angelo Tsakopoulos, as 1989 Man of the Year. To be honored in this way by the leaders of the Greek-American community is itself an achievement. Mr. Tsakopoulos was chosen as Man of the Year because of his steadfast commitment to the community, his leadership role in the Greek Orthodox Church, and his efforts to preserve the Greek heritage.

I'm delighted to join the AXIOS Foundation in congratulating Angelo Tsakopoulos for his efforts in preserving the Greek culture, past and present.●

A TRIBUTE TO ROY TERRY

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleagues to join with me honoring not only an exceptional Alabamian, but an outstanding American as well.

Roy Terry, who owns and operates Terry Manufacturing Co., Inc., in Roanoke, AL, has been selected as the National Minority Manufacturer of the Year by the United States Small Business Administration and the Minority Business Development Agency for the second consecutive year. Mr. Terry was honored here in Washington this week.

Terry Manufacturing Co., Inc. was established in 1963 by the late Jesse A. and Velma Terry, along with their three sons, Ron, Rudolph, and William. The company has grown from five employees and six sewing machines in 1963 to nearly 300 employees today, with plants in Roanoke and Tuskegee. It is now the leading black-owned apparel manufacturing operation in the Nation, with gross sales exceeding $12 million annually.

The company's first years of operation were spent performing subcontracts for other large apparel manufacturers. However, their primary goal was to become true manufacturers in every sense of the word. Terry Manufacturing Co., Inc. had its first real break when they secured a contract from the Veterans' Administration to produce hospital uniforms in 1970.

Terry Manufacturing provides one-third of Burger King's uniforms nationally and has supplied uniforms to Church's Fried Chicken for the past 7 years. The firm has never had a uniform returned for poor workmanship. In addition, Terry Manufacturing still performs Government contracts, providing uniforms to various defense agencies.

At present, this company is the exclusive supplier of special fire-retardant uniforms used by the U.S. Forest Service. In addition, this company recently became one of only three uniform manufacturers in the U.S. licensed to supply crew uniforms to the McDonald's Corporation. This is one of the largest and most sought after uniform contracts in the world.

Mr. President, I know I join Roy's wife, Willo, his two children and their families in sharing their pride in Roy's accomplishments. Roy Terry embodies the very characteristics that identify the American spirit—faith, courage, and determination. He is a most fitting and worthy recipient of the National Minority Manufacturer of the Year award and a source of great pride for the State of Alabama. It is my pleasure to serve as one of his representatives in Washington.●

HOUSING NOW! MARCH

● Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise to commend the thousands of concerned citizens from around the country who are converging on Washington this weekend to demand an end to the scourge of homelessness.

The people are coming by the thousands to join in "Housing Now!"—a peaceful march on Washington. They are coming from my home State, and from the States of most of our colleagues. Some of them have even walked to Washington. Today, I met with students, activists, Vietnam veterans, and other Tennesseans who had come all the way from Memphis to express the urgent need for more housing.

Housing Now! is a unique effort supported by more than 175 national organizations. Together, these people are bringing a clear message: The time to solve America's housing crisis is now. They are coming here to say what many of us already know, that there is one lasting answer to homelessness more important than all the others, and that is to build more affordable housing.

Three million Americans are homeless. One-third of this group are families. This new reality has outdated the old stereotype of the skid-row bum. Today's homeless come from every walk of life, from every community, and are as diverse a group as America itself. Most tragically, one out of every four homeless persons is a child.

Mr. President, when children in our country must live without shelter, something in the system has failed; when children in our country must go to sleep at night without supper, something has failed; when children are afraid to go to school because they are dirty and have no clean clothes, Mr. President, something in our system has failed miserably.

This spring I had the opportunity to meet some of these young people during a performance of "Beauty and the Beast" on Capitol Hill. This was a play performed by children who live in the Capitol City Inn shelter and sponsored by Voices in the Streets. These children are beautiful, bright, and imaginative, but they are being robbed of their youth. We must force a change.

According to a recent study, another 4 to 14 million families are on the edge of becoming homeless. Even more disturbing is a recent Housing Studies report at Harvard University indicating that the number of renters and homeowners who meet Federal poverty standards and who spend more than half their income on housing rose from 3.2 million in 1974 to 6.6 million in 1985.

These numbers grew steadily throughout the 1980's, as the administration cut Federal support for housing by more than 75 percent. Now we learn that hundreds of millions of funds in the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] may have been lost through mismanagement and fraud. Funds allocated by Congress to help America's most needy may have been misused to help wealthy business people become more wealthy.

Three years ago, I stood here and told this Chamber that we can no longer afford to ignore the housing crisis. I introduced legislation to build more housing and guarantee every American the right to shelter.

Since that time, Congress has passed the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, which has helped launch and support a wide range of programs and benefits for the homeless including health care, emergency food and shelter, child care services, and job training. I am proud to have helped write that legislation and steer it to passage. But we need to do much, much more. This year, working with Senator METZENBAUM of Ohio and Congressman VENTO of Minnesota, I have introduced legislation to provide permanent housing for the homeless.

The people who will be marching here tomorrow are right: We don't have a homelessness crisis because 3 million people chose to be homeless. We have a homelessness crisis because we stopped building affordable housing. And the best way to help the homeless is to start building affordable places to live again.

I urge my colleagues to join me in pushing for a lasting solution to this tragedy.●

THE NATIONAL RESEARCH AND EDUCATION COMPUTER NETWORK

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, recently the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy [OSTP] released a plan for a Federal high performance computing program. I want to congratulate President Bush and his team at OSTP for their leadership in making this program a priority.

My colleague on the Commerce Committee, Senator GORE, introduced a bill last spring which would create a high-capacity national research and education network to link up supercomputers and databases around the country. I support Senator GORE's bill and I am hopeful that the Congress and the administration will work in concert on this vitally important proposal.

Mr. President, the United States no longer enjoys the comfortably dominant position it once held in the international marketplace. Government-supported research and development in other nations, namely Europe and Japan, is producing technology innovation and commercialization that is threatening to erode our leadership base in many sectors of the economy. Confronted with diminishing areas of dominance, we can ill afford to fall behind in the one sector of the economy where we have thus far remained ahead of our competitors: high performance computing.

Dr. William R. Graham, former Director of OSTP, put it succinctly in the 1987 report: A Research Strategy for High Performance Computing, "One thing is clear: the competition in an increasingly global market cannot be ignored. The portion of our balance of trade supported by our high performance computing capability is becoming more important to the Nation. In short, the United States must continue to have a strong, competitive supercomputing capability if it is to remain at the forefront of advanced technology."

Advanced technologies, such as supercomputing, will yield products, services, and manufacturing capabilities that will protect America's role as an economic leader. In addition to its traditional military role, supercomputers have become important to every sector of America's industry. Supercomputers are being utilized in energy research, weather prediction, and problems of molecular structure, just to name a few. The challenges for tomorrow are in the areas such as climate and global changes, enhanced oil and gas recovery, design of hypersonic aircraft, and design of new materials such as immunological agents and diseases.

The National Research and Education Computer Network will especially benefit small and remote universities and research institutions that do not have access to supercomputer capabilities and specialized databases. Currently, sophisticated research tools like these are available only to a privileged few at major research institutions and large corporations. The proposed network will change this by making supercomputers and on-line databases available to virtually every university in the Nation.

Mr. President, I understand the fragile foundation of America's superiority in advanced computing and the importance of Federal support of an integrated approach for restoring and maintaining our technological lead. Senator GORE's bill, S. 1067, will implement a program whereby the Federal Government will encourage, support, and sponsor enhanced development architecture, hardware, and software for supercomputing campatibility. The research and education network will create an effective synergism between government, industry, and academic participants in high performance technology development.

Dr. Allan Bromly, in his forward to the program plan, stated our mission quite accurately when he said, "We cannot afford to cede our historical leadership in high performance computing and its applications. We need to encourage the dynamism of the United States computer industry, and hence, our economy."

Mr. President, I again applaud the administration and Senator GORE for their combined leadership in this program and I urge my colleagues to lend their support.●

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE TO DALAI LAMA

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to note with pleasure that the Nobel Peace Prize has been awarded to a living symbol of peace, the Dalai Lama. In his struggle to preserve the culture and identity of this people—the ancient people of Tibet—the Dalai Lama has chosen the path of peace.

Born Tenzin Gyatso, he was taken to Lhasa at the age of 5 and installed as the 14th Dalai Lama. At the age of 15 he assumed the mantle of government. That was in 1950. Just 1 year later Chinese troops invaded and occupied Tibet. Years of discussion with the Chinese were fruitless. In 1959 he fled to India with nearly 100,000 followers amidst an unsuccessful revolt against Chinese rule.

Since that time he has worked unceasingly to focus world attention on the tragic plight of his people. In Tibet, the Chinese truly embarked upon a "cultural revolution." Probably "cultural decimation" would be a better description of the events in Tibet. The Dalai Lama's people suffered one of the great tragedies of this century when Tibetan Buddhist culture was attacked by Mao's legions. Countless temples of inestimable religious significance and artistic value were razed. A mere handful survived.

The tragedy of Tibet has been too much an unheard story, but it has been told. Patiently, insistently, peacefully, and eloquently, the Dalai Lama has told the tragic story of Tibet. Perhaps this well-deserved prize will help open the world's unlistening ears.

Mr. President, I congratulate the Nobel Committee on their selection, and I send my warm congratulations to the Dalai Lama.●

EXTENDING EXPIRATION DATE OF THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I rise in support of H.R. 3281 a bill to extend the authorities of the Defense Production Act, the National Flood Insurance Program, and several other programs. The Senate has previously enacted extensions of DPA and flood insurance, but both programs lapsed because the House tied their passage to extension of the Federal Crime Insurance Program.

I strongly favored Senate passage of both DPA and flood insurance, because both are critical pieces of legislation that address important national priorities. Our defense preparedness requires that the Government be able to give priority to defense contracts and allocate critical materials, authorities provided by the DPA. Flood insurance is a requirement for certain types of disaster assistance for homes and businesses seeking relief. Failure to reauthorize this program could jeopardize the provision of disaster assistance to victims of Hurricane Hugo.

The Senate did not pass a crime insurance extension and I believe this was appropriate because the program does not address an issue of national consequence. It is a small but very costly program that deals with crime problems of a limited number of major metropolitan areas. This matter is more appropriately addressed by State government without any Federal role.

Despite my reservations about crime insurance, however, I am now willing to support this bill because of changes that the House made to its crime insurance proposal. The 5 percent statutory limit on annual premium increases in current law has been increased to 15 percent. I would have favored no cap on premium increases, but this change makes a good start at reducing the Federal subsidy in the program.

The bill also calls for a detailed annual report on the program and a justification for increases in premium rates. I favor closer scrutiny of this costly program because I believe it will stand the light of day. However, nothing in this reporting requirement represents an impediment, legislative or otherwise, to FEMA imposing the full 15 percent annual premium increase allowed by this amendment. There should be little difficulty in justifying a 15-percent premium increase for a program whose operating expenses and debt service costs are double its program level.

With these changes, a reasonable compromise has been struck on crime insurance. I urge adoption of the bill by the Senate so that the DPA and flood insurance programs can be put back into operation.●

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous censent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations: Calendar items numbered 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400 401, 402, 403, nominations placed on the Secretary's desk in the Coast Guard, two nominations reported today by the Foreign Relations Committee: Thomas F. Stroock, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Guatemala, and David J. Smith, with the rank of Ambassador during his tenure of service as Chief Negotiator for defense and space.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed en bloc, that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read; that the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table en bloc; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Thomas F. Stroock, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Guatemala.

David J. Smith, for the rank of Ambassador during his tenure of service as Chief Negotiator for defense and space.

FARM CREDIT ADMINISTRATION

Harold B. Steele, of Illinois, to be a member of the Farm Credit Administration Board, Farm Credit Administration, for the remainder of the term expiring May 21, 1992.

Bruce L. Gardner, of Maryland, to be an Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

Warren G. Leback, of New Jersey, to be Administator of the Maritime Administration.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Edward T. Timperlake, of Virginia, to be an Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs (Congressional and Public Affairs).

Raoul Lord Carroll, of the District of Columbia, to be General Counsel, Department of Veterans Affairs.

S. Anthony McCann, of Maryland, to be an Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs (Finance and Planning).

Allen B. Clark, Jr., of Texas, to be an Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs (Veterans Liaison and Program Coordination).

JoAnn Krukar Webb, of Virginia, to be Director of the National Cemetery System, Department of Veterans Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Thomas E. Collins III, of Mississippi, to be Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veteran's Employment and Training.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK IN THE COAST GUARD

Coast Guard nominations beginning Zoran Sajovic, and ending Robert W. Foster, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 12, 1989.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF DAVID J. SMITH TO BE AMBASSADOR AND CHIEF NEGOTIATOR TO THE DEFENSE AND SPACE TALKS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would like to make a few remarks about Dave Smith—the President's nominee to be Chief Negotiator at the defense and space talks in Geneva.

Many of you know him already—from his 3 years on my staff; his work on the arms control observer group—which gave him a firsthand look at the talks in Geneva; and his earlier duty with the Foreign Relations Committee, where he did arms control issues.

I'm sorry to see Dave leave—he's been an outstanding staffer, on some issues that are extremely complex and, sometimes, politically sensitive.

But because I know firsthand the quality of his work, I know, too, that the President has made a good choice; and that Dave Smith will make a superb negotiator to the defense and space talks.

He has all of the qualities that make a good negotiator. A quick look at his record makes it clear he has the knowledge and experience to tackle the defense and space talks.

Those of you who worked with Dave during the INF Treaty ratification process—when he served as the INF Republican task force staff director—know firsthand how much he contributed.

But his new job demands not only a firm command of issues and policies. To be a good negotiator, you have to know how to negotiate. Dave Smith knows how, because he learned in one place where negotiations are the only way to get things done—the U.S. Senate.

He knows when to be tough, without being abrasive. And he knows how to be flexible, without compromising principle. That's what produces not only treaties and agreements—but good treaties and agreements.

There's one final point I want to make about Dave. He cares not only about the important issues of arms control; he cares about people. One example—when our defense attaché in Athens, Bill Nordeen, was assassinated, Dave took it upon himself to find ways to ensure that his family was not forgotten, including in the important matter of compensation. The case is not yet fully resolved, but Dave Smith's caring, perseverance, and his legislative skill have made a good solution possible.

I want to thank the Foreign Relations Committee for acting quickly, unanimously, and favorably, to recommend the confirmation of Dave Smith.

Mr. President, this is a fine nominee, an excellent nomination. I urge my colleagues to support Dave Smith.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

VITIATION OF SENATE ACTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate engrossment of S. 1711, the drug strategy bill, reflect the vitiation of action on Senate amendment No. 983.

Mr. McCLURE. We have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT ADOPTION—S. 1711

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I send to the desk be deemed to have been adopted before the third reading of S. 1711, and that the Secretary of the Senate be directed to include the amendment in the engrossed version of S. 1711.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OUR NATION'S WAR AGAINST DRUGS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, in our Nation's war against drugs—a war that we all know will be long and protracted—we will need more foot soldiers—we will need more FBI agents, more DEA agents, more Customs officials and more Secret Service agents.

To his credit, the President has recognized the need to bolster our army of law enforcement personnel. In the anticrime package sent to Congress last June, for example, the President authorized funding for an additional 300 FBI agents as well as for other law enforcement officers. And—as I have said countless times before on this floor—I believe that the President has properly recognized the importance of this issue and the importance of stepping up our law enforcement efforts in the war against drugs.

EXPERIENCE HAS NO PRICETAG

But we also must be careful here. Hiring more FBI agents and other law enforcement officers is crucially important—there's little to debate about on this issue.

But—it seems to me—that it is more crucial to ensure that our experienced, trained troops—those troops that are already in the trenches and on the streets—receive adequate pay. And we must make sure that these troops continue to find it worthwhile—financially and otherwise—to remain on the job. This country simply cannot afford to lose their valuable experience—experience that I believe has no pricetag.

THE PROBLEM OF ATTRITION

Unfortunately, it is a sad fact that we are losing trained, experienced FBI agents. Last year, for example, more FBI agents resigned from the Bureau than retired. It is my understanding that this is the very first time in the Bureau's history that such a situation has occurred.

But—to tell you the truth—I can understand why an FBI agent would consider the resignation route. Just like everybody else, the FBI agent has to put food on the family table too.

Several years ago, the starting salary for an FBI agent was equivalent to that of a lieutenant in the New York City Police Department. Today, the starting salary for an FBI agent is lower than that of a New York rookie cop.

And it is important to recognize that the educational and work experience requirements for FBI agents are far more stringent than the requirements of most local and State law enforcement agencies.

In fact, almost 47 percent of the FBI agents today have advanced degrees in law, in public accounting, in business administration, in the sciences, and in other fields. I cannot think of a single State or local law enforcement agency that can boast of a more highly educated and technically qualified work force. Yet, FBI agents receive a base pay and overtime pay that are inferior to what most other law enforcement agencies can offer their employees.

DESCRIPTION OF THE AMENDMENT

Mr. President, my amendment attempts to remedy this problem. It would simply provide for a modest increase in the premium for administratively uncontrollable overtime—unsupervised overtime, in other words—for FBI agents and other Federal law enforcement officers.

Under current law, administratively uncontrollable overtime is compensated at a maximum rate of 25 percent of an employee's base salary. Nevertheless, overtime pay for those employees—mostly law enforcement officers—who earn more than a GS-10 is limited to a maximum of 25 percent of a GS-10 salary. My amendment would simply increase the overtime premium so that it will equal 25 percent of an agent's actual rate of pay.

THE HOUSE BILL

The language of my amendment is virtually identical to the language of a bill introduced earlier this year by Congresswoman MARY ROSE OAKAR. It is my understanding that the Oakar bill has more than 170 cosponsors—both Democrats and Republicans. And I hope the House acts quickly to take up and adopt this bill.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, this is not a pay issue—it is an issue of simple equity. It is also an issue of very practical importance in our war against the drug lords.

The solution proposed by my amendment is a modest one. And it is a solution that most Senators, I believe, can accept.

"COUNTRY MUSIC MONTH," "WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK," "NATIONAL WOMEN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II DAY," "NATIONAL RED RIBBON WEEK FOR A DRUG-FREE AMERICA"

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of the following: Senate Joint Resolution 158, World Population Awareness Week; Senate Joint Resolution 204, National Women Veterans of World War II Day; Senate Joint Resolution 213, National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America; House Joint Resolution 401, Country Music Month; and that the Senate proceed to their immediate consideration en bloc, that they be read a third time and passed and that the motion to reconsider the votes by which they were agreed to be laid upon the table en bloc and that their preambles where appropriate be agreed to en bloc.

Mr. McCLURE. We have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

So House Joint Resolution 401 was passed.

Senate Joint Resolution 158, Senate Joint Resolution 204, and Senate Joint Resolution 213 were passed.

The preambles were agreed to.

The Senate joint resolutions and their preambles are as follows:

S.J. RES. 158

Whereas the population of the world today exceeds five billion and is growing at an unprecedented rate of approximately ninety million per year;

Whereas vitually all of this growth is occurring in the poorest countries, those countries least able to provide even basic services for their current citizens;

Whereas the demands of growing populations have contributed substantially to enormous environmental devastation and pose threats of even greater harm to the world;

Whereas one-half of the ten million infant deaths and one-quarter of the five hundred thousand maternal deaths that occur each year in the developing world could be prevented if voluntary child spacing and maternal health programs could be substantially expanded;

Whereas research reveals that one-half of the women of reproductive age in the developing world want to limit the size of their families but lack the means or abilty to gain access to family planning;

Whereas the global community has for more than twenty years recognized that it is a fundamental human right for people to voluntarily and responsibly determine the number and spacing of their children and the United States has been a leading advocate of this right;

Whereas the demands of growing populations force many countries to borrow heavily and sell off their natural resources to cover the interest on their debt;

Whereas selling off natural resources in such circumstances often causes irretrievable losses, such as the destruction of the tropical rain forests at a rate of fifty thousand acres per day;

Whereas the reliance of a rapidly growing world population on burning fuels is a critical factor in the emission of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, which many scientists believe has already catalyzed a warming of the Earth's climate;

Whereas pollution is damaging the ozone layer to such an extent that within forty years the ultraviolet light reaching our planet is expected to be up to 20 percent greater than it is today; and

Whereas in 1988, forty State Governors proclaimed "World Population Awareness Week" in their States to call attention to the consequences of rapid population growth and the House of Representatives also passed a resolution to that effect: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 22 through 28, 1989, is designated as "World Population Awareness Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

S.J. RES. 204

Whereas the contributions of the 350,000 women who volunteered for service in the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II were a valiant and vital element in the success of the Allied armed forces;

Whereas such service women left a distinct and indelible mark on the military history of the United States;

Whereas during World War II, a total 17,000 members of the Women's Army Corps served in all of the overseas combat theatres;

Whereas during World War II, more than 2,500 women in the Armed Forces won decorations for combat and non-combat activities;

Whereas women veterans of World War II have a rich and courageous history of service to this Nation;

Whereas such history is a continuing inspiration for women currently serving in the United States Armed Forces;

Whereas the selfless sacrifices of the modest women who served in the Armed Forces during World War II have not gained appropriate historical notice; and

Whereas such service women deserve the respect and recognition of the people of this Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to recognize the valuable military service rendered by the women who served in the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II and to increase the awareness of the indispensable role of such service women in that war, October 28, 1989, is designated as "National Women Veterans of World War II Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate activities and ceremonies.

S.J. RES. 213

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse has reached epidemic proportions and is of major concern to all Americans;

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse is a major public health threat and is one of the largest causes of preventable disease, disability, and death in the United States today;

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse costs American society nearly $100,000,000,000 a year;

Whereas illegal drug use does not discriminate on the basis of age, gender, or socioeconomic status, as evidenced by the facts that—

(1) 23,000,000 Americans age 12 and over currently use illicit drugs;

(2) a nationwide Weekly Reader survey revealed that of the 68,000 fourth graders polled 34 percent reported peer pressure to try wine coolers, 41 percent to smoke, and 24 percent to use crack or cocaine; and

(3) the 15- to 24-year-old group is dying at a faster rate than any other age group because of accidents, homicides, and suicides, many of which are related to drug and alcohol abuse;

Whereas the drug problem appears to be insurmountable, but Americans have begun to lay the foundation to combat it;

Whereas we must continue the important strides we have made in our efforts to prevent alcohol and other drug abuse;

Whereas the most recent national polls reveal that progress has been made in that—

(1) since 1979, there has been a steady decline in the use of marijuana on a daily basis among high school seniors, and in 1987, marijuana use among this group was at its lowest level in 11 years;

(2) in 1987 there was a significant drop in the use of cocaine, and the number of high school seniors associating great risk with trying cocaine once or twice rose from 34 percent in 1986 to 48 percent in 1987; and

(3) illicit drug use of stimulants and sedatives continues to decline among high school seniors, college students, and young adults in general;

Whereas according to public opinion polls the American people consider that drug abuse is one of the most serious domestic problems facing this Nation and have begun to take steps to fight it;

Whereas the National Federation of Parents for Drug-Free Youth has declared October 22 through October 29, 1989, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America," and has called for a comprehensive public awareness, prevention, and education program involving thousands of parent and community groups across the country;

Whereas other outstanding groups, including the National Parents Resource Institute for Drug Education, the Council for Drug Education, Just Say No International, the National Crime Prevention Council, the Chiefs of Police National Drug Task Force, the National Hispanic Family Against Drug Abuse, national youth organizations, national service organizations, and others, have demonstrated leadership, creativity, and determination in achieving a drug-free America;

Whereas any use of an illegal drug is unacceptable, and the illegal use of a legal drug cannot be tolerated; and

Whereas alcohol and other drug abuse destroys lives, spawns rampant crime, undermines our economy, and threatens our national security: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 22 through October 29, 1989, is designated as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America.". The United States recognizes and commends the hard work and dedication of concerned parents, youth, law enforcement, educators, business leaders, religious leaders, private sector organizations, and Government leaders, and urges that meetings, conferences, and fundraising activities that support community and alcohol education take place during National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America with other appropriate activities, events, and educational campaigns. Every American is encouraged to wear and display red ribbons during National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America to present and symbolize their commitment to a healthy, drug-free lifestyle, and to develop an attitude of intolerance concerning the use of drugs.

COUNTRY MUSIC MONTH

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 196 designating "Country Music Month," and that the measure be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DESIGNATION OF BOWLING GREEN, KY, AS AN URBANIZED AREA

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar Item No. 188, S. 1443, a bill to designate Bowling Green, KY, as an urbanized area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1443) to designate Bowling Green, Kentucky, as an urbanized area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill (S. 1443) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1443

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the City of Bowling Green in the State of Kentucky shall be considered for designation as an urbanized area by the Director of the Bureau of the Census.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. McCLURE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

TESTIMONY AND REPRESENTATION OF SENATE EMPLOYEES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, and the distinguished Republican leader, Mr. DOLE, I send to the desk a resolution on testimony by Senate employees and representation by the Senate legal counsel, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 192) authorizing the testimony and representation of Senate employees in the case of United States v. Jorge Artalego (D.C. Superior Court).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

TESTIMONY OF SENATE EMPLOYEES IN OFFICE UNLAWFUL ENTRY CASE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on July 10 of this year, U.S. Capitol Police officers arrested Jorge Artalego on the charge of unlawful entry into Senator BENTSEN's private office in the Hart Senate Office Building. The defendant has also been charged with disorderly conduct. Frances Murrah, Senator BENTSEN's office manager, and Melissa Ferring and Erin Mewhirter, front office receptionists, witnessed events leading up to the defendant's arrest.

The U.S. Attorney's Office has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of Ms. Murrah at the trial of the case next Tuesday, October 10, 1989, in D.C. Superior Court. Counsel for Mr. Artalego has obtained subpoenas for the appearances of both Ms. Ferring and Ms. Mewhirter. This resolution would authorize the testimony of all three witnesses, as well as direct the Senate legal counsel to represent them in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the resolution? If not, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. RES. 192

Whereas, in the case of the United States v. Jorge Artalego, Crim. No. M-7121-89, pending in the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, the United States Attorney has obtained a subpoena for the testimony of Frances Murrah, and counsel for the defendant has obtained subpoenas for the testimony of Melissa Ferring and Erin Mewhirter, employees of the Senate on the personal office staff of Senator Lloyd Bentsen;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that the testimony of employees of the Senate may be needed in any court for the promotion of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges and rights of the Senate;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§ 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2)(1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent employees of the Senate with respect to any subpoena or order directed to them in their official capacity: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That Frances Murrah, Melissa Ferring, and Erin Mewhirter are authorized to testify in the case of United States v. Jorge Artalego, except concerning matters for which a privilege should be asserted.

SEC. 2. That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Frances Murrah, Melissa Ferring, and Erin Mewhirter, and any other staff assistant of Senator Bentsen who may be subpoenaed to testify in the case of United States v. Jorge Artalego.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, pursuant to Public Law 100-204, appoints the following individual from the private sector to the U.S. Commission on Improving the Effectiveness of the United Nations: the Honorable Thomas F. Eagleton, of Missouri.

ORDER FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.; RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until 10 a.m. tomorrow, Saturday, October 7, 1989; and, that the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that following the prayer, and approval of the Journal, the Senate begin consideration of the conference report on H.R. 2788, the Interior appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 10 A.M.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess, under the previous order, until 10 a.m., tomorrow, Saturday, October 7, 1989.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 9:39 p.m., recessed until tomorrow, Saturday, October 7, 1989, at 10 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PRESIDENT BARCO AT THE UNITED NATIONS

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the invaluable efforts of President Barco of Colombia in the war against international narcotics trafficking.

I met President Barco during his recent visit to Washington and was impressed both by his bravery and by his vision. In the face of threats from the merciless drug lords, he has shown great strength and resolve.

Narcotics abuse is a worldwide problem. The nations of the world must work together to stop this horrible menace that claims the lives of our children. President Barco's call for international cooperation in the war against drug trafficking is sound and workable.

I again salute President Barco's determination and his plan for dismantling the drug cartels in Colombia and working together to confront the drug menace. I commend the following speech by President Barco to the United Nations General Assembly to my colleagues in the Congress:

SPEECH BY PRESIDENT BARCO TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. President, on behalf of the people of the Government of Columbia, please accept my congratulations and good wishes on your election as President of this General Assembly. I am sure that you will preside with distinction over the complex affairs of this body that gathers the nations of the world. Let me also add my thanks to those who have already noted the splendid role played by your predecessor, his Excellency Doctor Dante Caputo. In addition, let me also pay tribute to the efforts toward achieving world peace of the Secretary General, Javier de Perez Cuellar.

This will be the last occasion I speak to you as President of Colombia. However, I am here today not just as President of my country, but as a citizen of the world.

A GLOBAL CHALLENGE

The terrible carnage of the world's second great war gave birth to this body, in the hope that nations standing together, united can prevent such global madness from ever happening again. Since then, mankind has continued to follow the destructive path of war in conflicts across our planet. It has only been the unimaginable consequences of nuclear war that has restrained us from falling once again into a worldwide conflagration.

Yet in spite of the uneasy nuclear peace thus engendered, the world has remained at war. Conflicts generated by ideology, poverty, injustice, excessive ambitions, and now increasingly by narcotics, have scarred the peace.

The motion of national sovereignty underlies all our strategic thinking; indeed it is the basis for the United Nations. Yet now we find this newest threat, narcotics, and accompanying terrorism that pays no respect to borders. We, a community of nations, find ourselves under assault from an international criminal enterprise that respects none of our norms of sovereignty, frontiers, or laws.

To meet this new challenge we have to reach back to those core founding values of the United Nations. If we cannot act together in the face of this menace, then we will be abetting the unrestrained growth in the use of drugs and in the violence they generate.

I am certain that Colombia will finally defeat the drug traffickers. But if this effort is not accompanied by a global commitment, then no victory can be achieved.

The recent global outpouring of solidarity and support for Colombia has been a great encouragement to us in these difficult times.

A new era is upon us. A new world war is being waged by an aggressor unrestrained by the traditional rules of engagement or by the responsibilities of national sovereignty. This aggressor is an insidious, global criminal network with enormous power and resources—a criminal enterprise which feeds on the illegal profits from the trafficking of drugs. As the Secretary General said in his report to you this year:

"Illicit use and traffic of drugs is now recognized as a social plague afflicting both developed and developing countries. Although efforts to combat this scourge have intensified in recent years, estimates suggest that the monetary value of drug trafficking has recently surpassed that of international trade in oil and is second only to the arms trade. It is a chastening observation that humanity is so deeply mired in the commerce of degradation and death."

The members of these criminal cartels were born in many nations and many of its leaders are called Colombian. But while some may have been born in my country, let me be clear—they are not Colombian in any more than name. They are international fugitives on the run. They have no home.

THE STRUGGLE IN COLOMBIA

I am here today to lay out the stark realities of this war against drug trafficking. We are on the front line of this battle. For us this is no war of words. In Colombia the casualties of our struggle have been mounting for some time. A month ago, we suffered the tragic assassination of one of our finest national leaders, Luis Carlos Galan. In many ways, his death has galvanized our nation and focused the attention of the world on this problem. But our war on drugs has been taking its toll for years. We have lost 12 Supreme Court Justices, our Attorney General and Minister of Justice. We have lost Members of Congress and Mayors, scores of journalists, thousands of soldiers and policemen and tens of thousands of Colombian citizens who were committed to the cause of democracy.

Following my announcement last month to enforce drastic measures using executive powers available under a state of siege, the narco-traffickers have continued to engage in a cowardly reign of terror. They have threatened and retaliated against innocent families, they randomly strike at our cities and have bombed institutions like our newspaper El Espectador which dare to speak out against them. In short, in their aim to protect their illegal and criminal activities, they seek to destroy the will of our people and undermine our most precious institutions. Hear me well—they will fail. Colombia—one of the oldest democracies in Latin America—will prevail.

In these past few weeks, we have had some important victories. We are methodically breaking the back of the cartels, but not just by confiscating and destroying many tons of cocaine. Indeed, Colombian authorities capture almost eighty percent of the cocaine seized globally. But our offensive goes beyond that. The assassins of Luis Carlos Galan have already been captured. Many thousands of suspects have been apprehended and millions of dollars in property—processing plants, bank accounts, communication equipment, aircraft, boats, houses and ranches that provide the backbone and the lifestyle for this criminal operation—have been seized.

All these victories, though, will not be nearly sufficient to win this war. That is why I am here today. Only through concerted international action can we hope to defeat the scourge of narcotics. The criminal drug cartels have declared total war. This declaration of war is against the entire community of nations. Against those whose youth are being poisoned by drugs and against those who, like Colombia, see their democracy and their institutions threatened by the violence and terrorism. There are no boundaries to the narcotics conflict, there are no safe havens from narco-terror. Now, there must be no safe havens for the narco-terrorists. In this war, the time has come for the community of nations to choose sides.

Many of you, by the way, may not accept that this is a global war; you may believe that it is one of this hemisphere alone—that cocaine is a scourge only of the Americas, produced in the nations of South America and consumed by North America. This is not so, because cocaine's tentacles, even as we meet today, are reaching into Europe and the Far East. The aggressive search for new markets is no more respectful of oceans than it was of borders. Where there are customers there will be suppliers. And indeed cocaine is only one ugly manifestation of a much wider narcotics crisis. Make no mistake, this scourge touches us all.

A PLAN OF ACTION

In solidarity, as a community of nations, this should be our plan of action:

First, we simply must stop demand for these illicit narcotics. It is the insatiable demand for drugs that fuels this terrorism and which is one of the greatest threats to democracy in Latin America. Those who consume cocaine are contributing to the assassination of my people by the criminal drug cartels. No doubt somebody a few blocks from this General Assembly Hall, in one of this city's fashionable neighborhoods, taking cocaine in the civilized calm of his living room, would balk at this description. Yet as surely as if he pulled the trigger he is the slayer of those Colombian judges and policemen who have paid with their lives for trying to uphold the law.

Every tactic and every weapon in the war against narcotics pales into insignificance compared to the need to reduce demand. The illegal profits produced by drug consumption are simply too great. I am sure that in Colombia we will defeat drug traffickers. But someone, in some country, somewhere, will supply the drugs as long as the business remains so profitable. This happened in the case with marijuana. When it became too expensive for drug traffickers to operate in Colombia, because of effective law enforcement, they moved to California, Hawaii and other places. The only law the narco-terrorists do not break is the law of supply and demand.

No society, no matter how rich, can afford to have its sons and daughters poisoned by cocaine, heroin or any other deadly drug. In this regard, President Bush's National Drug Control Strategy is a first step in the right direction.

We must insist on the message that illegal drugs are neither fashionable nor harmless, whether consumed at the glittering parties of the wealthy or in the ghetto. Drug users need to understand that in this war, they are in the camp of the enemy, along with those who produce and push drugs. Let me say how much I appreciate the initiative and leadership of the Prime Minister of Great Britain in her call for an international conference for the Reduction of Demand. Mrs. Thatcher has honored me with her invitation, which I have accepted, to address the conference next April.

Second, our efforts to reduce the supply of refined cocaine also depend on international cooperation in stopping the illegal trade in chemicals which are essential to the processing of this drug. Generally, much attention is given to the production and processing of drugs. For example, to countries like Peru and Bolivia where coca leaf is grown. Unfortunately, in contrast, little attention is given to controlling the supply of chemicals which are used to process cocaine and which come mainly from North America and Europe. None of these are manufactured in Colombia—all of them are smuggled into our country. Tightening controls on the manufacture and sale of these chemicals, as well as strengthening sanctions against their illegal shipment, must be one of our highest priorities. It takes more than coca leaf to produce cocaine. Without the chemicals there would be no narcotic. Let us press on the suppliers of these chemicals as firmly as we do on the poor peasant growers of coca leaf.

Third, the weapons used by the cartels to intimidate, maim and kill my people do not come from Colombia. They are found in international arms markets where even the most sophisticated weapons are easily and legally bought. Make no mistake, those who sell arms to the narco-terrorists are even more guilty than the addicts whose demand for drugs fuels violence. Last year Colombia presented a draft resolution calling for restrictions in arms sales, but unfortunately, consensus could not be found at the United Nations. We can no longer wait while this deadly trade continues. It is essential to adopt special measures to reduce and control arms sales to drug traffickers and terrorists. I call on all of the nations of the world to stop this madness and stop it now.

My government also views with extreme seriousness the activities of foreign mercenaries in training and assisting narco-terrorists in Colombia. The international community must strengthen its condemnation of the murderous association of mercenaries with terrorists and drug traffickers. My Administration has not only condemned the presence of foreign mercenaries in our terrority, it has also criminalized their activities and ordered their capture. These developments in Colombia make an urgent and indisputable case for the Assembly to approve the Convention outlawing these activities.

Fourth, international cooperation is an essential element in efforts to halt money-laundering. The drug cartels depend on the international banking sysem for the transfer of funds. A significant part of the criminal profits are invested in the industrialized nations—in bank accounts and bonds, in properties and in legal businesses. Somehow our sense of justice is warped when a poor farmer who feeds his family by growing coca is seen as the greater villain then the wealthy international banker who illegally transfers millions of dollars of drug money that finances terrorist actions against innocent people. If the international banking system cooperates in cracking down, we can put the cartel out of business.

Fifth, each of us must press for the prompt ratification of the Vienna Convention on narcotics trafficking. Painstakingly negotiated, this Convention includes specific actions on a wide variety of fronts, from penalties for consumption to seizure of ships on the high seas and confiscation of properties. Upon my return to Colombia, I will introduce it to the Colombian Congress for consideration. To be effective, it must be ratified by the community of nations.

In addition, I recommend to this Assembly two other multilateral initiatives: The first is to call a special session of this General Assembly addressed to all aspects of the global drug problem—consumption and production—which would consider urgent actions including those I am suggesting today. The other step, and perhaps the most important way to make concrete progress, is to establish an international working group at ministerial level, which would meet periodically to coordinate and refine specific anti-narcotics actions and to evaluate progress.

Sixth, central to the support for political stability and the maintenance of Colombia's democratic institutions is the strength of its economy. This is why international cooperation to maintain a strong and stable economy is so vital. In spite of the enormous destabilizing power of this international criminal organization, Colombia has been able to remain firm in its will to fight against drug trafficking.

It is critical to note that our economy is not dependent on the income of this illegal drug trade. In Colombia their dirty money is concentrated in speculative real estate activity and in money laundering. Its contribution to the growth of our economy is marginal. Colombia is not a narco-economy.

Three years ago, I addressed this assembly on the urgent need to fight absolute poverty. Since then, my government has embarked on an ambitious program of social change aimed at transforming the living conditions in regions traditionally excluded from development. The result can already be seen.

In spite of the massive resources that the drug war requires, we will not relent in our pursuit of social change and economic progress. To do this, Colombia requires international and financial cooperation. But even more important is the adoption of commercial and trade measures which allow our economy greater access to markets in the industrialized countries and fair prices for our exports.

THE INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT

The prime example is coffee, the traditional and principal source of income for Colombian farmers. The International Coffee Agreement has recently collapsed with the result that Colombia will lose more than $400 million this year in income. Sixty-one developing countries stand to lose a total of $5 billion in income next year.

We need the help of the United States and other countries to get the Coffee Agreement signed again without delay. We cannot afford to talk idealistically of crop substitution while sabotaging Colombian farmers' main cash crop and the country's largest export. It is encouraging to note that President Bush recently expressed his willingness to cooperate in finding solutions to the problems that led to the rupture of the Coffee Agreement. We expect that all other countries involved understand the seriousness of the situation and the need to revive one of the most successful examples of international economic cooperation.

The weakening of the commodities' market only aggravates the debt crisis. Foreign debt is a heavy burden for Latin America and is hindering economic growth. What is even more important, is that it is worsening the conditions of poverty for millions of Latin Americans. We have to work together to find realistic and effective solutions to this problem.

THE "ECODEBT" OF THE INDUSTRIALIZED NATIONS

There is yet another—and related—struggle which has drawn the attention of the world and which must be one of our highest priorities in the decade of the 1990's. It is, of course, the destruction of our natural resources.

As I said recently in Manaos, in the meeting of the member countries of the Amazon Cooperation Treaty, the industrialized countries have an ecological debt to humanity. In less than two centuries, not only have most of the native forests of Europe and North America been razed, but industrial production has brought pollution, acid rain and destruction to the ozone layer. This is an ecological debt to future generations of all the countries of the world who will have to live with the consequences of the mindless way in which the developed countries have handled their natural resources.

The way in which richer nations can pay this debt is by directly contributing to third world alternatives which preserve the environment, especially the rain forests. These issues should be dealt with at the highest level of all governments and of the United Nations. My Administration has already set aside more than 20 million hectares of rain forest and Indian reserves in the Amazon region, an area larger than that of many European countries. Let us pledge to seek sane development policies which recognize the value of our most precious resources. Let us pledge to retire this debt now for future generations.

A NEW LINK BETWEEN THE PACIFIC AND THE ATLANTIC

If the narcotics problem were not a priority at this moment I would have spoken to you today about another war: the struggle of the developing countries to eliminate poverty and social injustice. We should not lose sight of these fundamental goals. I would also have spoken about the many important development projects we are promoting, the most important of which for Colombia and for the international community is the proposal to build a land bridge to link the Pacific and Atlantic oceans through Colombian territory. The railroads, highways and pipelines to be built will provide vital new links to global shipping.

A HISTORIC CHALLENGE

Mr. President, this is indeed an historic moment. Again, we are at war and future generations will judge our actions today. In this war on drugs, there have been many heroes, of many nationalities, willing to give their lives. Many are well-spoken, even more are unknown. Luis Carlos Galan died because he dared to speak out. Guillermo Cano, the editor of El Espectador, was gunned down because he would not be silenced. The thousands of soldiers and Colombian citizens who fell, died because of their commitment to this struggle.

These brave men and women have not died in vain. The entire community of nations must build on their sacrifice to defeat the curse of drugs.

The record of human history is strewn with the wreck of failed civilizations. We now face a new and global threat. We must act now before it is too late. If we confront the narcotics menace with boldness and determination we can win. With international commitment and cooperation, we can make this plague of the 20th century obsolete. It is my cherished hope that the school children of the 21st century will know about drugs and about terrorism only from their history books—the great plagues that passed.

We should be under no illusions about the burdens that lie ahead. Victory will take time. Winston Churchill might have been describing the road before us today when he told the House of Commons in 1940: "Death and sorrow will be the companions of our journey; hardships our garment; constancy and valor our only shield. We must be united, we must be undaunted. . ."

Let us declare today that, together, the last decade of this century will be used to bury the international scourge of drugs. Together we can and must succeed.

FOOD CONTAMINATION PREVENTION ACT

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, yesterday at a hearing, it was documented that tanker trucks which were hauling deadly chemicals have then turned around and hauled fruit juices. Like all Americans, I am outraged by this practice. Back in June I stood in the well of the House and introduced legislation to end the disgusting and dangerous practice of backhauling garbage in trucks which also transport food. That legislation, H.R. 2681, received broad bipartisan support in the House. Today, after additional investigations and two congressional hearings, I am pleased to join with my good friend MATT RINALDO, and over 30 other Members of Congress, to introduce a new and refined version of the Food Contamination Prevention Act.

Mr. Speaker, despite almost universal condemnation of this practice by food producers, processors, wholesalers, retailers and transporters, there is clear evidence that this practice continues. It is time for Congress to put forward a comprehensive plan to regulate the transportation of garbage in vehicles used for other purposes.

Two months, ago, on August 2, I testified before the Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee of the Public Works Committee during a hearing held to examine the whole issue of food distribution trucks which backhaul garbage. One witness at the hearing, Prof. Manfred Kroger of Penn State University, an expert on the issue of food safety, explained the poténtial of physical, chemical and microbial contamination to food from residues of garbage inside trucks. Other witnesses readily admitted and an ICC investigation confirmed that some trucks hauling garbage to landfills are then hauling food in the same vehicle. The only question remaining is how quickly can we end this potentially deadly practice.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation I am introducing draws on added insights gained as a result of the subcommittee's investigation and hearing, plus input from private associations and public agencies. As redrafted, the new Food Contamination Prevention Act amends the Solid Waste Disposal Act so that any vehicle which transports solid waste is prohibited from carrying food or related products. All refrigerated vehicles, which are specially designed to carry fresh meat and other foods, would be banned from ever transporting garbage regardless of the content of their previous or future loads.

Mr. Speaker, the new Food Contamination Prevention Act mandates that any vehicle which transports solid waste be labeled as such in order to let shippers know that the vehicle has previously carried garbage. In addition, new subclasses of solid waste are created to accommodate the differences between empty bottles being returned for reuse, bundled newspapers destined for recycling, and garbage going to landfills. As many of my colleagues know, several States have adopted bottle bills which mandate that beverage distributers pick up the returned bottles on the same trucks which deliver the beverages. Also, it is clear that there is a significant difference between bundled newspaper destined for recycling and baled garbage destined for a landfill. The new Food Contamination Prevention Act sets different standards for these three different classes of solid waste.

Mr. Speaker, already the Owner-Operator Independent Drivers Association and the National Food Processors Association, as well as several newspapers, have endorsed legislation to end the backhauling of gargage in trucks which also haul food. The new Food Contamination Prevention Act provides a more comprehensive solution to the problem while taking into account the multifaceted nature of what we call garbage. I am pleased that 30 Members have already joined Mr. RINALDO and me as original cosponsors of this important legislation and I urge swift congressional action to end this potential health threatening practice.

MULTIPURPOSE VEHICLE STANDARDS

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce legislation to require the Secretary of Transportation to revise the Federal motor vehicle safety standards applicable to light trucks and multipurpose vehicles and for other purposes. The family vehicle of the 1980's is no longer the station wagon. Instead, families are buying record numbers of minivans and four wheel drive vehicles, which are referred to collectively as multipurpose vehicles [MPV's]. Thee vehicles now account for about one-third of all passenger vehicles sold in the United States. MPV sales have mushroomed because these relatively inexpensive vehicles are now being used as passenger cars. Unfortunately, the family that takes a pickup or minivan to get groceries or to pick up the kids at school is using a vehicle that lacks many structural safety features.

In the 1960's, when most of the safety standards for MPV's were written, the rationale for these exemptions was that these vehicles weighed more than passenger cars and were seldom used as passenger vehicles. Today, however, light trucks and MPV's have shrunk in size and are often marketed exclusively as passenger vehicles. The old standards are obsolete and insufficient, and the consequences of inadequate safety protections are deadly. MPV fatalities are rising steadily. In 1987, there were 7,200 deaths, and in 1988, the toll jumped to over 8,300.

MPV's lack entirely many important safety features which have long been required for passengers cars. The absence of such standards has been recognized as problematic for many years. In 1972, the National Transportation Safety Board [NTSB] reported that the severity of injuries sustained in accidents appeared considerably greater for occupants of some MPV's than for occupants of passenger cars. The NTSB suggested that this might have been due, in part, to the MPV exemption from certain safety standards. Similarly, a 1978 GAO study recommended that the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration [NHTSA] reassess its vehicle classification system for these very reasons, and concluded that delays by NHTSA in producing the reassessment were unwarranted. The GAO study further recommended that NHTSA apply a number of passenger car safety standards to MPV's.

More recently, additional concerns have been raised abut jeep-type sport-utility vehicles and allegations that, because of their design, they may have a propensity to roll over more easily than other vehicles. In June 1988, Consumers Union rated one model of this vehicle type unacceptable because of this risk, and petitioned NHTSA to recall that model. NHTSA denied that petition, but, in September 1988, granted a petition to establish a minimun performance standard to protect against unreasonable risk of rollover. However, rulemaking on this performance standard has not begun. Additionally, NHTSA recently granted a petition to begin a defect investigation of another model of this vehicle type, based on accident data indicating a high rate of rollover.

The legislation which I introduce today will rectify a glaring weakness in the Federal motor vehicle safety codes by directing the Secretary of Transportation to issue certain safety standards for passenger cars to extend their applicability to light trucks and MPV's.

In the 100th Congress, the Senate passed S. 853, a bill that required the NHTSA to consider establishing four additional safety standards for MPV's: Roof crush resistance, a high-mounted rear stop lamp, head restraints, and front seat passive restraints. To date, NHTSA has addressed only the head restraint requirement, issuing a final rule on September 25, 1989. On August 3 of this year, the Senate passed S. 673, the NHTSA Authorization Act of 1989, which includes, under titles II and III, all of the provisions set forth in the legislation which I introduce here today.

This day marks the third time in two congressional sessions that legislation to extend the applicability of passenger motor vehicle standards to light trucks and MPV's has been brought before the Congress. Last session, I introduced legislation extending specific passenger motor vehicle standards to light trucks, vans, and other MPV's such as the Jeep CJ and the Suzuki Samurai. Now I introduce a modified bill which adopts the same important safety measures as well as providing for additional safeguards such as more effective bumpers on all vehicles and airbags on Federal vehicles. A provision requiring head restraints is no longer necessary since, on September 25, NHTSA finally completed rulemaking to extend the applicability of the appropriate standard to light trucks and MPV's.

This bill finds, first, that light trucks and multipurpose passenger vehicles have become increasingly popular during this decade and that they are being used increasingly for the transportation of passengers, not property. It further states that the safety of passengers in light trucks and MPV's has been jeopardized by the failure to apply to them the Federal motor vehicle safety standards applicable to passenger automobiles.

Today's bill acts, therefore, to require NHTSA to take six basic steps to improve light truck and MPV safety.

The first step is to revise Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 216, to provide minimum roof crush resistance standards for light trucks and multipurpose passenger vehicles. Passenger vehicles have had this standard since 1971. Various MPV models, such as the Suzuki Samurai and the Ford Bronco II are notorious for rolling over under extreme conditions, and we need to ensure that the roof of an MPV will not collapse when this occurs.

The second step is to revise Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 108, to require high center-mounted rear brake lights on light trucks and MPV's. Such lights have proven effective in preventing rear end collisions in passenger cars, and they can also help prevent such collisions in MPV's. NHTSA has been working on a prototype center-mount MPV brake light for some time now.

The third step is to revise Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 208, to apply the passive restraint rule to light trucks and MPV's. According to an Insurance Institute for Highway Safety [IIHS] study, a major cause of death in MPV crashes is passenger ejection when the vehicle rolls over. IIHS found that passenger ejection was the cause of death in 46 percent of single vehicle crashes involving small utility vehicles. In contrast, 16 percent of small car single vehicle accidents involve ejection. Applying the passive restraint rule's requirement of either automatic seat belts or airbags would help prevent these ejections.

The fourth step is to revise Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 214, to extend the applicability of side impact protection to light trucks and multipurpose vehicles. The requirement of a door beam on passenger cars under the current standard is of great value in protecting occupants in single vehicle crashes. Occupants of MPV's should be afforded the same protection.

The bill directs the Secretary of Transportation to initiate not later than 60 days after enactment of this Act, and to complete not later than 12 months after enactment, rulemaking to revise these four standards.

The fifth step is to require the Secretary to review the system of classification of vehicles with a gross vehicle weight under 10,000 pounds to determine if such vehicles should be reclassified. The changing use pattern of MPV's and the recent controversy surrounding tariff treatment of sport utility vehicles both demonstrate the need for a clearer definition of what is an MPV and what is a passenger car. NHTSA has issued a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking with respect to its classification system, but no final rule has been issued.

The sixth step is to direct the Secretary to initiate and complete a rulemaking to establish a Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard to protect against unreasonable risk of rollover of light trucks and MPVs. Many MPVs, particularly sport utility vehicles, have high centers of gravity, which can cause them to roll over. For example, NHTSA reports that 64 percent of all single vehicle Suzuki Samurai accidents involve roll-over. The roll-over rate for full-sized sedans is only 8 percent. The problems with the Samurai were highlighted in tests conducted by the Consumers Union, the publishers of Consumer Reports. Consumers Union said that it had "never before come across a vehicle so vulnerable to rolling over" in its 25 years of vehicle testing. In addition, this spring, NHTSA opened an investigation into roll-over accidents involving Ford Bronco II's. One report determined that this vehicle rolls over three times more frequently than the Samurai. This legislation would require NHTSA to establish a standard for MPV stability in order to minimize roll-over problems.

The second section of my bill requires the Secretary to promulgate a regulation establishing bumper system labeling requirements for all passenger motor vehicles. This regulation will require manufacturers to label all vehicles sold in a manner which discloses the impact speed at which the bumper system can protect the rest of the vehicle from damage. NHTSA promised to establish this information system 7 years ago, but has yet to take any action in this area.

The third section of the bill reestablishes the bumper standard which was in effect in 1982, before the Reagan administration weakened it. For the 7 years, the minimum speed at which motor vehicle bumper systems were required to protect the rest of the vehicle from damage has been 2.5 miles per hour. This has allowed automobile manufacturers to install decorative bumpers which offer little protection to the vehicle. Reestablishment of the 1982 standard will raise this minimum acceptable speed to 5.0 miles per hour. IIHS has conducted a study demonstrating that the tougher standard will save the American consumer from unnecessary repair expenses.

The fourth section of this bill requires that all passenger cars acquired after September 30, 1990, for use in the Federal fleet be equipped with driver-side airbags. If economically practicable, full front-seat airbags would be required for vehicles acquired after September 30, 1993. Airbags are the most effective technology for preventing injuries and fatalities in frontal crashes. Many automakers have chosen to make use of airbags in order to comply with the passive restraint rule. Chrysler has made driver-side airbags standard on all its models, and Ford and General Motors are not far behind. All of these manufacturers have plans to install passenger-side airbags as well. The Federal Government has already had success with the 6,500 Ford Tempos equipped with driver-side airbags which it purchased between 1985 and 1987. In 126 crashes of these vehicles which were severe enough to deploy the airbags, they have not only prevented death and serious injury, they have saved the Government payments for medical treatment, hospitalization, and survivors' and disability benefits.

According to an NHTSA report prepared at the request of the Appropriations Committee, the distinction between passenger cars and light truck has blurred as the market share of light trucks has doubled and as light trucks are marketed more and more for passenger use. The new passenger minivan accounts for more than 50 percent of light truck sales. From 1981 to 1985, as MPV's shunk in size, the proportion of MPV fatalities rose while passenger care fatalities declined. The obvious conclusion? Federal motor vehicle safety standards written for light trucks and MPV's in the 1960's are obsolete and insufficient when applied to today's smaller passenger vehicles.

This bill is practical; it grants the Secretary of Transportation a full year after enactment of this act to complete rulemaking to revise or establish the specified motor vehicle standards and to amend the bumper standard; the Secretary will afford motor vehicle manufacturers ample time after the issuance of the final rules to comply with the revised standards.

Some will argue that the cost of these safety measures to manufacturers and consumers is too high. Such a view is shortsighted. The benefits which consumers will accrue from driving safer vehicles, while not immediately quantifiable, far outweigh the monetary cost. The benefits include fewer medical bills, more secure employability, and peace of mind. For example, the NHTSA has just completed rulemaking on a revision of Standard 202, to extend the applicability of the head restraint requirement to light trucks and MPV's. A 1982 NHTSA report shows that head restraints reduce the overall risk of injury in rear impact crashes by up to 17 percent. NHTSA estimates that the average cost of this new requirement to MPV buyers will be $22 per vehicle. According to the All-Industry Research Advisory Council, 49.2 percent of all injury claims paid by automobile insurance companies involve a neck sprain or strain. This is the most common injury out of 17,800 whiplash injuries sustained in MPV's annually. The average insurance claim paid by automobile insurance companies for a neck sprain or strain is $2,943. From this perspective, the $22 cost of a safety device like a head restraint is hardly prohibitory.

Like most Americans, when I bought my minivan, I assumed that it met the same safety standards as a station wagon. It is marketed as a passenger vehicle and is built on a K-Car chassis, not a truck chassis. I had every reason to believe that it met the same safety standards as a car, but learned long after I bought the van that it did not. As a father of two small children, I am concerned about the safety of my family every time I drive them in this vehicle.

This gaping hole in the vehicle safety standards must be closed, and that is why I have introduced this legislation. Common sense dictates that families who ride in these vehicles should be afforded the same safety protection as families who ride in passenger cars. With the passage of the companion bill in the Senate, the standards for safer design and construction of passenger vehicles can be on the books in less that 12 months time. Many injuries can be avoided and many lives will be saved if this small improvement in vehicle safety regulation is made. American families should be able to purchase a motor vehicle under the assumption that the Federal Government has ensured the safety of that vehicle. This time, for the sake of Americans all across the country who rely on motor vehicle transport for themselves and their families, we must have the courage to pass this crucial legislation.

INTRODUCTION OF COAL INDUSTRY HEALTH BENEFIT STABILIZATION ACT OF 1989

HON. RICK BOUCHER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, today, along with 15 colleagues, I introduced the Coal Industry Health Benefit Stabilization Act of 1989.

This legislation is needed to help address an emergency. It will ensure the financial condition of the health benefits program for retired coal miners. Simply put, the bill will authorize transfers of surplus funds from the 1950 United Mine Workers of America [UMWA] pension trust to the UMWA benefit trusts. The benefit trusts provide health benefits to 125,000 beneficiaries.

In recent years, due to such causes as rapidly escalating health care costs, the two UMWA health benefit funds have experienced serious financial difficulties. The 1950 fund has $54 million deficit, and the other is expected to be in deficit within weeks. As a consequence, payments to doctors, hospitals, and pharmacies are overdue by as much as 60 days.

We face the possibility of a breakdown of the health care system for retired miners. The funds contribute many millions of dollars to the Virginia economy, alone, and sustain the efforts of many health care practitioners and organizations. If allowed to continue unchecked, the financial difficulties in the UMWA health funds could cripple health care delivery in the coal counties of States like Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia.

In contrast with the health funds, the 1950 pension fund has a substantial surplus, according to independent actuaries who have reviewed the financial condition of the fund. The bill would authorize use of the surplus in this pension fund to help repair the financial condition of the health funds. The decision to transfer funds could only be made and the precise amount of surplus to be transferred determined through a joint decision of the UMWA and the Bituminous Coal Operators' Association [BCOA].

The pension and health funds are supported financially by companies that have participated in the national bituminous coal wage agreements, which have been renegotiated periodically by the BCOA and the UMWA. The BCOA and the UMWA have viewed the imminent health fund crisis with growing concern. To strengthen the financial basis of the funds, the legislation not only authorizes the transfers, but also provides statutory reinforcement for the contractual and other obligations of the companies regarding contributions to the retiree health funds. In this way, the security of each contributor is enhanced by the knowledge that the responsibilities of all contributors will be met.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is timely and it is beneficial. It is fiscally prudent and responsible public policy. I am convinced that it is also necessary to restore confidence in the health and retirement systems that Congress itself has created.

STATEMENT OF THE DALAI LAMA ON RECEIVING THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Nobel Committee in Oslo, Norway, announced that His Holiness the Dalai Lama of Tibet would receive the 1989 Peace Prize for his contribution to world peace, in particular his advocacy of nonviolent, peaceful struggle for recognition of the human rights and political autonomy of the Tibetan people from China.

At a press conference in California yesterday afternoon, the Dalai Lama met with the press and expressed his feelings about the great honor of receiving this award. Mr. Speaker, I insert the remarks of His Holiness the Dalai Lama in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to read them:

REMARKS BY HIS HOLINESS THE FOURTEENTH DALAI LAMA OF TIBET ON BEING AWARDED THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

I am deeply touched to be chosen as this year's recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize. I believe my selection reaffirms the universal values of non-violence, peace and understanding between all members of our great human family. We all desire a happier, more humane and harmonious world, and I have always felt that the practice of love and compassion, tolerance and respect for others is the most effective manner in which to bring this about.

I hope this prize will provide courage to the six million people of Tibet. For some forty years now, Tibetans have been undergoing the most painful period in our long history. During this time, over a million of our people perished and more than six thousand monasteries—the seat of our peaceful culture—were destroyed. There is not a single family, either in Tibet or among the refugees abroad, which has gone unscathed. Yet, our people's determination and commitment to spiritual values and the practice of non-violence remain unshaken. This prize is a profound recognition of their faith and perseverance.

The demonstrations which have rocked Tibet for the past two years continue to be non-violent despite brutal suppression. Since the imposition of martial law in Lhasa last March, Tibet has been sealed off, and while global attention has focused on the tragic events in China, a systematic effort to crush the spirit and national identity of the Tibetan people is being pursued by the government of the People's Republic.

Tibetans today are facing the real possibility of elimination as a people and a nation. The government of the People's Republic of China is practicing a form of genocide by relocating millions of Chinese settlers into Tibet. I ask that this massive population transfer be stopped. Unless the cruel and inhuman treatment of my people is brought to an end, and until they are given their due right to self-determination, there will always be obstacles in finding a solution to the Tibetan issue.

I accept the Nobel Peace Prize in a spirit of optimism despite the many grave problems whch humanity faces today. We all know the immensity of the challenges facing our generation: the problem of overpopulation, the threat to our environment and the dangers of military confrontation. As this dramatic century draws to a close, it is clear that the renewed yearning for freedom and democracy sweeping the globe provides an unprecedented opportunity for building a better world. Freedom is the real source of human happiness and creativity. Only when it is allowed to flourish, can a genuinely stable international climate exist.

The suppression of the rights and freedoms of any people by totalitarian governments is against human nature and the recent movements for democracy in various parts of the world is a clear indication of this.

The Chinese students have given me great hope for the future of China and Tibet. I feel that their movement follows in the tradition of Mahatma Gandhi's ahimsa or nonviolence which has deeply inspired me ever since I was a small boy. The eventual success of all people seekng a more tolerant atmosphere, must derive from a commitment to counter hatred and violence with patience. We must seek change through dialogue and trust. It is my heartfelt prayer that Tibet's plight may be resolved in such a manner and that once again my country, the Roof of the World, may serve as a sanctuary of peace and a resource of spiritual inspiration at the heart of Asia.

I hope and pray that the decision to give me the Nobel Peace Prize will encourage all those who pursue the path of peace to do so in a renewed spirit of optimism and strength.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO ALVIN AND JIM GREENBAUM, OF GREENBAUM INTERIORS, PATERSON, NJ, IN RECOGNITION OF THEIR CONTRIBUTION TO THE CITY OF PATERSON

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, October 12, residents of my congressional district, and the State of New Jersey, as well as former residents of Paterson, NJ, who now live throughout this country, will join together at the third annual reunion of the Paterson Alumni Association to pay tribute to Alvin and Jim Greenbaum, in recognition of their unique contributions to the city of Paterson.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you and our colleagues will want to join with me in extending our warmest greetings and felicitations to Alvin Greenbaum, his good wife Arlene; their children Lori, Richard, and Jane; and to Jim Greenbaum, his good wife Ellen; and their children Susan and David; and on this most joyous occasion join with their families as they honor Alvin and Jim's achievements and contributions to the city of Paterson.

Mr. Speaker, during a period when many of our Nation's urban centers are declining, it is very heartening to point to a family owned retail establishment in Paterson which continues to expand and in so doing demonstrates a commitment to the future of this city.

Mr. Speaker, Alvin and Jim started 37 years ago with 10,000 square feet, and have just completed their fourth major expansion to bring their establishment to 120,000 square feet. They have done this through the acquisition and preservation of several venerable old downtown buildings, including a police station built in 1904, as well as a fire station. Today, Greenbaum Interiors provides jobs for 80 employees, including 40 crafts people who design and make many of the beautiful pieces found in this remarkable building, with its four floors of mazes.

Mr. Speaker, it is well known that downtown shopping centers have developed a poor image among suburban shoppers. Nevertheless, the Greenbaum family has built a design center which attracts to downtown Paterson sophisticated designers and shoppers from all around the world, and they have done this by maintaining high quality standards and by a determination to succeed. And that success has been recognized by awards from such organizations as the American Society of Designers and House Beautiful.

Mr. Speaker, the Greenbaum family has truly been a role model for the business community. For not only have they stayed and grown in Paterson, but they have been active participants in the business and philanthropic life of the city. Their contribution and commitment to the city has been recognized by an award from the Paterson Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the foundation which is honoring the Greenbaums, the Paterson Alumni Association, is very likely a unique organization in the United States. It was founded by a group of childhood friends who shared the feeling that they wanted to give something back to the city which had contributed to their own development and success. And over the past 3 years they have awarded 42 grants totaling $155,000 to 27 Paterson community organizations for programs which seek to improve the quality of life in the city.

Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege and an honor to seek this national recognition of Alvin and Jim Greenbaum, and for their contributions to the city of Paterson. I ask my colleagues here in the Congress to join with me in expressing our most sincere appreciation to these men for their lifetime of commitment to the rich past and bright future of Paterson, NJ.

FREEDOM, FIREARMS, AND THE CHINESE EXPERIENCE

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, our Founding Fathers understood the connection between the right to bear arms and freedom. That's why the second amendment to the U.S. Constitution is vital to a free and open society in America. If the brave prodemocracy students on Tiananmen Square in Beijing, China, has firearms, perhaps the totalitarian Communist Chinese leadership would have had second thoughts about putting down this protest. I would like my colleagues to read this insightful article written by Dr. James H. McGee, published in the Police Marksman. In the debate over restricting the rights of law-abiding citizens access to semiautomatic firearms, I hope that we take Dr. McGee's warnings into consideration.

FREEDOM, FIREARMS AND THE CHINESE EXPERIENCE

(By Dr. James H. McGee)

The upheaval in China has faded from the headlines. The blood has been scrubbed from the pavements of Tiananmen Square and the cry of freedom which captured the imagination of the world has been stifled. The democratic revolution has proven to be as fragile as the paper-mache' and styrofoam copy of the Statue of Liberty which was its visible symbol. The leaders of the revolution are in exile, in hiding—or dead. We Americans may take comfort in the oft-repeated assertion that the events in June represented nothing more than a setback, and that the democratic movement in China must ultimately prevail. But "ultimately" must seem like a distant dream to the Chinese themselves, and distant dreams can scarcely offer anything more than cold comfort.

Since the massacre on June 4, thousands of words have been written and spoken about the "lessons" for Americans of the events in China. Most of these "lessons" have had to do with foreign policy, or business investment, or the perceived strength or weakness of the present Administration. The popular media, however, have all but bypassed the most important lesson taught to us by the Chinese experience. This is, perhaps, hardly surprising, for this lesson has nothing directly to do with China, or foreign policy, or business. It is instead a lesson about the nature of freedom and about how we defend it.

In the weeks prior to the massacre in Beijing, the focus of the Chinese student "revolution" was the assertion of political rights to go with the economic reforms which had characterized the last several years. Our nightly news reports from China became an ongoing illustration of democracy in action. Hundreds of thousands of students and workers, in effect, took our First Amendment to the streets of the Chinese capital and of other major cities throughout the country, defying their dictatorial government to stop them. A generation brought up under Communism rejected the authority of Marx, Mao, and the government which embodied their principles.

But after marveling at the capacity of the demonstrators to deflect the repeated displays of force by the army, we were reminded in a single night of bloodshed of the difference between the display of force and the exercise of force. We were also reminded of a fundamental truth: freedom can only be defended against force with force.

We Americans are conditioned to this basic truth by two centuries of history. We understand—or, at least, we should understand—that there are times when the violence of oppressors has to be met with counter-violence in the cause of freedom. As children we were taught to detest a bully. We find justice and satisfaction in watching the picked-on small child rise up and lay a solid punch in the face of the schoolyard tyrant. We embody the right of self-defense and the obligation to defend others from deadly violence in the deadly force rules which govern those of us who "protect and serve." Thousands of Americans have given their lives protecting not just our own freedom, but, in the words of the Special Forces motto, "to free the oppressed." As products of this American tradition, I am sure that many of us watched the news reports of the massacre in Tiananmen Square with an aching heart, because the Chinese people lacked the means to defend themselves and their newly-asserted democratic rights. As one observer noted, "Banners stand against bullets only so long as the bullets remain unfired."

Our Founding Fathers understood the truth. It is surely no accident that, in the sequence of freedoms addressed in the Bill of Rights, the First Amendment and its guarantee of freedom of speech, freedom of thought, and freedom of assembly—the freedoms which animated the "revolution" in China—was followed by the Second Amendment's protection of the people's right to keep and bear arms. The framers of our Constitution and Bill of Rights understood, from their own direct experience of revolution, that the ultimate protection of our First Amendment democratic rights lay in the fact that an armed citizenry can defend these rights.

It is thus ironic that many of the government and media figures who were so emotionally distraught at the slaughter of defenseless Chinese are, in many instances, the same individuals who are using their considerable degree of influence to ensure that the American people will someday be equally defenseless. The inconsistency of this position is illustrated perfectly by Time magazine, which indulged itself in considerable breast-beating over the vision of armed troops spraying unarmed students with automatic weapons fire and then, more recently, devoted a cover story to a powerfully biased attack upon gun ownership and gun owners in the United States. For my part, I found that, as I watched the news reports of the Beijing massacre, I could not help but wish that the democratic Chinese, by some miracle, could have laid their hands on some of the semi-automatic "assault rifles" that our own government seems bent on taking away from us.

It is doubly ironic that the firearms most under attack by the gun control lobby today are these so-called "assault rifles." Of all the firearms currently available to the American public, these military-style rifles and carbines are precisely the ones which most closely fit the spirit of militia weapons. The Second Amendment was not written, as some seem to think, to protect sporting weapons only; the authors of the Bill of Rights were not overly concerned about our right to shoot deer and ducks. The Second Amendment was written to ensure that the American people would never confront a situation such as that which occurred in China; it was written to prevent government—our own or that of an invading foreign power—from possessing monopoly control of the instruments of force.

At this point in our history it is hard to imagine the U.S. Army wantonly slaughtering American citizens in the streets, and it is equally difficult to envision a hostile invader establishing a beachhead on our shores. But two hundred years ago the Founding Fathers did not know—they could not know—how our political values and our place in the world of nations would evolve. They did not want to take any chances, and nor should we. We cannot know what the future will hold. After all, there are Chinese today who, prior to June 4, could not believe that the "People's Army" would fire upon the people.

January of 1941, as the world sank ever more deeply into the darkness of World War II, President Franklin Roosevelt gave a deeply-moving expression of the cause for which we would find ourselves fighting in his famous "Four Freedoms" speech. This speech has taken its place alongside the Gettysburg Address as one of the clearest statements of what our freedom means. Perhaps the most fundamental of Roosevelt's Four Freedoms was "freedom from fear." In 1941 this meant, first and foremost, freedom from the fear of aggressive dictatorships. In 1989 we can find an even more basic meaning for this most fundamental of freedoms.

Consider an example. Some months ago in Atlanta an elderly couple engaged the services of a strong young man to do yard work. When the time came to pay for his services, a dispute arose. The young man exploded in a rage and began beating the wife. When the husband attempted to intervene, he, too, was viciously beaten. The wife died from her beating and the husband was left insensible. The disparity in force between one healthy and muscular young man and two retirees in their seventies resembles nothing so much as the difference between armed troops and unarmed students—and the result was the same. During this same timeframe, the so-called "wilding" episodes, where joggers were brutally beaten and raped by gangs of youths, reminded all of us of our vulnerability. These are not isolated incidents. They exemplify what has become a daily occurence in this country, and they illustrate why the phrase "freedom from fear" has become a mockery in the everyday lives of the elderly, the weak, and the defenseless. Overworked and undersupported police departments throughout the country perform valiantly in their efforts to protect the public, but the police cannot be everywhere at once; among themselves, police officers candidly acknowledge that they frequently arrive on the scene only after the worst has happened. If we, as individuals, lack the means to defend ourselves, then truly we cannot enjoy "freedom from fear."

Despite the propaganda of the gun control lobby, more and more Americans are recognizing this simple fact. The positive response received by Smith & Wesson to its introduction of the "Ladysmith" series of handguns is but one indication that women no longer accept the idea that their only defense from attack is a loud scream. In my part of the country police are trying to build a case against a man suspected of being the "Green River Killer," believed to have murdered dozens of women. And his prototype, Ted Bundy, may have killed over a hundred women before he was brought to justice. What a difference it would have made in the lives of the victims of these men and their families if the first victim in each case had been armed and ready to defend herself.

The assault rifle issue is just the latest version of an ongoing attack upon our right to keep and bear arms, a right which exists as the final protection of our other basic rights as a free people. As members of the law enforcement community we should not be deflected from our support for this right by ill-considered rationalizations about disarming street gangs or drug-traffickers. Once we as Americans lose our right to possess the means to defend ourselves, our other freedoms—like those of the people of China and of countless other countries around the world—will exist only at the whim of the criminal on the one hand and the political elite on the other.

GERMAN-AMERICAN DAY

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, the people of my hometown of Louisville, KY, can take a special pride in marking October 6, 1989, as the celebration of "German-American Day."

That sense of pride springs from the traditions and diversity of ethnic and cultural heritages which have come together in Louisville. As in other American cities and towns it's a patchwork quilt that has given, and continues to give, strength and vitality to our community.

Americans of German descent have played major roles in Louisville's history. Though use of the German language may have disappeared altogether, architectural landmarks, industries, and customs remain as tangible evidence of the strong German influence in Louisville.

Much of the German migration to our area occurred in the mid-to-late 1800's. Germantown and "Butchertown" became well-defined working class neighborhoods, growing up around the meat-processing industry primarily. This commercial activity encouraged and brought along with it a range of skilled craftsmen and related businesses. "Shotgun" houses, Gothic church steeples, festivals, choruses, and social clubs evoke the spirit, then and now, of the rich German heritage in our midst.

For more than a decade, Louisville has maintained a sister city relationship with Mainz, West Germany. Student and cultural exchanges from both cities further cement the common ties which join our two communities.

This weekend the 20th annual Oktoberfest will be held in Butchertown. It is not only an event to celebrate German traditions, but it offers an opportunity to raise money for civic and charitable activities. And, it will be my honor and pleasure to host two members of the West German Bundestag who are visiting in Louisville for some of the festival's activities.

The German heritage in my hometown has been important and enduring. So, as one who is proud to represent the city of Louisville in the House, I am pleased also to be a sponsor of House Joint Resolution 104, which designates October 6, 1989, as "German-American Day" and pays tribute to the many contributions made to our own history, our way of life, and culture by Americans of German descent.

PASSAGE TO FREEDOM

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a special campaign entitled "Passage to Freedom." This program helps in paying for the many services and programs that are needed by the Soviet Jews throughout the migration period. The passage is open, but the journey has just begun.

For many years, American Jews have been a part of the movement to free Soviet Jews. They have demonstrated and marched, written letters, signed petitions, stood silent vigil and shouted, "Let our people go!" Their cries reverberate from all over the world.

This year thousands of Soviet Jews are expected to flood through the gates that have held them back for so long. Most Jews leave the Soviet Union with virtually no financial assets due to Government regulations as well as years of refusal in loss of employment. "Passage to Freedom" assists in the transition by providing basic needs: housing, medical care, language instruction, and job placement.

There could be as many as 2 million Jews still left in the Soviet Union. Unfortunately, there is no way of knowing if the Soviets will close the gates of freedom. If it happens, it could be tomorrow. Therefore, the time is now to provide whatever assistance is needed, whenever it is needed.

I am proud to acknowledge individuals from my district who are responsible for this tremendous campaign: David Schaecter, Mikki Futernick, Norman H. Lipoff, Dorothy Podhurst, and Michael Scheck. With the continued devotion of their movement, Soviet Jews can move toward an everlasting passage to freedom.

IN HONOR OF MARION DEVLIN

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Marion Devlin, a distinguished journalist from Vallejo, CA, who will celebrate her 80th birthday on October 27.

Ms. Devlin, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Devlin, was born in 1909 at her family's home in Vallejo, CA. A graduate of the Berkeley Anna Head School in 1927, Ms. Devlin worked on the college newspaper the Daily Californian.

Following her graduation, Ms. Devlin accepted an offer from the late Luther E. Gibson to work as society editor of the Vallejo Evening Chronicle in 1931. Later, the society page became the Panorama section of women's news in the Vallejo Times Herald, and under Ms. Devlin's guidance, the Panorama section received the "Best in the State" award on 10 occasions from the California Newspaper Publishers Association.

Throughout her career, Ms. Devlin has had the remarkable opportunity to meet and interview numerous celebrities, including three reining queens: Elizabeth of Great Britain, Juliana of The Netherlands, and Fredericka of Greece. She attended the coronation of Queen Elizabeth in 1953 representing the Times Herald and the wedding of Prince Charles and Diana in 1981 for the Vallejo Independent Press. Two years later, Ms. Devlin had the distinction of serving as an official press representative when Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip visited San Francisco in 1983.

Not only has Ms. Devlin had the chance to visit with and interview foreign dignitaries, she has also interviewed four of the most prominent first ladies of this century. She received an exclusive interview with Eleanor Roosevelt during the First Lady's World War II visit to the Mare Island Hospital. The other First Ladies included Mamie Eisenhower, Lady Bird Johnson, and Nancy Reagan. Finally, Ms. Devlin has interviewed a number of Hollywood stars, including Mary Pickford, Clark Gable, Gregory Peck, and Shirley Temple.

Notwithstanding her success at working the celebrity beat, Ms. Devlin has written many stories on the military. She represented the Times Herald on flights as a guest of the Army, Navy, and Air Force. Ms. Devlin also flew on the Navy's maiden flight of the Constitution JATO, jet-assisted takeoff, and during the Korean war, she was the only reporter invited by the Air Force on an air evacuation flight ferrying wounded soldiers from the Korean front to military hospitals.

In addition to being a journalist, Ms. Devlin has also left her mark in the Vallejo area through volunteer activities. Some of the organizations that she has worked with include the Soroptimist International of Vallejo, the Children's Hospital Medical Center of Northern California, the Vallejo Naval and Historical Museum, and the Vallejo Merchants Association. Because of her tremendous contributions to the Vallejo community, Ms. Devlin has received numerous awards including the "Women Helping Women" award presented by Soroptimist International of Vallejo in 1975 and the "Woman of the Year" award from the Vallejo-Benicia Area Council of Beta Sigma Phi in 1978.

Marion Devlin is truly an outstanding member of the Vallejo community and I know my colleagues join me today in saluting all her many accomplishments and wishing her a happy 80th birthday.

TRIBUTE TO DAVE DRAVECKY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual and close family friend, Dave Dravecky.

Faced with incredible obstacles, Dave Dravecky has fought back with amazing courage and determination. While pitching for the San Francisco Giants, a lump on his pitching arm was diagnosed as cancerous. David had to go through a painful operation to have the tumor removed. The surgery took much of the deltoid muscle from his left arm. Although he was told there was little hope he would ever pitch again, he refused to give up and turned to his faith in God to face the agony of rehabilitation. Ten months later, his prayers were answered, and it seemed as if all the pain and effort had been worth it. Dave reentered the game of baseball by way of a 20-day rehabilitation in the minor leagues. He started out with class A San Jose and shutout the local team in Stockton, CA, on July 23. From there, Dave worked his way back into the limelight.

On August 10, Dave Dravecky returned to the major league greeted by cheering fans. The Giants won the game 4 to 3. Five days later he returned to the mound, but this time something went wrong. While delivering a fastball, Dave's humerus bone snapped. He had been warned that his arm was weakened by the surgery, yet he loved the game too much to give up. Despite the break, doctors are optimistic that the bone will heal and become stronger than it had been following the cancer surgery. It is generally believed that Dave Dravecky will be able to return to the game by spring training of next year.

The outstanding faith and courage this man has shown throughout the past year are deserving of great praise. His tremendous accomplishments and determination make him an American hero. I am proud to call him my friend and pay him tribute today.

TRIBUTE TO JOSEPH P. AND EILEEN MIELE

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Commissioners Joseph P. and Eileen Miele, of Mendham, NJ, who have been selected by the Italian Tribune News, Newark, NJ, as its "1989 Man and Woman of the Year." The Mieles are only the second couple to receive this distinguished award, sharing this honor with Mr. and Mrs. Bob Hope. A full day of festivities, including a Columbus Day parade, which attracts over 200,000 spectators, as well as a gala banquet, will highlight the 1989 Columbus Day celebration to be held on October 8 at which Mr. and Mrs. Miele will be honored.

J.P. Miele, a partner in the law firm of Miele, Cooper, Spinrad & Kronberg, of Millburn, and a commissioner on the New Jersey Highway Authority, is an executive officer of over 30 private corporations worldwide. Eileen Miele serve as a commissioner on the New Jersey Board of Cosmetology and Hairstying, personally overseeing the examinations of thousands of future cosmetologists throughout New Jersey. They actively participate in numerous charitable and civic endeavors including serving as trustees of the New Jersey Pops; cochairpeople of the Garden State Arts Center's Annual Spring Ball; members of the board of trustees of Little Hill Foundation; a nationally recognized drug and alcoholic rehabilitation center in Blairstown; and are the founders of the Joseph P. Lordi Memorial Scholarship Fund at Seton Hall University School of Law.

Mr. and Mrs. Miele are truly outstanding Italian-Americans who continously demonstrate their deep concern and commitment to helping those in need. The Italian Tribune News has made an excellent choice is selecting these individuals as the "1989 Man and Woman of the Year."

BISONS PROVE BUFFALO IS MAJOR LEAGUE CITY

HON. BILL PAXON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute the Buffalo Bisons—Buffalo, NY's contribution to the great American pastime.

This minor league baseball team enjoys the major league support of the people of Buffalo and western New York.

This year the Bisons drew more than 1 million fans for the second consecutive year, shattering American Association attendance records. The Bisons are the first minor league team to have more than 1 million fans pass through the turnstyles in back to back seasons.

In 1989, 1,132,183 Bison fans watched their team post their best record ever. The Bisons finished 80 and 62 for the season—finishing a close second in the competitive American Association.

For the past 2 years, enthusiastic Bison fans have gone to watch their team play at Pilot Field—Buffalo's brandnew baseball stadium located in the very heart of downtown. Pilot Field, an architectural gem reminiscent of the old-fashioned baseball stadiums of yesterday, is one of America's finest ballparks.

The Bisons have demonstrated unequivocally that Buffalo is ready for a major league baseball team. Buffalo and western New York have the fans, we have the stadium, and since Buffalo has more sunshine during the summer months than any city with a baseball team in the American League East, we have the weather for a big league team.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not congratulate Bisons' owner, Mr. Bob Rich, Jr., and the entire Bisons organization for their success. Thanks to Bob, the people of Buffalo and western New York have one more thing to be proud of—their Buffalo Bisons.

Mr. Speaker, the Buffalo Bisons have proven, once again, that Buffalo is indeed a major league city.

THE INTERSTATE GREYHOUND RACING ACT OF 1989

HON. JIM SLATTERY

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, October 6, 1989

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce that I am today introducing a bill, the Interstate Greyhound Racing Act of 1989, which will regulate interstate commerce with respect to the interstate simulcasting of greyhound racing.

Eleven years ago a similar bill, the Interstate Horseracing Act of 1978, was considered by the U.S. House of Representatives and passed by a voice vote. The U.S. Senate also passed the Interstate Horseracing Act of 1978 by voice vote. The only major difference between my bill and that passed in 1978 is that today we are extending to greyhound owners the same protections given the horsemen in 1978.

Mr. Speaker, my bill does not require any Federal money. It does not create any new agency of government and it does not legalize off-track betting. The States legalize off-track betting.

My bill does provide that an interstate wager on a greyhound race taking place in one Statse may not be placed with an off-track betting office in another State without the consent of the following: the racetrack where the race is to be run, the racing commission of the State where the race is to be run, and the racing commission of the State where the off-track betting office is located.

Consent cannot be given by the racetrack where the race is run in disregard of the interests of the greyhound owners. My bill requires the racetrack where the race is to be run to have a written agreement with the greyhound owners' group, setting forth the terms and conditions allowing the track to give its consent to an interstate wager with an off-track betting system in another State.

This issue was succinctly covered during Senate floor consideration of the Interstate Horseracing Act of 1978 by the then senior Senator from Kentucky, the Honorable Walter D. Huddleston, wherein he stated:

In essence, this bill regulates the acceptance of an interstate off-track wager that is placed or accepted in one State on the outcome of a horserace taking place in another State.

The bill prohibits such wagering unless all the parties involved in racing—the track, the horsemen, the off-track betting interests, and the racing commissions of the States involved—agree, either directly or indirectly, regarding the terms and conditions of such wagering. This bill will prevent an off-track betting system in one State from using a race in another State without the permission of the parties that have a "proprietary" interest in that race.

Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about reports that greyhound races have been simulcast to interstate off-track betting locations without the consent or agreement of the greyhound owners. These owners have the same proprietary interest as the horsemen, and my bill seeks to protect those interests to the same extent that horsemen are now protected.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation.

Few of us are aware that over 26 million people visited the 48 greyhound racetracks in the United States in 1988. Even more important to the 14 States involved was the fact that greyhound racing contributed over $225 million to State and county governments. This figure does not include the millions of dollars produced through payroll taxes and sales taxes generated at the track as well as at local motels, restaurants, gasoline stations, and other greyhound-related businesses.

Greyhound racing is the sixth largest spectator sport in America and it is growing every day. My own State of Kansas has been the home of the National Greyhound Association for many years, but it was not until this year that Kansas, along with Texas and Wisconsin, actually began the planning and construction of 10 new greyhound tracks. Interestingly enough, a greyhound racetrack that generates a handle of more than $500,000 will employ a minimum of 600 people. Greyhound racing is a parimutuel spectator sport that creates employment, produces taxes, and provides entertainment.

The sole registry for the racing greyhound on the North American Continent is the National Greyhound Association [NGA]. The NGA s a voluntary, nonprofit association operated in accordance with the laws of Kansas. It was organized in 1906 and its membership today is in excess of 6,000 owners and breeders whose greyhounds compete at tracks throughout the continent. The NGA maintains records of all breedings, litters whelped, individual registrations, transfers, and leases. Their rigid identification system has played an integral role in maintaining the sport's impressive reputation as a creditable, major spectator sport. The NGA is an associate member of the World Greyhound Racing Federation and a charter and founding member of the World Alliance of Greyhound Registries and the American Greyhound Council.

The greyhound has its origins deep rooted in the lands that cradled earliest civilization. Murals and paintings suggest that the greyhound of today was around some 4,000 years ago. He was the subject of art, lore, sport, and entertainment in the ancient civilizations of Egypt, Persia, Greece, Rome, and later in England and Ireland. Cleopatra championed greyhound hunting and coursing—racing, however, it was not until the 1700's that the first formal rules of greyhound coursing were initiated by Queen Elizabeth I. The support of Cleopatra and Elizabeth I has been the basis for referring to greyhound racing as the Sport of Queens.

SENATE—Saturday, October 7, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 10 a.m. on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable TERRY SANFORD, a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

On this sabbath day, let us praise the Lord.

Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all. Both riches and honour come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all. Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name.—I Chronicles 29:11-13.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 7, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable TERRY SANFORD, a Senator from the State of North Carolina, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. SANFORD thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators we will shortly be considering the Interior appropriations conference report. Rollcall votes are expected today on that measure. We hope to complete it under the existing time agreement by some time early this afternoon.

As I indicated to Senators last evening, while that is occurring, Members on both sides of the aisle, along with House leaders, will be meeting to attempt to reach agreement on the best way to proceed with respect to the reconciliation bill.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as though in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PENDING AMENDMENTS TO THE CLEAN AIR ACT ACID RAIN PROVISIONS

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am here today to discuss before the full Senate an absolutely vital component for any successful plan to eliminate acid rain—that is, regional equity.

I would like to start by saying that I admire the work of the distinguished chairman of the Environment and Public Works Subcommittee on Environmental Protection, Senator MAX BAUCUS, as well as our esteemed majority leader and the other members of that committee, for their diligent work in grappling with the momentous task of cleaning up our Nation's air. They have done a great deal of work already, and certainly we are closer than we have ever been to making the necessary amendments to the Clean Air Act of 1970. I support them in their efforts to strengthen the Clean Air Act. Balancing the needs of our environment with what is technologically and economically possible is a most difficult task. So it is in the spirit of cooperation that I would like to share my view of what must be included in the acid rain bill the Environment and Public Works Committee will report.

The substantial shift in the administration's views on the environment has put the Congress and the President in agreement for the first time in this decade that we must strengthen our clean air regulations. The real trick now is to do so without unfairly pitting the economic livelihood of one region of the country against another.

The President's acid rain bill is a case in point for an unfair means of seeking a very good end. The good part of the President's plan is that it achieves fairly significant sulfur dioxide reductions—but it does so at the unnecessary expense of tens of thousands of Midwestern and Southeastern jobs, and by raising some midwestern utility rates by up to 20 percent. The Bush bill hands 77 percent of the bill for cleaning up acid rain to nine Midwestern and Southeastern States that are responsible for 51 percent of the problem. Despite the President's stated intentions, there is nothing financially fair about his bill.

There is another bill pending in the Senate that actually concentrates the costs of an acid rain bill even more than the President's bill would because it gets all of the first phase reductions out of 20 utility plants, rather than from the 107 plants that the President proposed. I support seeking reductions in the most economical method possible. If that means targeting the Midwest, then it only makes sense that we utilize our resources there first. But it also only makes sense that if the Midwest is asked to make a disproportionate share of this country's investment in acid rain control, that the other beneficiaries of the investment share in the down payment.

I believe that the most economically efficient means of achieving maximum sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide reductions is to provide some incentives for utilities to achieve good up-front reductions in the early years. This could be achieved through the creation of a fund to finance the capital costs of technology that removes pollutants from coal.

Whenever discussion turns to the subject of sharing the costs of solving our national acid rain problem, inevitably foul cries of "polluter pay" echo from States that would be expected to anteup under any reasonably constructed cost-sharing plan. I accept the premise that the polluter should pay, but I take issue with anyone who would suggest that a State should be expected to pay out of proportion to the pollution it emits. The two acid rain bills pending in the Senate require my State of Illinois to pay far in excess of its contribution to the problem. Annually over 20 million tons of sulfur dioxide is released into the air nationally. My State of Illinois is responsible for about 4.7 percent of that amount, but legislative initiatives in the Senate seek to have Illinois reduce its contribution nearly 9 percent, while other polluters make little or no reductions. Congressman PHIL SHARP's recent Washington Post commentary brought to light that under the President's plan, the State of Texas, which has the largest overall emissions of nitrogen oxides, and greater emissions of sulfur dioxide than my own State, is exempted from any reduction requirements and costs associated with the national effort to eliminate acid rain. It is not fair that certain polluting States should get a free ride on my State's investment to control a national problem.

My State, as well as other Midwestern States, have already paid a dear price for controlling acid precipitation. Just yesterday I received notice from an Illinois coal company announcing that it regrettably is laying off 18 percent of its work force because proposed legislation has reduced its production outlook. This follows on top of a steady decline in market share for the high sulfur high Btu coal my State produces. Just 5 years ago Illinois coal mines directly employed 18,000 people, but today only 13,000 remain. The President's proposed legislation is expected to cut Illinois' coal production in half, resulting in 19,000 to 23,000 direct and indirect job losses. We must not needlessly legislate folks in the Midwest out of a job. If the same bills pending in the Senate were to provide for regional equity, over half of the job loss could be avoided in the Midwest.

In addition to job losses, the ratepayers in Illinois have already paid a price for clean air. It is simply not true that the Midwest has burned cheap high sulfur coal with wanton abandon while enjoying the low rates it affords. The northern part of my State has the highest residential rates in the country. A very costly commitment to nuclear power and low sulfur coal in my State is responsible for these high rates. Furthermore, four Illiniois utilities have made the substantial investment to install scrubbers. The State of Illinois has invested over $100 million to date on clean coal technologies. Since Illinois already has some of the highest utility rates in the country, it can ill afford to shoulder the costs, along with just a few other States, of remedying the Nation's acid rain problem.

Another issue associated with regional equity is the control of nitrogen oxides on cyclone boilers. This type of boiler was designed specifically for the kind of coal mined in my State. Currently there is no economically viable means of controlling NO_x these boilers. The Senate should keep this in mind in crafting its NO_x control provisions. By all means I support NO_x controls on any and all types of boilers if such controls are in the realm of the possible.

Every taxpayer in this country is being asked to pay for the bailout of bankrupt savings and loan institutions. It is recognized that Texas and California require a great deal more assistance than other States. The citizens of my State are not happy about sharing the huge costs of the bailout because they did not do anything to contribute to the delinquencies of banks in the West and Southwest; yet everybody is paying because it is a national problem. Similarly, it was at national expense that the hydro power of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Pacific Northwest was built. Acid rain is a national problem that requires a national solution.

I can only support legislation that recognizes that it is both possible and necessary to fairly allocate the costs of eliminating acid rain. All polluters must pay their fair share. Those who have already made costly investments in nuclear, low sulfur coal, or scrubbers should have that effort accounted for. I am convinced that in this manner we can have both jobs and a clean environment.

SUPPORT FOR S. 1726, THE CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE BILL

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate overwhelmingly approved S. 1726, the McCain catastrophic health care bill. I am proud to be a cosponsor of that measure.

The Senate responded to a major challenge. Before us were two major questions: How do we best address the health care needs of our senior and disabled citizens? And more specifically, how do we provide for those needs when using the limited available resources that are financed by those citizens?

Opposition to the surtax in the Catastrophic Act has been addressed in this body on several occasions. Earlier this year, I voted with the majority for the sense-of-the-Senate amendment which directed the Finance Committee to make some changes in the Medicare Coverage Act, including modification of the surtax provision.

Opposition to the surtax has come up over and over in each of my townhall meetings back in Illinois. I have heard more opposition to the surtax requirement than any other issue during these meetings. Therefore, relieving our senior and disabled citizens from this burden was high on my legislative agenda.

Yesterday, I supported S. 1726. I did so, Mr. President, because it repeals the surtax while it maintains many of the core benefits of the catastrophic program. The bill retains those benefits which I believe our elderly and disabled citizens want as the best benefits for their bucks.

S. 1726 repeals the surtax and retains such benefits as unlimited hospitalization, spousal impoverishment protection, mammography screening, and protection for the poor. I believe, Mr. President, that this legislation is a viable alternative to the existing act.

I want to compliment Senator MCCAIN for his persistence in keeping this issue before the Senate. I believe that together we have reached a compromise which a majority of our senior and disabled Medicare beneficiaries support.

RETIREMENT OF DR. JOE CONNELLY, PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL SCIENCE, EASTERN ILLINOIS UNIVERSITY

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I would like to call the Senate's attention to an individual who is retiring from an outstanding and notable teaching career at Eastern Illinois University in Charleston, IL.

I refer, Mr. President, to Dr. Joe Connelly, professor of political science, whose contributions cannot be justly measured in mere words.

For 30 years, he has been training some of the brightest minds in Illinois for an active life in politics and helping cultivate what is now a legacy of Illinois political figures.

Joe Connelly has not only taught with distinction, he has also lived and served with distinction. In the early 1950's, he was elected as a Democrat to the urbana city council in a Republican dominated ward. He then went on to serve as a precinct committeeman and town board member in Charleston. In 1964, he was elected to the Illinois House on the famous "bedsheet ballot," where 236 Democratic and Republican candidates were slated for 177 positions. I would like to add that Joe finished fifth that year—right behind two honorable former Members of the U.S. Congress, Senator Adlai Stevenson and Congressman Abner Mikva.

Joe did not stop with the Illinois State Legislature. He was elected Democratic chairman of Coles County in 1970 and held the seat until 1984, while chairing the political science department at Eastern. In 1982, he also won a seat to the Illinois State Central Committee.

Unlike some academicians, Joe gave his students a real-world political savvy, which is both true-to-life and true-to-his-vision. Helping others and dealing directly with people has always been his game. As he says, "There's nothing mysterious about it. It's door-to-door. Face-to-face. To me with politics, the secret is always face-to-face contact."

Mr. President, Eastern Illinois University is, indeed, losing a tremendous teacher and political master.

On a personal level, let me mention that Joe Connelly has served as my statewide campaign committee director since 1981. I could not ask for a more dedicated and loyal friend.

Joe once said, "Politics is worthwhile, is fascinating and wherever I could provide access for my students, I did, for Democrats and Republicans." His faith in our political system is refreshing and encouraging, Mr. President, and I am grateful for the opportunity to honor this man, whom Illinois values so much. I wish him the very best in all he pursues.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the conference report on H.R. 2788, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year 1990, and for other purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2788) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of October 2, 1989, see page 22674.)

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous ordered, as we proceed to H.R. 2788, all time is controlled on the conference report. Mr. BYRD has control of 30 minutes and Mr. MCCLURE, 30 minutes; it is further agreed by unanimous consent that the vote on the conference report will be delayed until after discussion of the Helms amendment. Mr. HELMS will have 45 minutes and Mr. BYRD 45 minutes.

On the Gorton amendment which will follow, Mr. GORTON has 30 minutes; Mr. ADAMS 15 minutes; and Mr. FOWLER 15 minutes.

The Senator from West Virginia is recognized

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does Mr. GORTON have an amendment. It is is my understanding he just wanted to speak.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on amendment No. 167.

Mr. BYRD. So he does not have an amendment. He wants to speak on amendment No. 167.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I bring before the Senate the conference report on H.R. 2788, the Department of the Interior and related agencies appropriation bill for fiscal year 1990.

This conference report is only the second of 13 regular appropriation bills that the committee must bring to the Senate. Eleven others remain to be completed within the next few weeks. The task to complete these conference reports before the continuing resolution expires on October 25, 1989, will be difficult. We will need the cooperation of every Senator if the Congress is to fulfill its responsibilities under article I of the Constitution before that date.

Turning to the measures before us today, the conference report totals $10,889,955,000 in domestic discretionary budgetary authority and $10,347,632,000 in associated outlays. These figures are slightly under the Interior Subcommittee's revised allocations under section 302(b) of the Budget Impoundment and Control Act of 1974.

The Interior conference report is the resolution of the President's budget request, approximately 2,200 amendment requests in the House of Representatives and more than 2,000 requests submitted to the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Obviously the committees, and subsequently the appropriations conferees, were not able to accommodate all of these requests. Nonetheless, I believe that the conference report on H.R. 2788 represents a fair and balanced compromise of the interests of the two bodies.

Mr. President, in resolving these difference, it has been a pleasure to work with Senator JIM MCCLURE, the ranking Republican on the Senate Interior Subcommittee. His thorough knowledge of the bill would be an asset to any chairman. I am the fortunate beneficiary. Senator MCCLURE was confronted with many difficult personal choices during the conference proceedings. Throughout, he conducted himself with diplomacy, fairness, and bipartisanship which reflect credit on the Senate.

Throughout the 3-day conference, we considered and resolved many issues which were contentious. Some disputes involved different regions of the country; some disputes, such as the spotted owl and Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas leasing, involved conflicts between development and environmental interests; some dealt with matters of obscenity and religion; and some dealt with matters upon which the House and Senate hold fundamentally different views. Throughout the conference, the House subcommittee chairman, SIDNEY YATES, and the ranking Republican member, RALPH REGULA, were fair, courteous, and cooperative.

Mr. President, I would like to highlight, for the attention of the Senate, a few items in the conference agreement.

First, Mr. President, I am happy to advise the Senate that the conference agreement includes the truth in lobbying amendment which I offered in the subcommittee markup of this measure earlier this year.

This amendment, which will now become permanent law upon enactment of this appropriation measure, will prohibit recipients of Federal grants, contracts, and so forth, from using Federal funds to pay persons to influence, or attempt to influence, executive or legislative decisionmaking in connection with the awarding of any contract, grant, and so forth.

The provision will also require that any person requesting or receiving a Federal grant or contract, and so forth, must report with the relevant agency the name and address of any such lobbyist paid with non-Federal funds, the amount of such payment, the source of funds from which such payment was made, and the purpose for which the lobbyist was paid.

All Federal agencies will report this information semiannually beginning May 31, 1990, to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House. It will then be made available to the public within 30 days.

A civil penalty of up to $100,000 will apply to each violation of the prohibition on the use of Federal funds to pay lobbyists and for each failure to report the information required when lobbyists are paid with non-Federal funds.

Mr. President, I believe that this is a critical step in bringing executive branch lobbying out into the open. It will, for the first time, provide the agencies themselves, the Congress, and the American people, with the names, addresses, amounts paid, and the purposes for which lobbyists were paid in connection with applicants for Federal grants.

The HUD scandals, as well as other revelations in recent months, make it abundantly clear that back channels have been used by lobbyists to funnel millions of dollars toward their clients, regardless of merit. The inspector general at HUD advised me that had this amendment been in place during the HUD scandals, it would have been a substantial deterrent.

Mr. President, I recently received a report entitled "Executive Branch Lobbying" from the independent counsel in the Michael Deaver case. This report was submitted to Congress on September 6 by Mr. Whitney North Seymour, Jr., the independent counsel in the Deaver case. Mr. Seymour submitted the report pursuant to the statute which created the Office of the Independent Counsel. I recommend it highly to all Senators.

In a cover letter accompanying the report, the following statements are made:

First, the most serious need is to do something about the lobbying itself. Federal agencies are gold mines for highly placed political operators who sell private access to Government decisionmakers. Defense contractors, real estate developers, large corporations, and other well-heeled special interests pay huge fees for such access, with no one being the wiser.

Second, our report to Congress contains one key recommendation: bring lobbying of the executive branch out into the open where it can be watched and monitored by the public, the press, and the Congress. Stop influence peddlers from operating in secret behind closed doors where nobody is looking.

Third, we urge Congress to bring executive branch lobbying out into the open where it will be subject to public scrutiny. Eliminate secret, back channel government where rich and powerful interests can get the private ears of Government officials with nobody else listening.

Fourth, if that one change can be accomplished, our entire effort in the Deaver case will have been worthwhile. If that one change can be accomplished, much of the need for independent counsel in the future may perhaps be eliminated. The key is to deter misconduct by the public disclosure of lobbying activities.

Mr. President, the provisions in this conference agreement will bring executive branch lobbying out in the open as it relates to appropriated funds.

More needs to be done, however. This provision does not address lobbying as it relates to authorizing issues or to Federal rulemaking, regulations, and so forth, that flow from authorization bills.

If we are to close the loop and have comprehensive coverage of all lobbying, we need to enact legislation that covers these other areas. I am confident that the Governmental Affairs Committee, under the able leadership of Senator GLENN, will take up this matter in the near future.

Second, Mr. President, the conferees dealt with the very difficult issue of obscenity standards related to federally supported works of art. After long discussions in the conference, and after further discussion here on the Senate floor last week, the conferees have recommended compromise language which modifies the original Helms amendment to the Senate bill, and which establishes a commission to review the appropriate standards and grant-making procedures of both the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities. I want to emphasize that, while it may not be clear in the statement of the managers, the conferees expect this Commission to review the procedures of both agencies.

The Commission is to be composed of four members recommended by the President pro tempore of the Senate, four members recommended by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and four members recommended by the President. Before making my recommendations as the President pro tempore, I will, of course, consult with both the majority and minority leaders. In this way the Commission should have a balanced bipartisan character.

The language does ban the expenditure of funds by the endowments for art and literature which is considered to be obscene, including, but not limited to images or verse that depict "sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value."

The language adopted by the managers is less inclusive and less strongly worded than that in the original Helms amendment. The language in the conference report is the product of compromise. It represents a very difficult task to bring differing views together in support of one legislative position. On that basis, I support the compromise as the strongest language which the conferees would accept.

Third, Mr President, the conferees have proposed compromise language which modifies the original spotted owl proposal in the Senate bill by Senators HATFIELD and ADAMS. The new language reduces the timber sale offer volume by 300 million board feet, expands the size of habitat protection areas for the spotted owl, and directs expedited judicial proceedings for timber sales challenged on the merits during 1990. Further details are explained in the statement of the managers.

Fourth, Mr. President, the conference agreement contains the full $1,775,000,000 necessary for the conduct of the third, fourth, and fifth clean coal technology soliciations by the Department of Energy. This funding, together with prior appropriations for the first and second solicitations, makes an aggregate funding level of $2,747,600,000 for the 5-year Clean Coal Technology Program. Approval of these funds is consistent with the President's budget request and is a very appropriate investment in America's energy future as well as a cleaner environment.

Fifth, the conferees have included, as proposed by both the House and Senate, funding for Indian settlements enacted during the 100th Congress. These total $191.9 million, and are detailed in a table which I ask unanimous consent be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

White Earth land settlement	$513,000
Old age assistance	742,000
Payment to Tohono O'odham	12,700,000
Colorado Ute	19,500,000
San Luis Rey	32,124,000
Salt River Pima-Maricopa.	23,735,000
Hoopa-Yurok	10,000,000
Aleutian-Pribilof	15,300,000
Puyallup	77,250,000
Total	191,864,000

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in addition, by way of further clarification, the conferees on the fiscal year 1990 Interior and related agencies appropriations bill included $6 million to initiate a stewardship project in the State and Private Forestry Program of the Forest Service. The objective of this effort is to increase productivity on the Nation's private nonindustrial forestlands while encouraging sound environmental management practices. Only 1 out of 4 acres on such lands is reforested following harvest.

In recommending its level of funding for this program, the House had earmarked $750,000 to be divided equally between Washington and Oregon. During conference consideration of this program, the managers discussed not providing specific earmarks for any State. The managers intended that the Forest Service allocate the funds provided in such a manner as to not rely solely on a distribution formula that uses current acreages. In addition, the Forest Service should also consider as a distribution factor the increasing demands that will be placed on private, nonindustrial forest lands, particularly in the Pacific Northwest. As traditional sources of public timber become less available, these lands will be looked to as a further source of timber supply in the years to come.

In closing, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a table summarizing comparisons of budget authority by agency in the final conference agreement and recommend that Members refer to House Report 101-264, the conference report and accompanying statement of the managers for H.R. 2788, which was printed in the House RECORD of October 2, 1989.

There being no objection, the comparison was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to thank the chairman for his excellent work on this bill. While he was so busy handing out accolades to others, no one should overlook the fact that the chairman bears a unique and heavy responsibility in the time that he and his staff devote to this work. No one has ever devoted themselves more single-mindedly to that task than has Senator BYRD, the chairman of the subcommittee.

During the past several years, his responsibilities on the floor as majority and minority leader kept him from devoting a great deal of time on this bill, but this time he devoted his full energies to it, and I am extremely pleased that he did. Both the taxpayers and the Senate are better served because of his efforts.

I also would like to take a moment to mention the excellent staff of the chairman. He is well served with the professionalism and loyalty of Jim English, Charlie Estes, Sue Masica, Rusty Mathews, Dan Salisbury, and Shannon Skripka. They are an excellent team. Without their expertise, we would not have completed the work on this bill. I hope they now have some time to enjoy their families and their weekends.

Mr. President, as the Senator from West Virginia indicated, with the reallocation of funds this bill is within $10.5 million of the budget authority ceiling of $10.9 billion and $2.4 million within the outlay ceiling of $10.350 billion.

As I stated when this bill was on the floor in July, since the President's budget was released in January of this year, this subcommittee received over 2,200 requests from Members of the Senate for items which are not in the budget. This is an increase over the fiscal year 1989 number of 1,700 requests and the fiscal year 1986 level of 700. Simply put, Mr. President, our allocation did not allow us to fund all of these requests. We did the very best we could and I hope that Senators would analyze their meritorious projects and propose them in the fiscal year 1991 cycle.

One of the most controversial items that the conferees debated was the question of Federal funding of obscene art. The conferees debated a variety of language proposals on this subject for several days. While I am not completely satisfied with the language included in this conference report, it does set a standard for fiscal year 1990 and it initiates a discussion for a standard in the future.

Mr. President, there is no question that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia is correct. That is the strongest language we could get through the conference. While it is not as strong as that which the Senate had adopted, the other body simply would not accept the position that the Senate had stated.

So while I may be less than completely satisfied with that language, it was the strongest language the conferees could agree upon.

For fiscal year 1990, the conferees agreed on bill language restricting grants to the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities to fund obscenity. The best way to describe this language is to simply read it.

None of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials which in the judgment of the National Environment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be considered obscene including but not limited to, depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.

In addition to this language for fiscal year 1990, the conference report establishes a commission designated to study the grantmaking procedures to determine what standards should become permanent standards. The commission will also consider whether the standard for publicly funded art should be different from the standard for privately funded art.

This bipartisan commission will have four members appointed by the President, four members appointed by the Speaker of the House in consultation with the minority leader of the House and four members appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate in consultation with the minority leader of the Senate.

Finally, bill language is also included which requires the National Endowment for the Arts to submit and justify to the Committee on Appropriations direct grants to the Southeastern Center for Contemporary Art, [SECCA] in Winston-Salem, NC, and the Institute of Contemporary Art at the University of Pennsylvania. There were the two institutions which funded the Mapplethorpe exhibit and Serrano project. This language was a compromise from language included in the Senate at my request which proposed not to fund grants for those two institutions for 5 years.

I do not consider the language to be a total solution. The several actions that were taken in the aggregate move us in the right direction but they do not, in my judgment, complete the action that we will be asked to take in the Congress over the next year or two.

This issue is not behind us. I do not think it will stay behind us unless there is a change in attitude on the part of some who wish to admit to no limits to their right to use taxpayers' money in the expression no matter how obscene that expression may be, that they choose to use.

Mr. President, in the area of timber management, I thank the chairman for his comments about the role that the Senators from Oregon and the Senators from Washington played in trying to find a solution to the spotted owl and forest management practices issues.

There were two bill language items which were included in the Senate version of the interior bill. One provision directed that timber receipts be used to prepare 125 percent of the allowable sales quantity in each forest's management plan.

This provision was dropped in conference because funding for this pipeline volume was provided through appropriated dollars. The goal of 125 percent of ASQ is still a solid one and should be instituted as a matter of policy by the Forest Service.

A second provision directed that each forest attaining that ASQ level be provided an additional 10 percent increase from timber receipts above appropriated levels for a variety of programs. These programs included trail construction, trail maintenance, wildlife, and fish habitat management, soil, water, and air management, cultural resource management, wilderness management, reforestation and timber stand improvement, timber sales and administration.

For the past few months, I have attempted to find a way to fund the current forest plans without breaking the budget. Many have argued that the appropriated dollars fund a higher percentage of the timber program as it relates to the plans than the noncommodity programs. I do not completely disagree with this analysis, and I have sought to find a creative solution.

Unfortunately, the House conferees objected to the provision because the noncommodity programs could not participate in these receipts unless the timber program met its goal first.

I still have a very difficult time understanding that argument, Mr. President, and I am very disappointed that House conferees argued against the first legitimate proposal to fund these plans.

Finally, bill language is included which modifies House and Senate bill language relating to timber receipts above the President's estimate for fiscal year 1989. To the extent receipts materialize above the President's estimate, $65 million is provided to a variety of noncommodity programs in an effort to recognize the multiple-use nature of National Forest System lands. The formula provided is the same formula provided in fiscal year 1989.

An additional $32 million is provided for necessary timber sales administration and management, including all timber support costs and design and construction of forest roads.

The Forest Service is to review all funds available on a nationwide basis to determine if it might be possible to reallocate available appropriated and nonappropriated funds among regions.

The $32 million should be the last fund used for the timber program provided in this conference report. Other sources of nonappropriated funds to be used first include the timber salvage fund and and other similar funds.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the conference report. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD].

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I wish to express my deep appreciation to the leadership of the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations for their patience and understanding of the importance of the timber supply/spotted owl amendment that took so much time to resolve. Senator BYRD, as our chairman of the subcommittee, in his very typical fashion, displayed his sensitivity to this regional matter, and, of course, Senator MCCLURE, as part of our region from Idaho, who has not yet found a spotted owl in his State—but nevertheless it is always possible—did as well.

We have also been blessed in finding a temporary solution to this problem by having extraordinary staff input from many sources. I should like to take just a moment to acknowledge the extraordinary work of the staff who over many months have put in countless hours: Anne Badgley from Senator ADAMS' office, Kevin Lynch with Congressman AUCOIN, Nick Ashmore with Speaker FOLEY, Mike Bagley from Congressman DICKS' office, Doug Marker with Congressman DEFAZIO, Nancy Green with Congressman ATKINS, Kathy Johnson from the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, Sue Masica and Jeff Cilek from the Senate Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, Mark Walker with the Senate Appropriations Committee, Mike Salsgiver and Pat Reiten from my personal staff, Jeff Handy and Susan Yonts-Shepard from the Department of Agriculture and the Forest Service, and Roger Nesbitt and Chuck Hoyt from the Department of the Interior and the BLM.

I am sure that all who read this RECORD recognize what is a very outstanding and certainly a lengthy staff list, and it is not complete. We had the support and input from staff from all of our colleagues from the Northwest, who reviewed and had input from time to time. These include my colleague Senator PACKWOOD; my good friend from Washington State, Senator GORTON; Senator SYMMS, from Idaho, as well as Senator MCCLURE, and I might say that it was the distillation of views of all of these members of the Washington and Oregon delegations which resulted in the original amendment that was entitled the Hatfield-Adams amendment.

Senator ADAMS, of Washington State, and I met frequently with our individual colleagues, and certainly the total delegations from Washington State and Oregon met on a number of occasions to work out the Senate position. It included the support of Governor Neil Goldschmidt, of Oregon, and Governor Boothe Gardner, Washington State, as well. So when Senator ADAMS and I offered this in Appropriations Committee, it was really representative of a broad range of people, including all eight House Members and both Senators from Washington State, all five House Members and both Senators from the Oregon delegation and that, of course, included the Democrats as well as the Republicans, a bipartisan effort.

We had also input from the environmental community and its experts, who from time to time took the opportunity to testify or to discuss these matters individually with each member. We had representation from the wood products industry, from organized labor, and from the educational community—which understands the direct relationship between preserving 11,000 jobs in the Pacific Northwest and the receipts from those timber sales that go to support the local schools. Unfortunately, in the eyes of some this was a battle between the timber companies on the one hand and the environmentalists on the other hand, and there is nothing that was further from the truth in terms of the impact on the lives of the people in the Pacific Northwest and on the Nation.

We will have a demonstration in Washington today on affordable housing, and I can spend the rest of my allotted time talking about the impact of affordable housing on the poor and on the middle income groups. Do not forget that when the median cost of a house in the Bay area of San Francisco is $190,000, it is obviously a problem reaching far beyond the poor. Ask our sons and daughters and our acquaintances, our friends—and we call ourselves middle income and middle class—how they are trying to establish a home for themselves today. Or how about the professionals—the young doctor, the young lawyer? They will find it is increasingly difficult to achieve that down payment and have that hope for home ownership.

Mr. President, there is no more energy-efficient product to build these needed homes in America than that product which is grown on our national forests by free solar energy and is a renewable resource that we can maintain in perpetuity.

So for those who like to isolate themselves in a little cocoon and talk about theoretical and esoteric subjects, let us not forget we are talking about human problems. That leads back to a common denominator which is the adequacy or inadequacy to house human beings. There may come a time when we will have to opt for a choice between an owl and a human being, but let me tell you in this proposal today we do not have to make that choice. We have opted to continue studying the owl as a threatened species, and there is nothing in this report that in any way impinges upon the Endangered Species Act, but at the same time we are sensitive to human need. In my 30 years as a governor and Senator, I have often found myself in the eye of the storm when I have been accused by some of trying to preserve too much of our natural resources for posterity, including seashores, including the Columbia River Gorge, including wild and scenic rivers and including wilderness. On the other hand, I often find myself in the eye of the storm from those representing the environmental community who think somehow we have sacrificed the spotted owl for timber production.

Mr. President, the facts will not bear that out. I think sometimes that striking the balance is the most impossible political stance to take. It is far easier to line up with one side or the other. To try to strike a balance in anyone of these controversial areas, particularly as it represents economic and human need on one side and they need to preserve unique areas of our God-created Earth on the other, is very difficult. I fear that too often we are adopting the single-issue mentality that bubbles up to the top in many of these groups today. When you subscribe to that single-issue mentality, it is not what you have done in the past or what you are trying to do for the future; it is how you cross the t's and dot the i's today, and it is a dogmatic mind that is very difficult to try to find any kind of accommodation. Thank goodness, I think that the minds of balance and the minds of many of these people in both groups prevailed and made this compromise possible.

Mr. President, just briefly, we have in this amendment reduced the timber sale level by 1.5 billion board feet from what we call the existing forest plans. We have reduced it by 1 billion board feet from the historic level established by the Appropriations Committee, and we have reduced it 300 million board feet below the original Hatfield-Adams amendment. Now, that is a reduction that brings us to the 7.7-billion board feet that we have in this compromise. We have acquiesced to those who have said we should reduce the timber sale levels in region 6. We have also acquiesced to those who said we should put into statute the first protection of old growth forests, and we have done so in this particular draft. We have defined for the the first time what are old growth stands by using the "Franklin" definition that has been advocated by most of the environmental groups.

We have increased the SOHA's, or the spotted owl habitat areas, by 25 percent in this amendment. We have again, as I say, protected old growth forests not by definition alone, but by a minimal fragmentation requirement associated with the sale of the 7.7 billion board feet.

So I want to say, Mr. President, we have made great movement in trying to accommodate those from the environmental community who have raised legitimate issues and concerns.

Unfortunately, according to many of the statements coming out of that community it is not enough. On the other hand, when I face in my State 70 communities that are totally dependent on a 1- or 2-mill economy, I can say this: I look forward not with anything but anxiety and concern that we are going to see some of those communities so deeply impacted that I may have to repeat an experience I had in Valsetz, OR. On that occasion I gave the last high school commencement. Instead of the usual smiles and laughter at such an event, there were tears and sadness in the faces of the members of that small timber-dependent community whose mill had recently closed. In 2 weeks the bulldozers came in, and today there is not a sign left of community life because we are now finding the underbrush taking over.

We face that reality in our State. It is awfully easy for people from other States to say, oh, well we have to do this and that. But I have to concern myself with representing the people who have to put bread on the table of their children, and to cut it off abruptly, without any consideration for the human needs, to me, is cruelty.

If we want to reduce our timber sales level by half, all right. But let us have a prospective goal, and give time to retrain those employees, give time to readjust those communities, give time to those human needs, but to do it as proposed by various members of the environmental community is to do it without human concern.

I want to thank my good colleague from Washington State. He has taken a heck of a beating on this but, nevertheless, he has to concern himself with the needs of people as I do, as well as the needs of the environment.

I thank the Senate for the opportunity to express my thoughts on this important matter.

Mr. FOWLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] which were I believe eloquent and accurate.

Mr. President, I rise to register my extreme displeasure and disappointment as a result of the conference on the Forest Service roadbuilding budget.

It was less than 3 months ago that here on the floor I offered an amendment which was adopted by the Senate to cut the Senate appropriation for Forest Service roads by $65 million. This was not something that was slipped in by a voice vote in the dead of the night. We had full debate. There was a full-scale effort to table my amendment. That effort failed.

Subsequently 55 Senators, a majority from both sides of the aisle and from all regions of the country, cast an affirmative vote in favor of reallocating $40 million to programs in conservation, historic preservation, state forestry programs, and still came in $25 million under the Senate's mark—that is $25 million worth of deficit reduction in addition to the reallocation of these funds.

What happened in conference, I am sorry to say, was a total abandonment of our legislative process. One would expect in such a case that some compromise would be reached by the conferees between the Senate and the House versions. A forest roads budget somewhere between the numbers adopted by the House and Senate would be a reasonable and expected outcome. This is not what happened.

Rather than produce a compromise between the House and the Senate recommendations, the conference adopted the full House number which exceeded the Senate level by $24 million.

But, they did not stop there. Through a clever device called excess receipts, the conference report makes available an additional $32 million for Forest Service road construction and other activities in support of a timber program. So that when one adds the House number to this $32 million, you get a total of over $196 for roadbuilding, a funding level that exceeds even President Bush's request by over $10 million.

What kind of representation of the Senate's will is that? It is the kind of legislative chicanery that we should all be tired of, and embarrassed by.

Mr. President, I read the message loud and clear. But I also have a little message; that is, this goes too far in subverting the will of the U.S. Congress. It makes the legislative process look like something from Alice in Wonderland. As chairman of the authorizing subcommittee on forestry I can assure my friends that they have won one game out of what will be a seven-game or even 7-year series.

The simple truth is this, Mr. President: the luxury account for building surplus roads in our national forests is a losing cause. There was a time when private interests which support and benefit from this taxpayers subsidy could hold the line on the floor. This yeasr they lost on the Senate floor. They sneaked back in in conference, aided by the difficulties which I realize are forging a compromise on the old growth forest. But the forest roadbuilders cannot count on that happening every year. They have gone from the position of strength to a position of weakness.

The time is running out on this waste of the taxpayers' money on a program that shortchanges our national heritage and is extremely damaging to the ecology of our public lands. These are public lands, and their public uses will ultimately take precedence over private interests.

I see my friend from North Carolina is on the floor. We have been trying to reach each other, and I will come to see him as I yield the floor.

I understand later today we will again be asked to try to define what is obscene. As all my colleagues know from having had to suffer through some of my remarks, I am not that wise in my judgment on the fruits of human creation. But I do know a couple of things that are obscene, and I will offer those to the Senate.

It is obscene to promote the philosophy that every public problem is an opportunity for private gain, a philosophy that we have seen, the latest example exercised by the administration's appointments, by political appointments in our housing programs at HUD. It is obscene to permit the exploitation of public lands for exclusively private property. Our national forests belong to the many. They are not private tree farms for the few. This is a principle, Mr. President, worth defending. In the future, I will do my best to try to make a modest contribution. I yield the floor.

Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the conference report on the 1990 Interior appropriation bill. I would like to begin by expressing my gratitude to Chairman BYRD for his support and assistance to our region in a very difficult year.

In addition, I wish to extend my appreciation and express my admiration to my colleague in the Senate, MARK

HATFIELD, for not only his steadfast support, but his extraordinary work on a provision within this bill which addresses the timber supply crisis in Oregon and Washington. Senator HATFIELD and his staff have devoted months of their time working with myself, with Senator GORTON, members of our delegations of both the States of Oregon and Washington, and with others in the environmental community and the timber community to develop an agreement on a very contentious issue.

I also want to express my appreciation here today to the many Members of the House of Representatives who participated in developing this provision. In particular, I wish to acknowledge the work of Chairman SID YATES, Speaker TOM FOLEY, Congressman NORM DICKS, Congressman LES AUCOIN, Congressman CHET ATKINS, and other members of the Washington and Oregon delegations. They and their staffs spent literally hundreds of hours working with us to reach a balanced agreement which is acceptable to all the diverse parties with interests in the issue.

I want to especially thank a member of my staff, Anne Badgley, who is new to the Hill. She came from a program developed by a former colleague of ours, Warren Magnuson, which recruits the very best graduates from the University of Washington Law School each year, to come to Washington and work on a Senate staff. Now she is a member of my permanent staff. I just cannot express my appreciation fully enough for her dedication and hard work over months and months of this process.

The controversy over efforts to protect the spotted owl and its habitat has produced one of the most painful dilemmas the Northwest has ever faced.

The timber provision of this bill was developed in response to the desperate timber supply crisis in Washington and Oregon resulting from this situation. This supply crisis arose as a result of preliminary injunctions and environmental lawsuits, which tied up a large portion of our region's timber supply in court during the past year.

This controversy pitted one group of well-intentioned people against another. Unfortunately, many have tried to reduce this problem to a battle of the timber industry versus the environmental community. To many who have spent their lives in Washington State and love our State for its unique beauty, and its quality of life, it appears that the State's treasured forests are disappearing everywhere. To others who live and work in our timber communities, as Senator HATFIELD has so well described, with regard to the State of Oregon, it appears a way of life is vanishing before their very eyes.

Small towns have disappeared. Others are in desperate straits. As elected representatives of the Washington and Oregon congressional delegation, we just could not stand by responsibly and see these communities collapse. I fully believe that there is a solution which will allow the timber industry to continue operating, though it may be at a reduced rate, while preserving the important environmental attributes that everyone in the United States loves about the Pacific Northwest.

Unfortunately, the severity of the crisis this year did not give us the luxury of time to slowly mull over this issue. Mills were shutting down. Jobs were threatened and gone. Our State was being torn apart, and tensions were rising with the very real potential of violence.

We in the Northwest delegations waited and waited, as negotiations stopped and started. We waited as lawsuits were filed and injunctions were established. We waited as the agencies attempted to address the problems, without success. Deadlines were set and passed. By this summer, the summer of 1989, we realized that immediate action was required, and the last stop left was the appropriation process. Nothing had been done in the authorizing committees; nothing had been done on the House side, and this was the last chance.

In July, Senator HATFIELD and I reluctantly decided to grasp the thorn and include a provision in the Interior appropriations bill. I am grateful to the members of that committee, to the chairman and my colleagues in the Senate for their patience and assistance in helping design this provision.

The amendment was introduced with the members of the Oregon and the Washington delegations, all of them supporting the process. This conference report contains a modified version of the amendment, which I support.

(Mr. FOWLER assumed the chair.)

Mr. ADAMS. This timber provision is necessary as a first step, and I would emphasize "first step" in resolving the timber supply crisis in the Northwest. This interim measure sets up a process which allows responsible harvesting of timber while protecting the very sensitive ecosystems and threatened species.

These goals are accomplished through three basic steps.

First, the provision grants certainty to the timber industry for the next year by setting a timber level of 7.7 billion board feet of timber on Forest Service lands and 1.9 billion feet of timber on Bureau of Land Management lands. This is a reduction of 1.5 billion board feet overall.

Second, the legislation takes a landmark step in officially recognizing the importance of old growth ecosystems and directing the Forest Service to protect those stands. The definition adopted is the one suggested and supported by the environmental groups, the so-called Franklin definition.

The third step in this process insulates the timber sale level from overly broad preliminary injunctions. This was a very sensitive issue, but one we had to address. The merits of these cases were not being reached and were being delayed for a substantial period of time. Our solution was expedited judicial review process of 45 days to handle challenges to the timber program.

I think it is an excellent provision which will assist us through the upcoming year.

Mr. President, I say to the chairman of the committee, the process of developing this amendment has been a difficult one. We in the Washington delegation were not eager and are not eager to intervene in the operation of the forests. Unfortunately such a step was necessary.

The passage of this legislation is only a beginning. It lasts for just 1 year. It releases some of the pressures which have been building up, and allows us to begin grappling with the larger, long-term problem regarding the future of the timber industry in the Northwest.

Over the course of the next year—and I address this to the member in the chair because he is the chairman of the subcommittee which will be dealing with this issue in the authorizing committee—it is critical that those of us in Congress make it our top priority to require that the Forest Service, other agencies and parties comply with the spirit and integrity of this agreement. I will be doing everything I can to make certain this happens.

We also need the assistance of these groups in developing the long-term solution which set up a sustained yield in our forests, protects the species that need protection, and maintains the environmental, recreational, and other uses of the forest. In addition, the Northwest delegation will be working with the authorizing committees of Congress to develop the long-term approach to this problem. In that process I believe that all aspects of this complicated issue must go to the table and all potential solutions be analyzed.

Mr. President, I strongly support the version of the timber amendment which emerged from the conference committee.

As a representative of the Washington delegation, I appreciate the assistance of the committee, the assistance of the chairman, and I particularly appreciate the assistance of my colleagues both in the Senate and the House from the States of Oregon and Washington. In addition I would like to thank our colleagues in the State of Idaho for their support. In conclusion, I would like to recognize the outstanding work of a number of staff members who have devoted countless hours to this issue. These staff members include Mike Salsgiver and Pat Reitan from Senator HATFIELD's office, Mark Walker—from the Senate Interior Appropriations Committee, Sue Masica, Charlie Estes and Jeff Cilek of the Senate Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, Heidi Biggs from Senator GORTON's office, Nick Ashmore with Speaker FOLEY, Mike Bagley from Congressman DICKS' office, Dick Van Wagenen from Congressman MCDERMOTT's office, Kevin Lynch with Congressman AUCOIN, Doug Marker with Congressman DEFAZIO, Nancy Green with Congressman ATKINS, Kathy Johnson from the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, and Jeff Handy and Susan Yonts-Shepard from the Department of Agriculture and Forest Service.

I thank you, Mr. President and I thank the others for their assistance in helping us with this problem.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, 7 months ago I used a similar opportunity to launch a discussion for the timber supply crisis of the Pacific Northwest. The immediate cause of that crisis was a series of lawsuits based on Federal statutes on timber production and wildlife, but more directly it was driven by the desire of some to set aside large tracts of old growth forests on Federal forest land for preservation, above and beyond the 5 million acres in Washington alone already set aside in parks, wilderness areas and other reservations. In my statement of March 15, I highlighted the effects a Forest Service management plan for the northern spotted owl were having on one constituent of mine, Larry Mason. Larry owns Mason Lumber Products in Beaver, WA, and is but one example of the crippling economic, social and human effects that public land-use decisions are causing in Washington State and elsewhere.

More recently, I understand that Larry Mason has been fortunate enough to run his mill for 5 whole days—with 3 days' worth of timber remaining. That week of work came after 5 long weeks of closure. This has been the trend for millowners like Larry Mason, and for the men and women who work in the mills of the Northwest—1 week on, 2 weeks off—wages long since slashed, and health insurance plans forgone—ever since the first of the year.

Larry Mason and his 15 employees—who once used to be 30 to 40 in number—typify the people whom the congressional delegations of Oregon and Washington seek to help through a thoughtful and complex amendment contained in this Interior Appropriations conference report. It is a proposal I support, but I emphasize that while it represents a compromise, that compromise is with the lives and careers of countless numbers of people who will still be adversely affected by reductions in timber sale volume.

More than 1 billion board feet of timber sales will be lost with this proposal. A mill like Mason Lumber, on average, needs 3 million board feet a year to sustain 30 or more families dependent on work in that mill. The loss of 1 billion board feet means the potential loss of dozens of similar mills—each taking the jobs and careers of real people and real families—thousands of people in all. No one should doubt that this agreement forces upon these people continued sacrifices. There will be more careers lost, and some mills and towns will remain in real jeopardy, particularly on the Olympic Peninsula. I am deeply distressed by that fact, so my satisfaction with a fine political compromise is mixed with sorrow for the personal tradgedies which even our best efforts could not avoid. No one is made whole by this agreement, and in the opinion of this Senator, we must continue urgently to seek long-term stability.

The proposal contained in this conference report relates to our national forests and the timber sale volume from them for Oregon and Washington. It also deals with the preservation of the spotted owl and some of our region's finest old growth forests. In essence, the delegations of Oregon and Washington established a precedent—by working jointly to craft this agreement, which we all hope will return some stability to our timber-dependent communities.

As a result of that work, it has become obvious that the laws governing the use of our national forests as they regulate the timber sale program of the Forest Service are now inadequate. These laws require the careful scrutiny of Congress. A long-term solution will require the thoughtful and swift attention of the very members who developed the agreement reflected in this conference report.

The purpose of this short-term agreement is twofold: It strives to ensure timber to mills on the brink of complete shutdown; and it strives to prevent fragmentation of significant stands of old growth forest. In the midst of the Northwest timber crisis, this amendment seeks to provide short-term stability. At the same time, it merely postpones the answer to the larger question—to what extent should our national forests be managed for multiple uses? What role should Federal lands play in commercial timber supply? I hope that with some relief for the immediate crisis, we will all be able to address these long-term questions with thoughtfulness and wisdom.

Specifically, this amendment directs the U.S. Forest Service to offer 7.7 billion board feet of timber from the national forests of Oregon and Washington for fiscal years 1989 and 1990; it requires the Forest Service to offer timber sales in a manner minimizing fragmentation of the most ecologically significant old growth; it increases the standards for spotted owl habitat areas on national forest lands; it directs the Secretaries of Agriculture and Interior to name advisory boards representing a broad range of views and to provide recommendations to the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management in reviewing prospective timber sales; it directs release of 1.1 billion board feet of timber sales out of the 1.8 billion presently unavailable due to court injunctions; and it allows only one level of administrative appeal and a 45-day expedited judicial review process.

It is not, however, just those who live in timber-dependent communities who will lose with this and future compromise proposals—it is our global environmental quality. Worldwide demand for forest products is continually increasing. With this drop in supply from lands on which wise forest management and high environmental standards are required, I fear that we will only find the demand filled by timber harvested in other countries which show far less sensitivity to the environment.

I find it outrageous—to put it mildly—that our situation in the Northwest is compared with the devastation of tropical deforestation. Our national forest laws require reforestation—and they require compliance with strict environmental laws and regulations. Our national forests are managed for fish and wildlife, outdoor recreation, wood, water and wilderness—in a combination that can meet the needs of society now and in the future. That is simply, and unfortunately, not the case in other countries—countries which I suspect are more than willing to increase their rate of harvest to satisfy our Nation's desire for forest products and for housing. As our laws and courts impose dramatic reductions in timber supply we will inevitably subsidize environmental disasters overseas. To depress our economy and increase world deforestation in one single motion is unconscionable.

Mr. President, the long-term questions that Congress must now address are unfortunately even more difficult than those answered by this conference report.

I see three important questions that Congress must answer—those questions relate to allocation, to implementation, and to forestry on our non-Federal lands. First, we must decide for the future what portion of our national forests should be set-aside specifically for timber management? After worthy set-asides for national parks, wilderness, trails, wild and scenic rivers, when and how much are we finally willing to provide for the people and communities in and around the forests?—People for whom we presumably are also preserving the environment through these other set-asides—People who live, as generations before them did, in public timber-dependent communities.

I should like to quote from a letter I received from Pam Walker of Underwood, Washington.

* * * My family consists of my husband, myself and our 1½ year old son. My husband is the fourth generation of a logger. * * * If the spotted owl were to win the debate our family would be torn apart. We'd have to file bankruptcy and lose everything, we wouldn't have enough money saved to even relocate * * * the atmosphere in our community is that of panic. * * *

Mr. President, one of the most eloquent lines that I found in this letter is Mrs. Walker's plea to Congress—

Our state desperately needs your help, we are American citizens and we deserve our freedom of choice, I would be proud if my son was a 5th generation logger.

I, too, would be proud if Mrs. Walker's son grew up to be a fifth generation logger. And, I do believe that just as all of our children and grandchildren are entitled to a heritage filled with impressive national parks and wilderness areas, Mrs. Walker's son is entitled to make a decision as to whether he wishes to follow the worthy profession of his father. I would point out, however, the contrary views represented in many letters I have received with statements such as—

Senator Gorton, you surely would have been better advised to warn members of the timber industry to accept the fact that theirs is an industry which, on its present scale, is obsolete—like candle-making or blacksmithing. The people who are job-dependent upon that industry would be better served by helping them learn new skills.

That is easy for someone far away and unaffected by the trauma of the Pam Walkers of this world to say. I disagree. The demand for forest products is ever increasing. They are products made from renewable resources; they are largely derived from lands governed by laudable environmental laws and regulations. I stress that Congress, and particularly the delegations of Oregon and Washington, have become far more knowledgeable and sensitive to the fact that we need to manage the areas open to timber harvest on our national forests on a sustained yield basis and in an environmentally sensitive manner. Regrettably, this year's crisis seems to be largely the result of cumulative problems incurred over many years. Yet, environmentally sound, sustained forest management is now not merely a goal, but a requirement in our efforts to resolve the conflicts before us.

We all understand that as mills are modernized, they produce more with fewer people. And, as our forests are managed on a totally sustained forest management program, the number of jobs may decline. It is important to point out, however, that mills desiring to modernize to meet competitive pressure, due to the uncertainty of supply, are unable to obtain financing for modernization—or investment for repair—investment which, in the long run, may even increase output without the loss of jobs. The effects of uncertainty on important decisions like these are described in the following letter received from the president of Coast Pacific Trading, Inc.

Our mill, located at Preston, Washington was damaged extensively by fire at the end of February, 1989. In early March, Judge Dwyer rendered his decision to allow the logging of federal timber affected by the owl to continue until the trial which would then determine the legality of the owl's claim to the timber reserve. Because I felt confident that the ultimate decision was going to favor the timber industry, I decided to rebuild the mill and gave orders to do so. Two days after Judge Dwyer's original decision, he reversed himself. * * * I then had to reverse my decision to rebuild the sawmill until the picture becomes clearer with regards to timber supply. At this time, 27 men with their families have lost their jobs to the owl.

While Mr. Mulder's letter describes not only the costs incurred and investment decisions indefinitely on hold—it also illustrates the second vital question affecting our long-term timber supply. Once we decide what is open for timber harvest and in what manner—how do we guarantee certainty and continuity? How does Congress, once it has answered the larger issue of land use allocation, move on to assure stable and responsible implementation of its decisions?

Contained within this Interior Appropriations conference report, is an expression of explicit congressional intent regarding its implementation for the short term. While I want this proposal to work—and it is critical that it does work—I confess that I am something of a skeptic. I am deeply concerned with the judicial review portions of this proposal. In the earlier version of the Hatfield-Adams amendment, judicial review was allowed but injunctive relief was prohibited. That proposed remedy—albeit an unusual one—was included for a purpose—to allow 1 year for Congress to work expeditiously at a long-term solution without being overtaken by an unequivocal economic disaster resulting from sweeping and disastrous preliminary injunctions imposed without even a decision on the merits of a myriad of legal actions.

No one, I repeat, no one, wants to take away or restrict access to the courts. However, recent and severe abuses of the judicial process which have halted timber sales have displaced hundreds of families and workers in the timber towns of the Pacific Northwest. I hope that I am proven wrong, but I am deeply skeptical of even this expedited judicial review process during this year of relief. It still presents an opportunity for frustration and delay. For some, delay is winning. For the forest product families, however, delay is disaster. As a consequence, this proposal calls for a tremendous exercise of good faith on the part of all parties. Expedited review should not be abused. By its nature, it will displace many other critical matters before the courts. If we see this expedited process triggering frivolous lawsuits, it will not only harm those dependent on timber sales, it will frustrate those who have unrelated cases pending consideration by the courts. And, in the long run, it may motivate Congress permanently to limit the ability of the few to frustrate the will of Congress as exercised on behalf of the needs of the many. If this provision just expedites judicial decisions clearly interfering with the will of the Congress for a timber sale level of 7.7 billion board feet from our region, it will simply have expedited disaster.

As we resolve allocation and implementation questions, we finally, Mr. President, must address the question of the relationship between the use of Federal and non-Federal timberlands—the explosive issue of log exports.

I have long expressed the belief that relatively unrestrained export policies, left properly to the marketplace the allocation of resources and value, and second, produced the highest benefits to the trust beneficiaries of Washington State-owned forests. Those are still compelling considerations, but they do not justify avoiding a thorough review of the issue.

By prior agreement, the short-term timber compromise in this Interior Appropriations bill does not address log exports. But I must say now, in all fairness to those in this debate who favor changes in our approach to log exports, that this issue deserves a place in the discussion of long-term timber supply solutions.

Mr. President, I would like to share more thoughts from the people deeply affected by the decisions Congress makes for our region.

These words are rich with meaning and message, and articulate the concerns of timber dependent communities far better than I can.

From Travis Davis, a junior high school student in Stevenson, WA:

With no logs the mills will shut down and people will lose their jobs and move away. I'll probably be able to graduate here. But what about the kids behind me? Is it right to make them move? If they do move the community will eventually die. * * * There must be a way to open the woods and protect the owl.

From Cindy Moore of Carson, WA:

I am a single parent, working a saw mill, working hard every day to be self supportive and raise my 13 year old daughter. We love it very much here in Carson, Washington. In the heart of the "Columbia River Gorge." * * * I had a choice five years ago, my choice was to work for a living, not accept welfare to support me. Now what?

From Commissioner Russ Richardson, commissioner of the Port of Grays Harbor:

In the long term, sustained yield is the rational approach from my point of view, and we cannot let surrogates, such as the northern spotted owl, and frivolous legal injunctions and other legal maneuvers interrupt balance, controlled management of our public forest lands.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent these letters be printed in full in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, these statements are passionate, wise and thoughtful. They represent a few of the hundreds of comments I have received from those who depend upon wise forest management, arguing for the preservation of our environment for their livelihoods. I have spent a great deal of time this year in these communities. I want to stress that the people who live in these communities are some of the finest people I have ever met. They represent our State's heritage and wisdom. They represent a history which any State should be proud to have—a history built on timber and by timber. Our State is not about to be clearcut from corner to corner. Keeping our land permanently forested in a living progression is highly desirable for not just these people, but the people of our entire region, and it is their goal.

I would like to take a moment to commend the leaders of these communities and the fine people who are the heart of these communities. They have pulled together in a crisis and are striving for a solution. As we all have, they have learned a great deal in the past several months and have worked with a magnificent effectiveness.

The work of these people and our State delegations, however, has just begun.

I would also like to take a moment to commend the members of the Washington and Oregon delegations in reaching a resolution to our immediate crisis in the Northwest. I would like to specifically thank Speaker FOLEY and his staff Nick Ashmore, Senator HATFIELD and his staff Mike Salsgiver, Mark Walker, and Pat Reiten; Senator ADAMS and his staff Anne Badgely; Congressman NORM DICKS and his staff Mike Bagley; and Congressman AUCOIN and his staff Kevin Lynch. These members, as participants in the appropriations process, demonstrated outstanding leadership as did their staff. The hours of thought, negotiation, and skill put into this agreement offers for this Senator a great promise of success. I am pleased to join my colleagues from the Northwest in supporting this agreement.

With appreciation, I mention also the staffs of those members who were not on the Appropriations Committee, most particulary my own. Heidi Biggs has worked countless hours on this subject with devotion and skill.

Finally, I would like to again highlight my deep appreciation and respect for Senator MARK HATFIELD of Oregon. His leadership was an absolute vital element in assuring this proposal could reach the floor of the Senate as it has today. As many have written to me, and I would imagine to Senator HATFIELD, pointing out what they view as utter destruction of our environment and national forests—for this generation and the generations to come—I remind everyone that it was MARK HATFIELD—and others in our delegation—who worked endlessly for an Oregon wilderness proposal, the Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area, and the Oregon wild and scenic rivers proposal. That list is only a partial one which does not include many additional environmental achievements—great legacies which shall earn the appreciation of generations to come.

Mr. President, this amendment represents a thoughtful and balanced process. For several months the Oregon and Washington delegations have met with constituents dependent upon timber for their livelihoods and constituents who are concerned for the status of the spotted owl species as well as the many interest groups concerned with these issues. Similar processes have worked for the States of Washington and Oregon as the respective delegations have led the Nation in preserving our environment. I expect this thoughtful and balanced process to continue as we work together on a more permanent resolution—a resolution which fairly answers the questions of allocation, implementation, and use. In doing so, I plead with my colleagues to remember that we are not dealing with just trees and owls, but with people, with their lives and careers and communities; people who are themselves endangered by our policies. We can and we must reach a solution which will accommodate forests and wildlife and people.

STEVENSON, WA, May 19, 1989.

Senator SLADE GORTON,
Seattle, WA.

DEAR SENATOR GORTON: I'm a junior here at Stevenson. I've heard a lot lately about the spotted owl issue. Living in a primarily timber related community, none of it has been good. If this passes, what good will it do? With no logs, the mills will shut down and people will lose their jobs and move away. I'll probably be able to graduate here. But what about the kids behind me? Is it right to make them move? If they do move, the community will eventually die.

On the news they show the owl in the wild. But every picture I've seen is in alder or second growth. This proves the owl doesn't need the old growth. There must be a way to open the woods and protect the owl.

TRAVIS DAVIS.

DEAR SENATOR SLADE GORTON: I am writing in concern of the spotted owl debate.

I would like to tell you about my family and how the decision will affect our lives. My family needs your help.

My family consists of my husband, myself, and our 1½-year-old son. My husband is the fourth generation of a logger. He started work in the woods when he was sixteen. He worked in the woods for ten years. At twenty-six he started work at our local lumber mill SDS. This month he became permanent. We now have our insurance and paid holidays. My husband is the only one in our family to bring home a paycheck. After bills the three of us live on one hundred dollars for two weeks. I stay home to raise our son. If the spotted owl were to win the debate, our family would be torn apart. We'd have to file bankruptcy and lose everything. We wouldn't have enough money saved to ever relocate. Honestly, I don't know what we'd do. Even if we did relocate, I don't know where my husband would find work because all the mills would be closed. I would like to raise my son as a good American citizen with respect for his country. But right now I don't feel we're getting the respect we deserve as American citizens. I feel that the politicians are hearing us but they're not listening. The atmosphere in our community is that of panic.

It's not just our family that will be affected, but thousands just like ours. What do they expect to do with the thousands of families out of work? Where and how do they expect us to live? I hope there is enough welfare for the States of Washington and Oregon. Most importantly if they close our forests and mills, where do they suppose they're going to get wood products?

I really don't feel there has been enough research as to how endangered the spotted owl really is. The environmentalist on the news said if it wasn't the spotted owl, it'd be some other species. It isn't the species they might lose that they're concerned about, but the power they may gain. There is Oregon State Congressman Bob Smith's bill S. 1645 (keep timber harvest at current levels for 5 years until all facts are known). For long-term, review the cumulative effect of existing federal laws on the timber resource to assure dependable and adequate timber supply. Our community desperately needs your help. Our State desperately needs your help. We are American citizens and we deserve our freedom of choice. I would be proud if my son was a 5th generation logger.

Sincerely,

PAM WALKER.

UNDERWOOD, WA.

COAST PACIFIC TRADING, INC.,
Bellingham, WA, April 11, 1989.

Senator SLADE GORTON,
Hart Senate Bldg., Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GORTON: Recently you met with an organization to which I belong, "Evergreen Partnership", and discussed with them the "Spotted Owl" problem. The report to me was that the discussion centered on general matters and concluded that laws needed to be changed to solve the problem. The following is a specific way in which the owl is hurting our industry.

Our mill, located at Preston, Washington was damaged extensively by fire at the end of February, 1989. In early March, Judge Dwyer rendered his decision to allow the logging of federal timber affected by the owl to continue until the trial which would then determine the legality of the owl's claim to the timber reserve. Because I felt confident that the ultimate decision was going to be in favor of the timber industry, I decided to rebuild the mill and gave the orders to do so. Two days after Judge Dwyer's original decision, he reversed himself because of outside pressure and ordered all logging to be halted. I then had to reverse my decision to rebuild the sawmill until the picture becomes clearer with regards to timber supply.

At this time, 27 men with their families have lost their jobs to the owl. Unfortunately, Judge Dwyer's decisions are not based on facts which are not yet known but due to political pressure. This seems to be a stupid way to run a country.

Senator, I need your assurances that when I talk to these men and their families about their future I can relate with confidence that your position will be based on logic, good sense and fact and will be supportive to these timber jobs. Presently, I am at a loss as how to best explain what their future holds in our timber industry.

Sincerely,

S.E. MULDER,
President, Coast Pacific Trading, Inc.

CARSON, WA, May 10, 1989.

DEAR SENATOR SLADE GORTON: "HELP." I am writing to let you know my views on the timber supply issue. We cannot sit back and let this happen to an entire industry.

I am a single parent (Female) working in a Saw Mill, working hard every day to be self supportive and raise my 13 year old daughter. We love it very much here in Carson, WA. In the heart of the "Columbia River Gorge". Have you ever been through here? Anyway I work for a "Great" Company, W.K.O. Inc. Sawmill. I had a choice five years ago, my choice was to work for a living, not expect welfare to support me. Now what?

Without the revenue from the federal timber sales our whole community would be lost. W.K.O. is 100 percent reliant on Gifford Pinchot timber. 90 percent of Skamanig County's budget comes from timber harvest revenues—half of that going to schools, half for county government. We couldn't afford to pay our teachers or road crews or Police or elected officials. Without our jobs in the woods and mills we would be forced to depend on a welfare program that is over used now as it is. I don't think the government could afford another 60,000 on their door step especially with losing the taxes we pay and the timber sales receipts.

With almost 3,000,000 acres of old growth set aside that can't be touched and also 50 million acres designated for roadless and wilderness areas, I feel that we have sacrificed enough for these preservational lists. Speaking for myself and my fellow workers we need and expect your 100 percent support on this issue. With your help and the help of our other elected officials we can turn this problem around and keep our economy and life styles as we have in the past.

Praying everyone can be happy,

Sincerely,

CINDY M. MOORE.

ABERDEEN, WA,

SENATOR SLADE GORTON,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Re: Northwest Timber Supply.

DEAR SENATOR GORTON: The television special "Ancient Forests: Rage over Trees," produced by the National Audubon Society, has prompted me to let that society and you know my feelings about the current problems in Northwest timber supply.

I do support the Hatfield-Adams Amendment as a short-term treatment of the problem. In the long term, substained yield is the rational approach from my point of view, and we cannot let surrogates, such as the northern spotted owl, and frivilous legal injunctions and other legal maneuvers interrupt balanced, controlled management of our public forest lands.

Further, I do not believe states should be granted the power to interfere in international commerce, such as Representative DeFazio has proposed. Whether logs or whatever are to be exported should remain a decision made at the national level.

Thank you for your continued support of issues of importance to the Grays Harbor area.

Sincerely yours,

RUSS RICHARDSON,
Commissioner.

PORT OF GRAYS HARBOR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move, under the agreement which was entered with respect to the conference report, that the vote on the conference report be stacked to occur immediately prior to the vote on or in relation to the Helms amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate concur en bloc in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate with the exception of amendment No. 153.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, whereas normally the Senate acts on the adoption of the conference report before it acts on amendments in disagreement between the two Houses, in carrying out the words and the spirit of the conference report, I shall not urge the adoption of the conference report at this moment so as to give the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] the opportunity to call up his amendment and have it discussed.

And at the close of that discussion, then, in accordance with the agreement, the vote would occur on the conference report immediately prior to a vote on or in relation to the amendment of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] to amendment No. 153.

I see the distinguished Senator from Idaho on the floor. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. McCLURE. I will take just this much time to respond to some of the questions relating to the funding of the forest road system and the attempts we made in the conference to fund the noncommodity programs.

Mr. President, I hope all Members understand that the spotted owl compromise, which was adopted both on the floor and confirmed in the conference, has imposed additional costs on the forest management system of which forest roads are but one component.

If Senators do not know they should know, of the $32 million to be provided from excess timber receipts, $12 million is necessary to implement the compromise on the spotted owl.

The compromise included in this conference report increased the number of new sales in fiscal year 1990 proposed in the Hatfield-Adams compromise by about 700 million board feet. If the Hatfield-Adams compromise would have been agreed to, only an additional $20 million would have been necessary.

This shift toward new sales was requested by those on the other side of the issue. It was always assumed that funding necessary to implement the spotted owl agreement, whatever it was, would be provided.

FUNDING THE FOREST PLANS

Mr. President, during the past several years, the Forest Service spent countless man-hours putting together a forest plan for every national forest. We can all criticize how those plans were done or whether we agree with what they contain. The fact of the matter, however, is that they are plans, many have survived court challenges and they are based on an analysis of the needs of those forests.

Many have argued that the appropriated dollars fund a higher percentage of the timber program as it relates to the plans than the noncommodity programs. I do not completely disagree with this analysis and have sought to find a creative solution to bring the noncommodity programs up.

Unfortunately, implementing those plans will cost the taxpayer a considerable sum of money and it is extremely unlikely that this subcommittee will obtain the necessary $700 million to fund those plans. Over the past couple of years, I have been struggling with a variety of proposals designed to fund those plans.

One proposal which was adopted by the Senate but, unfortunately, rejected by the House during conference on this bill directed that each forest attaining the annual average ASQ level for the timber program be provided a 10-percent bonus above appropriated dollars from timber receipts for a variety of programs. These programs included trail construction; trail maintenance; wildlife and fish habitat management; soil, water and air management; cultural resource management; wilderness management; reforestation and timber stand improvement; timber sales administration.

It would be much more productive if all interested parties worked together in an effort to fund those plans rather than working against one program included in the plans. If the 10-percent bonus is a faulty proposal, I hope that we can work together on a different proposal.

Mr. President, I have analyzed the arguments that those on the other side of the argument used during debate on this program when the Interior bill was before the Senate in July. Many were right on target but others were simply off base and were made after analyzing only half the necessary data.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter, with pertinent enclosures, from F. Dale Robertson, dated September 13, 1989, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, DC, September 13, 1989.

Hon. JAMES A. MCCLURE,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCLURE: This responds to your letter of August 3 which requested our review of the recent debate on funding for forest roads. Our comments on several significant misconceptions are enclosed.

It is important that adequate appropriated dollars for engineering be provided to accompany the construction dollars in purchaser credits. Roads are constructed and reconstructed only as necessary to support timber sales, recreation access, and all other uses of the National Forests. These roads are built to the minimum standard necessary to provide safety and to avoid environmental damage. Funding provided by the Senate bill will not support the output targets called for by the bill.

We appreciate the opportunity to comment on these misconceptions.

Sincerely,

JEFF M. SIRMON,
For F. Dale Robertson, Chief.

Enclosure.

Statement: The estimate is, if the Forest Service proceeds according to its plans, another interstate highway system worth of roads will be cut through our public lands, our national forest, in the next 12 years.

Response: Our Forest Plans show an increase in road mileage from the present 355,700 miles over 389,000 miles in the year 2000. A net increase of less than 10%. About 90% of these new roads will be local, low-standard roads initially supporting timber harvest, but afterward provide access for the other forest uses, such as fire protection, recreation, and forest management activities.

Statement: I believe this amendment is necessary to restore some fiscal restraint to a construction program that continues to increase 10, 12, 15 percent a year while the last 3 out of 4 years, the Forest Service has had excess funds in this account, funds that they could not use.

Response: The Forest Road Program (FRP) has not increased 10, 12, 15 percent a year. It has, in fact, undergone significant reduction. From FY 1983 to FY 1988, the Forest Road Program shows a reduction of 22% and if you account for the effects of inflation the reduction is 43%. Intense cost reduction including lower road standards has been necessary in order to absorb this significant reduction in road construction funds.

It is not possible to further reduce road investments and maintain existing timber sale level.

The Forest Service has not had excess road construction funds. Except for minor amounts of funds carried over due to delays caused by litigations, appeals, contract disputes, and forest fires, all funds have been effectively used and directly tied to output targets scheduled over the next 1-3 years.

Statement: The existing Forest Service road network that extends for more than 340,000 miles through out national forest already far exceeds legitimate access needs.

Response: There are about 355,700 miles of road in the National Forest road system providing access to 191 million acres. All uses of the National Forest rely on roads to some extent, even wilderness and back country trail use depend on access provided by the forest development road system. National Forest are managed for many uses and the forest road system provides access annually.

For over 242 million visistor days of recreation use, 42 percent of all recreation use on federal lands.

To over 106,834 miles of trail.

To 14 National Recreation Areas and 3,331 miles of National Wild and Scenic rivers.

To 4,400 campgrounds and 1,400 picnic grounds

To 50 major visitor centers, 40 percent of all downhill ski areas and sites of many lodges, resorts, and more than 15,000 summer homes.

To over 13,737 permittees for nearly 10 million animal unit months of grazing.

To over 11 Billion Board Feet of Timber.

To nearly a quarter of the Nation's potential energy reserves and nearly half of the Nation's entire inventory of softwood sawtimber.

To more than 32 million acres of designated wilderness area.

For the suppression of over an average annual 1.2 million acres of wildfire and the reforestation of the burned over lands.

To the 560 miles of National Forest Scenic Byways.

For control of insects and disease attacks.

For wildlife and fisheries management.

All of these are legitimate uses of the national forest and the existing road system necessary to meet these needs. When roads are not needed, for a period of time, they are closed.

Statement: More than 340,000 miles of road amounts to one mile of road for every square mile of National Forest.

Response: This statement is close to being right. Our actual total of 355,700 miles amounts to almost 1.2 miles for every square mile of National Forest. The majority of this mileage, 75 percent, consists of very low standard local roads intended to serve specific management or user needs.

Statement: During this decade, as the Forest Service has lost biologists to attrition and accumulated more and more engineers, it just seems to have developed a passion for roadbuilding.

Response: This statement is wrong. From 1980 to 1989 Engineering reduced its workforce of Professionals and Technicians by 23% and 18% respectively. During this same period the workforce of Fishery Biologists and of Wildlife Biologists increased 99% and 44% respectively. Ecologists and Botanist also increased by 265% and 50% respectively.

Statement: Forest Service loses an average of $350 million for timber sales every year.

Response: This statement is wrong. In FY 1987, the final report of the National Forest System's timber sale program produced a net return of approximately $540,070,000 to the Federal Government before the payment of $272,590,900 to States. In FY 1988, the net returns increased to $690,685,000 before the payment of $302,034,000 to the States. These figures are based on the GAO approved Timber Sale Accounting System that follows generally accepted accounting principles.

Statement: In the last 6 fiscal years alone, the Forest Service constructed 3,725 more miles of road than needed, by its own projections, for the single purpose of timber harvest.

Response: This statement is not valid for 2 reasons:

The 3,725 miles alleged to have been excess construction apparently were derived from comparing planned road construction in the President's Budget Request to final accomplishment. This is not a valid comparison. Congress typically sets the timber sale and other output goals in annual appropriations which differ from the Budget Request. As timber sale and other output levels are changed by Congress, so are miles of road because the two are so interdependent. For a true picture of this relationship it is necessary to compare miles planned based on actual appropriation versus miles actually accomplished. Charts 1 and 2 show the trends of the FRP program from 1983-1988. The figures shown for the FRP program do not include the Tongass Timber Supply Fund (TTSF) miles of construction or reconstruction.

Over this 6-year period, the FRP program constructed 13 miles less than planned and reconstructed 1,603 miles more than planned. Reconstruction occurs on existing roads therefore not adding to the system miles. The increased reconstruction of roads is partly due to the inability to access roadless areas where timber sales are planned because of appeals or litigations and having to re-work the roaded portion of the forest. This skews the road program by dropping new-high cost access roads into roadless areas, and adding low-cost reconstruction projects on existing roads to make them suitable for additional timber haul. For example, many miles of reconstruction is nothing more than replacing culverts or adding gravel to existing roads. It is not logical use of the data to combine new construction and reconstruction and conclude that the Forest Service is building more roads than needed to achieve program.

[The charts referred to are not reproducible for the RECORD.]

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. McCLURE. Would the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. HELMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCLURE. Did the Senator from Montana want 2 minutes? I will yield to the Senator from Montana 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BURNS. I thank the Chair and I thank my colleague from Idaho, the manager of this superior bill. I have just a few comments here as we get on to wrap up the work on the reconciliation of the Interior Department.

The operations of the Government's holdings, and that includes the lands, gets very interesting as we go along, to say the least.

I appreciate the work that the leadership and the conference committee has put in on this particular piece of legislation.

I was a little bit disappointed, however, on some reparations that we wanted to make to some people who were impacted by the policy of the U.S. Government in its handling of those lands because of the fires in Montana a year ago.

However, I understand we are working on that. I am very satisified with that.

We have until March 1990 to process those claims. I appreciate the attitude the committee has taken toward this and I again want to express my appreciation to the managers of this particular agenda and congratulate them for it.

I yield the reminder of my time, Mr. President, back to the Senator from Idaho. I thank him very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for recognizing me. I have an amendment at the desk, and I will call it up presently.

We have been attentive to all of the hairs that have been split and all of the declarations that this is too vague.

Mr. BYRD. Will the distinguished Senator yield? Could we have the amendment called up so that the time will begin running on the amendment?

Mr. HELMS. In just a minute, yes.

Mr. BYRD. In the minute that precedes——

Mr. HELMS. If you are interested in the time, you can charge the time to me. That is all right, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time will be charged to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I do not want to waste a minute around this place.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I simply wanted to proceed in accordance with the terms of the agreement. I will be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. HELMS. That is all right.

Mr. BYRD. And still do.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the Washington Post proclaimed this morning that the Interior conference report's language concerning the National Endowment for the Arts [NEA] is so vague that it will not even prohibit the NEA from funding the Mapplethorpe exhibit again next year if it wants to.

One of their distinguished columnists called me contemptible for my efforts in trying to put a bridle on the giveaway of public funds for trash—which some highbrow "art" critic has the nerve to call art. My gloating friend from North Carolina, Tom Wicker, of the New York times, called me Senator Know Nothing. He better not take a poll of the American people on this question. If Senators are interested, I will take them up to my office and show them many thousands of letters and telegrams from the people of America on this issue. The people have spoken. They may have to speak again if this amendment is defeated, and they will have a chance.

AMENDMENT NO. 153 IN DISAGREEMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153 to the aforesaid bill, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert:

": Provided, That—

A. None of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials which in the judgment of the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be considered obscene, including but not limited to, depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value.

B. It is the Sense of the Congress:

(1) That under the present procedures employed for awarding National Endowment for the Arts grants, although the National Endowment for the Arts has had an excellent record over the years, it is possible for projects to be funded without adequate review of the artistic content or value of the work.

(2) That recently works have been funded which are without artistic value but which are criticized as pornographic and shocking by any standards.

(3) That censorship inhibits and stultifies the full expression of art.

(4) That free inquiry and expression is reaffirmed. Therefore, be it resolved:

(a) That all artistic works do not have artistic or humanistic excellence and an application can include works that possess both non-excellent and excellent portions.

(b) That the Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts has the responsibility to determine whether such an application should be funded.

(c) That the National Endowment for the Arts must find a better method to seek out those works that have artistic excellence and to exclude those works which are without any redeeming literary, scholarly, cultural or artistic value.

(d) That a commission be established to review the National Endowment for the Arts' grant making procedures, including those of its panel system, to determine whether there should be standards for grant making other than "substantial artistic and cultural significance, giving emphasis to American creativity and cultural diversity and the maintenance and encouragement of professional excellence" (20 U.S.C. 954(c)(1)) and if so, then what other standards. The criteria to be considered by the commission shall include but not be limited to possible standards where (a) applying contemporary community standards would find that the work taken as a whole appeals to a prurient interest; (b) the work depicts or describes in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct; and (c) the work, taken as a whole, lacks serious artistic and cultural value.

C. (1) There is hereby established a temporary Independent Commission for the purpose of:

(a) reviewing the National Endowment for the Arts' grant making procedures, including those of its panel system; and

(b) considering whether the standard for publicly funded art should be different than the standard for privately funded art;

(2) The Commission shall be composed of twelve members as follows:

(a) four members appointed by the President;

(b) four members appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in consultation with the minority leader of the House of Representatives;

(c) four members appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the President pro tempore of the Senate in consultation with the minority leader of the Senate;

(d) the chairman shall be designated by vote of the Commission members; and

(e) a quorum for the purposes of conducting meetings shall be seven.

(3) Members of the Commission shall serve without pay. While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in Government service are allowed expenses under 5 U.S.C. 5703.

(4) The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out its duties, hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate.

(5) The Commission shall issue a report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate no later than 180 days after th date of enactment of this Act.

(6) The Commission shall expire on September 30, 1990.

(7) Expenses of the Commission not to exceed $250,000, including administrative support, shall be furnished by the National Endowment for the Arts".

AMENDMENT NO. 991 TO HOUSE AMENDMENT TO SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 153

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. I ask the clerk to read it slowly on my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS] proposes an amendment numbered 991 to the House amendment to Senate amendment No. 153 in disagreement.

In the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 153 in section (A), strike the phrase "None of the funds" and all that follows to the period and insert the following: "None of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used to promote, discriminate, or produce materials that are obscene or that depict or describe, in a patently offensive way, sexual or excretory activities or organs, including but not limited to obscene depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sexual intercourse".

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished clerk for reading it slowly. Around this place, generally he goes as fast as he can in the interest of time.

The amendment I sent to the desk contains the exact language the Senate passed last week—with one exception: I have inserted the Federal Communication Commission's [FCC] definition of indecent material as upheld by the Supreme Court in FCC versus Pacifica. If the lawyers in the Senate want to know the cite for that case, it is 438 U.S. 726.

During the debate last week on this floor, Senator after Senator got up to express disgust with the Mapplethorpe photographs and declared over and over again that such art should never have been funded. Unfortunately, the language of the conference report, as the Washington Post in an editorial this morning acknowledges, just wipes out everything the Senate has tried to do on this issue. The report puts us right back to ground zero because the conference report creates a loophole that will clearly allow the National Endowment for the Arts to fund the Mapplethorpe photographs again.

I did not bring the pictures here this morning. I think Senators saw what I was talking about the last time, which is why they expressed the disgust that I have just mentioned.

But if Senators do not believe me that the conference language is worthless as a check on the NEA, perhaps they will believe Congressman YATES. Perhaps they will believe sources in the National Endowment for the Arts and a prominent arts lawyer with a Los Angeles law firm. I call Senators' attention to an article from the Los Angeles Times written by the Times art correspondent, Alan Parachini, which I have asked the pages to place on the desk of each Senator.

That article states absolutely correctly that in an exchange with Congressman ROHRABACHER over in the House of Representatives, Congressman YATES said that: "Funding of obscene art was not effectively prohibited by the conference report."

Mr. Parachini also reported that James Fitzpatrick, a prominent arts lawyer with the prestigious firm of Arnold & Porter, who submitted a legal brief to the conferees on the bill on behalf of the American Arts Alliance, concluded from his reading of the conference report that the wording of the conference report "fails completely to achieve any degree of subject matter control."

Is this where the U.S. Senate wants to leave this question, which is very much on the minds of the American people? Do we want to say, "Well, we went through some motions here and reported out some gobbledygook but it is behind us now?"

Under the law, if the conference report is adopted as it stands without my pending amendment, the National Endowment for the Arts, and all others receiving the taxpayers' money, will be free to do whatever they please.

This Senator says, no. This Congress ought to act. If you want to turn down my amendment, that is fine, but let us go on record. I understand there is going to be a tabling motion and that will avoid Senators having to stand up and vote yea or nay on the question. But the people back home are smart enough to know that a vote to table is a vote against the amendment.

In any case, the Los Angeles Times quoted unidentified sources within the National Endowment for the Arts itself that "the wording appears to be so vague that virtually no artistic subject matter would be taboo."

So here we go. Any yoyo out there across America's land can get himself a glass jar and fill it with his own urine, stick a crucifix in it, take a picture of it and get a $15,000 award subsidized with the taxpayers' money. That is exactly what Mr. Andres Serrano did.

I do not know about other Senators, but I find this state of affairs somewhat ironic in that my original amendment was unfairly and incorrectly criticized as prohibiting everything from the Bible to Shakespeare. And now Congressman YATES comes along and compromises the amendment passed by the Senate of the United States. And what does his compromise prohibit? Absolutely nothing. Nothing. It creates a loophole so wide you can drive 12 Mack trucks through it abreast.

If the legal effect of the conference report is to prohibit nothing, then the only possible interpretation of the language is that it was no more than a sop to fool the American people into thinking that the liberal majority in Congress is actually willing to get tough on the NEA for funding trash like Mr. Mapplethorpe's and Mr. Serrano's.

So this is put up or shut up time, Mr. President. I may get beat again, and the Washington Post and the New York Times may gloat again, but the American people are going to take note of this vote.

Mr. President, note what section (A) of the conference report says in setting forth, a test for obscenity in NEA funding decisions. It would be laughable, if it were not so serious. It says:

None of the funds authorized to be appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials which in the judgment of the National Endowment for the Arts or the National Endowment for the Humanities may be considered obscene, including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts and—which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

Here is where the cookie crumbles, Mr. President—

Who makes that judgment? You got it, the NEA, the very crowd that caused the controversy in the first place.

If we do not close this barn door, Mr. President, all the horses are going to be galloping over the horizon.

Now, note how Congressman YATES interpreted this obscenity funding test, if you can call it that. This is what he said:

If the chairman—

Meaning the chairman of the NEA—

If the chairman decides that the merit to the application is overcome by the weight of the obscenity, then he would not approve the grant.

Dear me, the chairman of the NEA will decide what obscenity is worthy of Federal funding under the conference report.

Here is the point, Mr. President: Congressman YATES—who, by the way, received a standing ovation down at a black-tie dinner with the arts crowd the other night—is a hero because he defeated HELMS, do you not see. Big deal. He did not defeat HELMS. He defeated the vast majority of the American people who are disgusted with the idea of giving the taxpayers' money to artists who promote homosexuality insidiously and deliberately, who desecrate crucifixes by immersing them in urine, and others who will engage in whatever perversion it takes to win acclaim as an artist on the "offending edge" and therefore entitled to taxpayer funding.

Mr. President, I have a message for the Congressman. Old HELMS has been beat before. But old HELMS does not quit. If the Senate does not approve the amendment today, the Senate will vote on it again and again, on bill after bill, month after month, year after year, until Government subsidies for "artistic" perversion are prohibited once and for all.

Congressman YATES, in the House, was not talking about banning Federal funding of obscenity. He was not talking about that at all. He was saying that we need to weigh the obscenity and ban it only if the obscenity outweighs the "social merit" of the work. And remember, that "social merit" will be determined by the so-called art experts who have been involved in this mess from the very beginning. That is the point.

Now, it was my understanding that what Senators wanted the other night was to ban without peradventure Federal funding to all obscenity, period.

The Supreme Court's first amendment test for banning obscene materials in the Miller case, which we have discussed over and over again on this floor, states that material is not obscene unless:

> The average person applying community standards would find that the work:
> (1) taken as a whole, appeals to a prurient interest in sex;
> (2) depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct; and
> (3) when taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

What does that mean, Mr. President? That means that if a work appeals to prurient interests and also depicts or describes sexual or excretory conduct in a patently offensive way, it still will not be considered obscene under this conference report, if, when taken as a whole—and, oh, what a gaping "hole" that is—when taken as a whole—w-h-o-l-e—it is considered to have some vestige of serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value as determined by the NEA, the crowd that exercised such terrible judgment in the first place. The crowd that has repeatedly said over the years, "Butt out, Congress; do not interfere. Send us the money; we will make all the value judgments about art because Congress and the public are simply too ignorant to understand the artists' higher calling." Hog wash.

I think the Congress ought to say, "No, you will not do it alone with no accountability, not if you are spending Federal money, not if you are spending the taxpayers' money." No, sir.

If the test for obscenity in the Miller case were left to the average person to determine whether the Mapplethorpe exhibit or similar works contained some serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value, I would not worry, not one bit. But the conference report says to the contrary. Look at what it says.

The report takes the third prong of the Miller test and restates it as an independent test that is left entirely up to the judgment of the art experts, self-proclaimed and often self-appointed, at the NEA to determine.

Congress may think something is obscene, and the American public may think something is obscene, but under this conference report language before us, the NEA, the arty crowd, will be authorized to fund it, by giving away the taxpayers' money, despite the objections of Congress, despite the objections of the public if, in the opinion of the self-proclaimed art experts, it has all of that gobbledygook that I have read over and over again, serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

I imagine—well, I am sure that they found some artistic merit in the Mapplethorpe photo with the bullwhip sticking out of his rear end. That kind of garbage won, what was it, $15,000—no, it was $30,000, I am advised. The people who put that exhibit together got $30,000 from the pockets of the people of Beaulaville, NC, and Hartford, CT; New York City, Seattle, WA; Miami, FL; from taxpayers all over this country.

Mr. President, that is the reason I am on this floor, at this hour, on this morning. In fact, under the conference report, even if the experts agree among themselves that the material is obscene, they are still supposed to weigh the merit of the work against the weight of the obscenity before denying funds.

Congressman YATES explained to the House that if applications are otherwise obscene, that is, if they appeal to the prurient interests and depict sexual conduct in a patently offensive manner:

> It was the conference's intention to leave within the discretion of the NEA and HEH chairmen the decision as to whether or not there was enough social merit or the literary, political, artistic or scientific kind to justify overcoming the possibility—of obscenity and approving the grant.

I reiterate the point, Mr. President, this conference report would allow NEA to fund works such as Mapplethorpe's as long as the panels of art "experts" appointed by the NEA find some artistic, political, literary, or scientific merit to such works when they are considered in their entirety. Put another way—both figuratively and literally—the experts can bring the garbage in as long as they bring it in with enough flowers to cover the stench.

Mr. President, do we really believe, after all the rhetoric from the arts establishment, that they believe that the Mapplethorpe exhibit as a whole has no "serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value."

Look at a few of the so-called art establishment's comments about the social merits of Mapplethorpe's work.

The catalog for Mapplethorpe's Government-funded exhibit contains the following statement:

> Sex was supposed to be a private matter between individuals, but Mapplethorpe saw it as the last frontier of self-liberation and freedom. * * * The rediscovery of Eros in recent years, therefore, has a political and social dimension.

This past June, the Washington Post referred to Mapplethorpe's efforts as work "which has been highly praised by critics." The Post also reported that yet another Mapplethorpe exhibit at the Whitney Museum of Modern Art in New York last year "received very favorable reviews."

Need I remind Senators that the Corcoran Gallery of Art was—and still is—being excoriated by the arts establishment, as reported by the Post, for canceling the Mapplethorpe exhibit and for not upholding "the artistic freedom to show what the professional curators felt was the appropriate thing to show." There have been absurd declarations such as, for example, that the Corcoran "ceased to exist as a vibrant part of the art community" because it denied "the public's right to fully experience the arts," meaning the Mapplethorpe exhibit of course.

Mr. President, the art critics acknowledge that Mapplethorpe's obscene photographs were an effort to gain wider exposure of, and acceptance for, homosexuality—which happens to be the stated political goal of all homosexual pressure groups. For instance, the catalog for the Mapplethorpe exhibit at the Whitney Museum of Modern Art concedes that Mapplethorpe felt sadomasochism (say-doh-mass-uh-kiz-em) was an almost obligatory subject for him to treat and that "he reported it not as a voyeur, but as an advocate. * * * This is an artist that has made a deep incision into our culture."

Mapplethorpe was a talented photographer. He took some good photographs. But the ones we are talking about, and the ones we have been talking about, are pictures that deliberately promoted homosexuality and child molestation, and other activities that I cannot even discuss of the floor of the Senate.

But can there be any doubt, then, Mr. President, that a significant portion of the artistic community contends that the Mapplethorpe exhibit, not just as a whole, but even in its most obscene part, has "serious artistic, political, literary, or scientific value" and therefore should be eligible for Federal funding—under the terms of the conference amendment? Will the NEA in the future go against the judgment of the art world's avant garde in such matters? I would not bet on it.

The Washington Post, the New York Times, and all the rest, the knee-jerk papers around the Nation, said my efforts to prevent the NEA funding this trash "art" were at best silly and at worst amounted to censorship. Those are the most absurd suggestions possible.

How can you say to anybody applying for a grant that he is being censored if we do not give him the money, if we do not think his art is worth it? No artist, no citizen, has a right to demand that the taxpayers subsidize his "artistic" endeavors, even if those endeavors do not promote obscenity as Mapplethorpe's did.

Mr. President, it boils down to the fact that the conference language—absent the FCC's definition of "indecent" material in it—has brought us full circle. We got into this controversy in the first place because it was the NEA's judgment that the Mapplethorpe exhibit had sufficient artistic merit to warrant giving it a $30,000 Federal subsidy. And now the conference report, by not prohibiting it, implicitly authorizes it to happen again.

The Senate-passed language is somewhat less permissive than the conference report, but it would still allow the Mapplethorpe exhibit to be funded because it incorporates the same enormous loophole as the conference report which says something is not obscene—no matter how revolting—as long as there is some "serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value" to it.

My amendment closes this loophole by stipulating that the NEA may not, and must not, fund material which violates the Miller test's second prong concerning "work that depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct." The amendment does that by adding to the Senate passed language the Federal Communication Commission's [FCC] narrow definition of "indecent" as upheld by the Supreme Court in FCC v. Pacifica [438 U.S. 726]. Elaborating on the second prong of the Miller test, the FCC defined "indecent" material to include "material that depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual or excretory activities or organs."

Now if that definition does not describe the Mapplethorpe exhibit to a tee, I do not know what does. By including this definition, Congress can absolutely ensure that the NEA will never again fund a Mapplethorpe exhibit or anything like it. If the FCC—with the approval of the Supreme Court—can apply this "indecency" standard to broadcasts over the public airwaves, I see no reason why the NEA cannot apply it with equal ease to expenditures from the public coffers.

If Senators were sincere in their statements the other night—that the Federal Government should not fund pornography such as Mapplethorpe's in the future—it is imperative that they now vote in support of my amendment to remove the enormous loophole in the conference language that will allow it to happen again. Make no mistake about it, the conference language without the FCC's definition of "indecent" is just legal hocus pocus. It leaves the status quo exactly as it was before this controversy began and we will have done absolutely nothing to prevent the NEA from funding trash and garbage by calling it "art."

Again, the question is simple, Mr. President. If Senators believe there ought to be a law on the books allowing the National Endowment for the Arts to use the taxpayers' money to fund disgusting material, material that "depict or describe, in a patently offensive way, sexual or excretory activities or organs,"—I am quoting from the Supreme Court's decision—they should vote to table my amendment. If that is what they believe, fine. Vote to table the Helms amendment, but be prepared for some questions to be asked by the people back home.

On the other hand, if Senators agree that funding such disgusting materials with the taxpayers' money is outrageous, they should, and I, of course, will, vote for the amendment.

One other thought, and I shall yield the floor. I met at some length with John Frohnmayer, the new Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts. I say to my friend from the west coast, he is a delightful man, and not only did he tell me then, but he called later to reiterate that on his watch things like Mapplethorpe and Serrano will not happen again. And I believe that.

But suppose Mr. Frohnmayer goes down in a plane or leaves office for some other reason and somebody else replaces him? Congress ought to spell it out now, that we, the Congress of the United States, will not further permit the waste, the awesome waste, of taxpayers' money in such fashion. I support Mr. Frohnmayer. I know he is a man of integrity, and I know he is a man of his word. I am not worried about him. But I think we ought to do our duty and be glad that we have a man who agrees with us.

I yield the floor. I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

Mr. GORTON. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield some time for this Senator?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator wish?

Mr. GORTON. I believe 5 minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, it is with some regret but real firmness that I stand to oppose the amendment of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina; firmness because I believe it to be a fundamentally flawed approach, regret because I think the implicit point upon which the Senator's amendment is based is a correct one.

The problem, the overwhelming flaw with this amendment, is the fact that it adds to the amendment which is included in the bill the phrase "in a patently offensive way." That phrase, Mr. President, is simply not susceptible to any kind of precise meaning whatsoever. What is patently offensive to the Senator from North Carolina may not be so to me, or to the distinguished Senator from Georgia, much less John Frohnmayer or to members of the board of the National Endowment for the Arts.

In other words, this language simply provides no rational guidance to people who will make decisions if it is a part of the law. It therefore should appropriately be defeated.

But the Senator from North Carolina, it seems to me, makes two points. One is that there should be legislation of this sort affecting and guiding the National Endowment for the Arts.

The second and the more important point which he makes, and the point with which I agree, is that the people of the United States of America, the taxpayers, should not be required to pay for "art"—I put that word in quotation marks—which attacks the faith, morals, or firmly held beliefs of large numbers, even though those large numbers may in some cases may not be a majority of the people of the United States themselves, whether or not those attacks would be fully and completely protected by the first amendment in the absence of a Federal subsidy for them.

That is the difference, Mr. President. Each of the works of art which led to this controversy is I believe protected by the first amendment. None of those works of art have any kind of right or entitlement to be supported by the taxpayers of the United States. Therefore, it was with great pleasure that I greeted the original form of the Interior appropriations bill which was passed by this body. It simply stated that for the next 5 years neither of the museums or the entities which had sponsored those exhibits could receive money from the National Endowment for the Arts.

I deeply regret that the conference committee has abandoned that position for whatever grounds. I hope, and earnestly, that the National Endowment for the Arts will not in fact subsidize directly or indirectly either of those institutions, at least for the period of time of this appropriation. If it does, it will meet with great disfavor on the part of this Senator.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. GORTON. Yes. I yield to the Senator from Idaho for a question.

Mr. McCLURE. I hope the Senator has noted the provision that is in the conference report, that before the endowment can offer a grant to either of these institutions, they must submit a report to the committees of the Congress affected with an explanation of the reasons why they propose such a grant. The grant cannot be made until it lies before the Congress in those committees for 30 days.

Mr. GORTON. This Senator has noted that provision, and feels it is better than nothing, but not nearly as good as the original provision passed by the Senate.

Mr. McCLURE. Will the Senator yield for one moment further? I agree with the Senator. That provision was one that I had offered for the committee in the Senate deliberations. The House was absolutely adamant on that issue. That was one of the compromises struck.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

I simply make the point that had we disciplined the National Endowment for the Arts in that fashion, I think we would have solved the problems which have raised this amendment and the preceding amendments which have been brought up by the Senator from North Carolina in a far better fashion. In fact, I note that due to the generosity of the Senator from North Carolina, we have before us copies of an editorial from the Washington Post this morning. One sentence reads, "As it is, the endowments of the institutions that they fund are more likely to respond to their narrow escape with increased caution."

I hope firmly, Mr. President, that that is in fact the case. If they do so, both the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from North Carolina will have reached the goals which the Senator from North Carolina attempts to reach with an amendment which I feel, regrettably, is wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina seeks to amend the conference agreement on amendment No. 153. The conference language is applicable to the agencies under concern: the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The Senator from North Carolina would apply funding restrictions to all agencies funded in the bill. Yet, our only problem has been with the Endowments. There is no need to send the conference report back to the House to modify points that have not been a problem.

Second, the conference language provides guidance to the Endowments and directs them to use their judgment to not support works of art or verse which is obscene.

The Senator from North Carolina would simply ban Federal funding for obscene works and would not assign responsibility to any individual or agency for determining what is obscene.

Obscenity is an issue which even the Supreme Court has said is difficult to define. In art, we are dealing with judgment. We are not considering matters such as traffic laws where it is clear whether someone has run a red light.

We are dealing with issues of judgment, and the responsibility for making that judgment must be assigned to an individual or agency. The language in the conference report does assign responsibility for making these judgments to the Endowments; and, in that respect, I believe it is superior to the language offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

To those who might argue that we cannot trust the Endowments to exercise the correct judgment, I would point out that this debate on the mistakes made by the National Endowment for the Arts—and clearly there were mistakes made in funding some of the work—this debate has raged in the Senate since this spring. I know of no Member who supports the offensive works. More importantly, the National Endowment for the Arts has a new chairman. He was confirmed by the Senate in the last month. He has indicated that he has heard our message, and I believe that he will be responsive and will use careful judgment.

Mr. President, I believe that the conference language places the responsibility exactly where it belongs.

Third, the Senator from North Carolina introduces language which identifies new standards for obscenity.

The conferees establish a Commission to review whether publicly funded art should be held to a higher standard. I think we should let the Commission have time to complete its review.

Mr. President, the matter before the Senate with respect to the National Endowments is the result of extensive debate and compromise. That debate went on for hours during the 3 days of conference, and for hours prior to the conference, and in preconference meetings.

As I have already indicated, I did not enter into the debate. Senator McCLURE and others tried very hard to find language that would uphold the premise behind the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, and at the same time try to come up with effective language that would be enforceable and would prevent a repetition of this offense, offense in the eyes of the American people, who believe in decency and morality. To craft language that would meet the concerns of all on both sides of the conference table in both Houses is an extremely different matter.

I think Mr. McCLURE and others certainly did the very best they could to come up with the language that we have here. We could have been arguing yet in the conference, obviously.

Mr. President, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

I yield to the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator for yielding.

I appreciate the comment that has been made, and I agree. I think we cannot make it too strong that the Senate conferees tried very hard to pull the Senate's position as expressed in the Helms amendment, modified by the Fowler amendment. The observation needs to be underscored that despite our efforts, the House refused to accede to the Senate's position.

Is that a fair representation?

Mr. BYRD. That is a fair representation. No member of the conference took the matter lightly. It was probably the most contentious issue before the conference. I will regret it if we should have to revisit this issue on the this bill. So many hours and weeks and months have gone into the development of this legislation through the hearings process and markup and the conference.

Now we are at the point of adopting the conference report, and, hopefully, we can send it on to the President without amendments. I hope that the compromise before the Senate will be passed overwhelmingly, passed by the Senate this afternoon, so we can send it to the President for his signature.

I do not want to see the Senate amend the amendment in disagreement and have that go back to the House.

Mr. President, I compliment the Senator from North Carolina for his tenacity in the effort, and I must say that I share, to a very considerable extent, his feelings on the matter. I think that the real issue here is, what the American people should be expected to subsidize, and I have no doubt but that the overwhelming majority of the American people, if they saw what they were subsidizing, would find it most disgusting, and they would certainly be extremely indignant about it.

Mr. President, there are many battlefields on which this battle can be fought on another day, and I hope that the Senate, in this instance, will adopt the conference report. I expect to move to table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

As the Senator who has the responsibility on this side of the aisle for moving this conference report, I would be constrained to oppose the amendment and I would have to move to table it. I hope the Senate would support that tabling motion. That does not mean that my feelings are assuaged on this matter at all. But for the sake of getting on with the legislation, I hope that we will do just that.

So, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment by Mr. HELMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There was a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I see the distinguished Senator from Vermont. Does he wish me to yield time to him?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I would like very much for the Senator to yield 5 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the junior Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Helms amendment. I also am not really exactly pleased with what is in the bill itself as passed out of conference. On the other hand, I certainly will accept it under the circumstances.

Mr. President, I have twice before expressed my strong concerns and objections over the Helms amendment regarding the National Endowment for the Arts.

I would have preferred that the amendment was removed in conference. There is no question in my mind that the original version would fail a first amendment test. It would represent an impermissable attempt by the Government to restrict speech through a Federal funding program.

Instead, the conferees agreed upon a more moderate version of the Helms amendment. They looked to the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court Miller standard for a definition of obscenity, and agreed that Federal funding should be denied to artistic work that "when taken as a whole does not have serious literacy, artistic, political, or scientific value." Thus, the first amendment test is probably passed.

However, I want to express once again my strong concern that we in the Congress might be moving dangerously close to setting standards for artistic merit. I hope that we have not created an atmosphere in which artists will fear Government or public reprisal for work that is supported by the Endowments.

I would like to focus on a little bit different aspect on the problem in our mind. I think in our country through the risks we take and the ventures we support we adhere to the first amendment. Any action which denigrates this amendment creates a risk to our society and hurts success.

A cornerstone of democracy is the first amendment. Any action which denigrates this amendment creates a risk to the success of the democracy. At the same time, adherence to the free speech preamble creates the risk of serious controversy and public fury. And I agree that some of the art we have seen here does excite me to some sense of concern and fury. The flagburning incident is the most obvious and recent example.

But comparing that incident with the execution of Chinese students for demonstrating for freedom emphasizes the strengths of our society.

Throughout history, the arts have not been immune from controversy and furor. Before reviewing some illustrative examples, let us first place a few facts in perspective. Of the 85,000 grants that have been awarded by the National Endowment for the Arts, only 20 have resulted in significant controversy. This is one-fortieth of 1 percent. This is hardly an unacceptable risk if you compare it with the alternative.

To raise awareness of the danger which might be created by such censorship as proposed by the Helms amendment, it is helpful to look at the controversy that some of the more notable artists faced. Famous books, paintings, sculptures, and even ballets have all felt the heat of censorship and probably would have raised the ire of many Members of this body at the time they occurred.

In 1876, in Brooklyn, NY, "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" was banned from the children's room in the public library.

In 1885, in Concord, MA, "Huck Finn" was banned from the public library as "trash and suitable only for the slums."

In 1905, again in Brooklyn, both books were banned from the public library's children's room as "bad examples for ingenuous youth."

In Paris, in 1863, Manet's two most famous paintings, "Dejeuner sur L'Herbe" and "Olympia" created general outrage and were attacked as indecent when they were first exhibited, and subsequently had to be removed from exhibition.

William Faulkner won a Nobel Prize for literature in 1950, 2 years after complaints from fundamentalist ministers precipitated a raid and approximately 2,000 allegedly obscene books were seized including "Mosquitos," "Sanctuary," and "The Wild Palms." In 1954, "Sanctuary," "Pylon," and "Soldier's Pay" were placed on a disapproved list of the National Organization of Decent Literature.

"Sacre du Printemps/Rights of Springs," a ballet by Igor Stravinsky, is now considered one of the seminal cultural events of the 20th century. However, in 1913 in Paris it was greeted with boos from the audience and subsequent performances had to be canceled.

Another of our great authors, Ernest Hemingway was denied the Pulitzer Prize in 1940 after Columbia University President Nicholas Murray Butler said to the Pulitzer Advisory Board,

I hope that you will reconsider before you ask the university to be associated with an award for a work of this nature.

The novel in question was "For Whom The Bell Tolls." Even as recently as 1962, Texans for America opposed textbooks which referred to books by Hemingway.

Finally, D.W. Griffith's pioneering full-length film, "The Birth of a Nation," considered among the greatest movies ever made, has stirred controversy because of its glorification of the Ku Klux Klan.

One, of course, could list numerous historical greats whose art would fail the Helms standard: Shakespeare, Michelangelo, and Flaubert to name a few.

To me it is question of risk in our society.

Is it not worth the risk of one-fortieth of 1 percent to ensure that we do not stifle the potential of just one such future artist?

In my mind the answer is clear and, therefore, I must oppose the Helms amendment and with some reluctance agree to the bill with the present standard included.

I yield back whatever time I have remaining.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time remains to each side on the conference report and to each side on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has 12 minutes on the conference report. The Senator from Idaho has 7 minutes on the conference report. The Senator from North Carolina has 21 minutes on his amendment. The Senator from West Virginia controls 23 minutes in opposition.

Mr. McCLURE. Will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BYRD. Yes; I yield time on the conference report.

Mr. McCLURE. My understanding is I had yielded myself 5 minutes; I yielded the Senator from Oregon 10 minutes; I yielded to the Senator from Montana for 2 minutes. I do not understand how the sum of those subtracted from 30 comes to 7.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subsequent to that the Senator used 2 minutes and the Senator yielded 2 minutes to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. McCLURE. I did not use 2 minutes. I asked a Senator to yield so I might ask a question of Senator GORTON and that was on Senator GORTON's time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time charged to Mr. McCLURE be charged to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, would it be agreeable with all Senators if we could get consent to have a vote on the conference report at 1 o'clock today and that the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from West Virginia retain the time under their control that presently exists on the amendment by Mr. HELMS until after that vote on the conference report?

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Senator. I could see no problem with that. As I understand it, we have each about 21 or 22 minutes apiece. Wait a minute. That adds up to 44. I still do not think we have a problem about it, because I intend to go ahead and finish the debate. Why do we not wait a minute to see how it turns out? I would say approximately 1 o'clock or shortly thereafter.

Mr. BYRD. All right; so Senators may be notified that a vote will occur, then at approximately 1 o'clock on the adoption of the conference report.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes. I do want the RECORD to reflect the Parliamentarian was correct. The Chair did appropriately point out that I had used some additional time.

I did not want it to stand that I was critical of the calculation.

There will also be two votes that will occur either back to back or very closely together: One on the conference report and one with regard to the Helms amendment. Is that not correct?

Mr. BYRD. On or in relation to the amendment by Mr. HELMS, but they would not be necessarily back to back, because each of the two Senators who control time on that amendment would retain that time until after the action on the conference report.

Mr. HELMS. In any case, I will say to the Senator, it will not be far long after.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, allow me to take a moment to express my feeling with respect to the conference action on the obscenity question and the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina that is now pending.

It is very troublesome to the Senator from Idaho, because I am concerned that those who make grants in the field of the arts and humanities are still clinging to the idea that indeed they should not be circumscribed in any way, shape, or form in the manner by which they use the taxpayers' money.

I said in debate on the bill earlier that I am angry—and I am—I am angry about what they are doing to the public willingness to support the national endowments. I support the National Endowment for the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities. I am offended when they make a mistake. And if they make a mistake, and if they would just admit they made a mistake, a lot of this furor would go away. It is their stubborn clinging to the idea that Congress has no right to limit the expenditures of public funds that is causing the current nationwide discussion of their activity.

Unless anybody thinks that is just my own reaction, I hear it around the halls, I hear it in the cloakrooms, I hear people saying, "Well, maybe if that is what they are going to do, we ought to cut off all funding," and I would regret that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken for 2 minutes.

Mr. McCLURE. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

So I am caught in a situation in which I do not like what I see happening out there. I do not like the attitudes which are being expressed. I see that as a threat to our ability to continue to provide public funding for these activities. And yet I know that we did the best we could in the conference, as inadequate as it was, and I think indeed that if it is sent back to the conference, it will have the same result.

So I am torn between my personal conviction that they should not be resisting an attempt to establish some standards and confess, indeed as editorialists have written, that this will have a de facto effect on their conduct, and I say it better have. But I do not believe that we will do better in the conference.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, just a brief comment or two, then I want to yield to the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] for 5 minutes or longer, if he desires.

I wish the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] was still on the floor, because I would like to ask him two or three questions. He raised again the totally ridiculous question of censorship. It is not censorship when the U.S. Government refuses to fund anything it does not want to fund. To suggest that censorship is involved is just not sensible.

Over and over again on this floor, the declaration has been made—and this came from the National Endowment for the Arts spokespeople—well, they said one time 80,000, one time 85,000, another time only 20 or 18; they change the numbers constantly.

I want to know if Senator JEFFORDS or any other Senator has looked at the other 80,000 or 79,890. Who knows what is in there? All the Congress will be saying is look out and do not give away the taxpayers' money for this sort of garbage again.

The distinguished Senator from Washington, my good friend, SLADE GORTON, lost me in some of his comments. The phrase in the amendment, I will say to him and I quote, "or that depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual or excretory activities," and so forth—is exactly the language upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, in FCC versus Pacifica.

So what are we talking about? The Court approved this language 11 years ago. And yet, as Senator McCLURE has indicated, some of the people in the art crowd say, "Butt out and leave us alone.; just send the money." This Senator says, no way. We are not going to send any more money for the garbage as produced by Mr. Mapplethorpe or Mr. Serrano and the other guys.

Now let us get our facts straight and understand what we are voting on. We are not voting on censorship. There is no censorship involved. This is acknowledged by every fairminded person, including many Senators who a week or two ago voted against my amendment. They say there is no censorship, and of course there is not.

Senator MOYNIHAN correctly pointed out on July 26, 1989—when the Senate passed my original amendment—that "* * * we are not dealing with censorship per se. Nothing in the bill before us inhibits the first amendment right of these artists to exhibit their work. * * *"

A unanimous Supreme Court in 1983 in Regan v. Taxation With Representation, 461 U.S. 540, reiterated a long line of cases holding that Congress' decision not to subsidize the exercise of a fundamental right, such as free expression, does not infringe upon that right. In other words, it does not amount to censorship.

So, Mr. President, a unanimous Supreme Court says that Congress is free to choose not to fund the NEA at all, or to fund it with absolutely no strings attached. Or, Congress may choose to regulate the NEA anywhere between those two extremes and not violate anybody's rights under the Constitution.

Thus restricting the conditions under which the NEA will spend Americans' tax dollars does not amount to censorship, so says the Supreme Court.

However, if Congress is going to use the first amendment obscenity standards—which must be met in order to prosecute someone for the sale or exposure of obscenity—to also restrict what the NEA may fund with tax dollars, as we are being urged to do, Congress should at least use the words in Miller which prohibit patently offensive depictions of sexual or excretory conduct. That language at least has some real teeth in it which would prevent the NEA from funding trash "art."

Congressman YATES used the Miller language which—as we can see from the NEA's own interpretation of it—would allow the NEA to do exactly as it pleases without regard to the public's sensitivities. Artists' will continue to compete with adult bookstores for customers, one of which has been the Federal Government because the evidence is overwhelming that the self-proclaimed "art" experts—whose judgment the NEA defers to—consider works such as Mapplethorpe's obscenity to have "some redeeming artistic and political value."

Mr. President, I yield to the able Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from North Carolina for yielding.

I think the Senator from North Carolina deserves a great deal of credit from the taxpayers of the United States for his courageousness and willingness to stand up against what has been termed by the media as an unpopular issue.

I think that there is a point we often fail to recognize, however: That the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is actually too narrow, not too broad, as I have heard argued here on the floor.

The question that we probably should be debating is whether or not we should fund the arts at all. And I recall the late H.R. Gross from Iowa, whom I had the privilege to work with in the other body. He used to have a heyday on the National Endowment for the Arts.

I recall one of his amendments was that if we are going to fund the Kennedy Center—the way he used to put it—so all the wealthy people can go down and enjoy the arts at the expense of the working men and women of America, we should at least open the Kennedy Center up every so often for wrestling matches and other kinds of enjoyment that other people might consider art.

That was the late Congressman Gross' way to make the point that we should stop trying to prescribe Federal remedies to all problems.

I happen to be one Senator that does not think the U.S. Senate ought to be involved in the arts. But I do think that it is entirely proper, if the Government is going to put the taxpayers' dollars up, as my senior distinguished colleague, Senator MCCLURE, has said, they certainly have the right to have something to say about how the taxpayers' money is spent.

I think we should apply the basic principle that James Kilpatrick applied in an interesting article and I might just quote the headline on the recent Kilpatrick article, which was, "Helms Amendment Misses the Target."

James Kilpatrick is a friend of JESSE HELMS, he is a friend of mine and many other Senators here. The headline says "Helms Amendment Misses the Target." This is the theme of the article: "My thought is the Federal Government has no business in the arts business. The Government ought to not be sponsoring any artist to produce any work at public expense."

Now there is a reason that he says that. Not that they have not done some good. You cannot throw this much money at the National Endowment for the Arts and not have done some good in preserving some culture and appreciation for the arts in the United States of America.

But look at some of the places where the money has been spent. The State Council of the Arts in New York, which gets Federal money through the National Endowment for the Arts, has backed all kinds of things. I would invite my colleagues to note some of the exhibits funded with Federal dollars that would be offensive to many, many of the taxpayers of the United States.

So I would come back to my original premise. If we want to do something in the U.S. Senate for the appreciation of the arts in this country, what we should do is to try to create an economic and political environment of stability, of sound money, of a relatively competitive marketplace with fairness so all people can get into the market, where people can have an opportunity to earn some money and keep the money, and then they can donate the money to the arts.

The best thing U.S. Senators can do for appreciation of the arts would be to balance the Federal budget, keep a low tax rate on the working people and producers and capital of the United States of America, provide for a country with political and military and economic strength, so we will not be threatened.

Then people can donate all the money they want to the arts and there will be plenty of wealth created where the private sector can donate it, and the U.S. Senate will not have to tie its time up debating what is offensive to the taxpayers and what is not.

It is very clear in the Supreme Court's first case test for obscene materials. The majority in the Miller case said: Material is not obscene unless, "When taken as a whole, it appeals to a prurient interest in sex; depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct; and, when taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value."

This has already been decided. The Senate is not participating in any censorship. The Senate is doing something responsible. We got into this mess by getting involved in the National Endowment for the Arts in the first place. I realize we are in it. It is probably not going to change. I do not believe this Senator will live long enough to see the Federal Government back out of some of these areas, even though I wish it would. The FCC definition of obscenity says: Material is indecent if it "depicts or describes, in terms patently offensive * * * for the broadcast medium, sexual or excretory activities or organs."

That is what the statute says.

Senator HELMS' language is not anything new. It is not anything Senators could be concerned about, and we could be saved several million dollars. By eliminating NEA funding, the taxpayer would save $171 million.

I say again to my colleagues, why do we not try to stop congressional intervention into every way and walk of people's lives? That is really what the issue is all about. This is money that comes from hard-working people. They are trying to raise their families, pay their bills, educate their children. They are paying taxes to support the National Endowment for the Arts. Who goes to events funded by the National Endowment for the Arts? Go down and check the income of the people who go to the Kennedy Center. You will find it is not generally the Nation's working-class people. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HELMS. How much time do I have remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes, 24 seconds.

Mr. HELMS. I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma and 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I rise today to support Senator HELMS. But also I wish to compliment Senator BYRD and Senator MCCLURE because I participated in the conference. I tell the Senator from North Carolina, I wanted to help him in the conference. The conference was long. It was difficult. Senator MCCLURE and Senator BYRD, I think, did a very good job.

They did the best they could. They spent a couple of days on this issue, couple of days in conference and probably the majority of time on this issue. It was not easy. It was a difficult conference.

Those on the other side were very insistent, they did not want the Helms language. But I rise today in support of Senator HELMS because I was looking at the language that we ended up with. My patience kind of gave out. I was there for several hours on the issue and proposals were bouncing back and forth.

I tell my colleagues, at one time I heard some pretty good proposals, primarily from the Senator from Idaho. They sounded pretty good. They were not exactly as proposed by Senator HELMS. Senator JOHNSTON had some input on it. But I though we were making some progress and we would be effective in prohibiting Federal funding of obscene, indecent art.

But I read the Washington Post, I read the language in the committee report, and this language we have in the committee report is not really sufficient. It does not prohibit the funding of the type of art that Mr. Mapplethorpe used Federal funds for: Obscene art, art that would go so far as to having one man urinating into another man's mouth. That is sickening to this Senator. We do not prohibit it by this language. I thought maybe we did. I just read the language. But it does not do that. It does not go far enough.

I am not sure the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is perfect but at least it would prohibit that type of nonsense.

The report language, as stated by Mr. YATES—and I will just read something from the L.A. Times, just an article that says:

> Yates said funding of obscene artwork which played a crucial roll in precipitating the Endowment's crisis this year was not effectively prohibited.

In other words, this report language skirts around the issue. It talks about prohibiting it, but it does not prohibit it. It does not stop it. I will tell my colleagues, the taxpayers of my State and the taxpayers all across the country do not want to have anything to do with subsidizing this type of nonsense. Therefore, I even looked at the Washington Post. It says, and I will read it: "NEA could, in theory, still approve some of the artworks that touched off the current controversy." That says it all. If the NEA can still fund it, we did not go far enough.

I do not want to infringe on anybody's first amendment rights, but we do have the rights to curtail Federal funding, stop Federal funding, or make sure we do not fund obscene art—I cannot call it art—obscene objects that some people call art and receive taxpayers' subsidies.

I think the Senator is exactly right. I compliment him for his courage. It has not been easy. He has taken the brunt of more criticism for this one amendment than probably any Senator in a long, long time. He has courage.

I also compliment him because he has had the courage to bring this issue to the forefront. I hope and I think he will at least be successful in making those people who are giving these grants be a lot more careful in the future. I compliment him for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from North Carolina for yielding me this time. I want to pick up on what the Senator from Oklahoma was just saying. I have stood mute here on the floor of the Senate earlier when there has been debate on this issue and allowed the Senator from North Carolina to carry the burden of the debate and make his points.

I did that because I did not feel I had been involved enough in the language. I had not seen the gross pictures at that particular time. I knew there were legal arguments, first amendment arguments. So I waited and I hesitated. But I cannot do it today. There are two or three points I would like to make.

First, I would say, in my opinion, the National Endowment for the Arts has been out of control for years. I have repeatedly tried to work with the people there and have always found it extremely difficult. I found them to be arrogant. I found them even to be prejudiced, particularly with regard to my own State. When we would contact them and try to participate in what NEA had to offer, there was a down-the-nose attitude: Mississippi participate in the arts?

I have always resented it. Even this year we had a lady come from my State of Mississippi go over there and ask to participate in NEA, and she was totally rebuffed. As it turns out, that particular person apparently had a reputation in that vein and she is gone now. But it symbolizes the attitude that they have had over there for years.

I just cannot understand the resistance to the language of the Senator from North Carolina. I have been looking at his language. After looking at the pictures involved here, I do not see the problem others see. As a matter of fact, this is basically, as I understand it, the language that the Senate voted for earlier, the Helms-Fowler language.

Yet, in this conference report we have this much weaker language which even the Washington Post says does nothing, and which the L.A. Times said that, "According to Endowment sources, speaking on condition they would not be named, they said the wording appeared to be so vague that virtually no artistic subject matter would be taboo."

There are three conditions here. First of all, NEA decides whether or not it will be funded.

Then of course, it must be obscene or meet some of these other criteria pointed out.

Then a third step, it must have no serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

Three hurdles we are going to jump over? Would NEA really turn down anything? The question here to me is not the constitutional or legal arguments. It is a basic question: Are we going to use the people's money to fund this kind of trash?

As the Senator from North Carolina says, they can paint or take vulgar snapshots of anything they want to. But I refuse to allow a system where the money of the people that I represent will be used to pay for this sort of garbage.

The Senator is trying to make sure we get control over an organization that has been out of control, that just funds any kind of trash that is dragged in before them and says this is art, while at the same time treating other parts of the country and other artists as if they were totally unqualified or inept to do real artistic work.

I am not going to try to judge what is artistic and what is not, I am not the one who should do that. I just say that the language in this report does nothing. Nothing.

The Senator from North Carolina has language that will really deal with this serious problem. When this vote starts, I am going to have these Mapplethorpe pictures here on the floor, and I am going to show Senators as they come in the door what the NEA has been funding. You look at these photos and you walk in here and vote against what the Senator from North Carolina is trying to do. This is totally ridiculous. I cannot believe that we are arguing in legal terms over using Federal funds for this sort of thing at the National Endowment for the Arts. It is time we clip their wings. We should do it with this amendment.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee if he will yield me such time as he might have available, up to 5 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the Senator 5 minutes off the time under my control on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes Senator RUDMAN.

Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, I find it interesting that this is the subject of debate on a Saturday morning. I suppose it is as good as any having to be here on a Saturday morning. Quite frankly, some of the rhetoric might exceed some of the reality.

I want to say to my friend, the senior Senator from North Carolina, we have had discussions about this on the floor before. He is precisely right in his legal analysis. There is no argument on that, and I do not think anybody has tried to argue it.

The question is whether or not we are going to apply a first amendment standard to grants that the endowment will give. There is no question, and the managers have not disagreed, and I was part of the conference, that when the House insisted on language that started to put the value judgment from the Miller case, then that obviously made it a first amendment matter.

The Senator from Mississippi is correct, you cannot argue about that. If you want to have an absolute bar, lock the door, then you have to take that language out.

The language that the Senator from North Carolina offers this morning is not unlike the language of the Fowler-Rudman-Pryor amendment offered here, it seems like years ago. I guess it was just a few days. That is where we are.

So the question is, Why did the conferees do what they did? The conferees did what they did, very simply, because we had a conference as important as this one, with the Interior bill loaded with important subjects, as it was, and this was a strongly held position by the House, and it was agreed to.

Having said that, where are we really? Let us straighten something out for the American people. Even the Senator from North Carolina or the Senator from Mississippi would not disagree with this. The National Endowment for the Arts has not been in the business of running high-speed presses, turning out pornography. They fund thousands of art projects that are projects of distinction. As a matter of fact, there may be others, but these are the only two that I have heard of out of thousands that they grant. These undoubtedly are offensive.

The Senator from North Carolina may not want to admit it, but I think he knows it, that he has won his case, and it was a good case. He has had his victory. It is inconceivable to anyone who knows those two organizations that they would fund anything like Mapplethorpe or the other artist involved, Serrano, with the language that is in here which specifically says to them, you better watch what you fund if it gets across the bounds of the ordinary, decent judgment of the average American.

As a matter of fact, that is exactly what the Post said this morning. The Senator from North Carolina did not quote that particular part of it, but he conveniently made it available to us. They say, and they are right:

> The endowments and the institutions they fund are more likely to respond to their narrow escape with increased caution, making their choices with a view toward avoiding another firestorm.

Of course, that is right. Of course, after what has gone on here, there is a victory for the Senator from North Carolina. That is precisely why the distinguished chairman and ranking member agreed to the first-amendment language, because although they knew it would not be as tight as they would like it and as the Senate spoke, that for all intents and purposes we accomplished what we set out to do.

Let me say, let us not give the impression on the floor that these endowments have been funding obscenity by the yard. They have not been. Let us recognize that we have fired a warning shot across their bow. Let me say to the Senator from North Carolina that if it was to happen again in the coming year, with this language there is little doubt in my mind what we will do.

I will vote to table because I think the managers did an extraordinary job in trying to get this to the floor in a form we can go back to the House and get it approved. The Senator from North Carolina has achieved his purpose. We have a good restriction. It is not perfect; we will not disagree. The Senator's legal analysis is correct. Let us table this and let us see what happens in the coming 12 months. If they do not stop funding obscenities, we will do what we have to do.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator yield? The Senator from New Hampshire was a member of the conference as was I. Does the Senator recall that I offered up the so-called Fowler language in the conference and that that was capped with a second-degree amendment prepared by the distinguished Senator from Idaho?

The purpose of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Idaho, which I recall was drawn in conjunction also with the Senator from Oklahoma and I believe the Senator from New Hampshire was to tighten up——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. RUDMAN. I ask for 1 additional minute.

Mr. BYRD. I yield 1 additional minute.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The purpose of that second degree amendment was to tighten up the language of the Fowler amendment and make it more restrictive; is that correct?

Mr. RUDMAN. The Senator is correct. We tried to do that; the managers tried to do that; the Senator from Louisiana tried to do that; the Senator from New Hampshire tried to do that. We finally ended up with this. Our view is that we think this sends a strong message, the message the Senator from North Carolina wanted to send, a shot across their bow. And that is what was agreed to.

It seems to me, and I think the Senator from Louisiana will agree, that if this were to happen again, that the value language will come flying out of that report next year and we will have language similar or tougher than the language today.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Senator finally, does he think if we were sent back to conference, that we could get stronger language than this approved in that conference?

Mr. RUDMAN. I do not, and that is exactly why I will vote to table, not because the Senator from North Carolina is wrong, but because of the legislative realities that we face with the other body.

Mr. JOHNSTON. One final question. Did the Senator see in the Washington Post on the day after our conference where the Senator from North Carolina properly, I think, claimed victory because of this language?

Mr. RUDMAN. I did, but I think the Senator from North Carolina wanted a victory last week and wants a victory this Saturday morning. You cannot blame a man for wanting two victories in 1 week.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining on the conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute left.

Mr. PELL. I desire 3 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator 1 minute off the conference report and 2 minutes off the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. I thank my friend from West Virginia. I rise again to defend the National Endowment for the Arts and its well tested and proven system of peer review without the interference of the Federal Government. I guess I am the only remaining principal sponsor of the NEA in this body and I well recall how Congress endorsed the freedom of artistic and humanistic expression back in 1965 at the very time we established the National Endowment for the Arts. In doing so, we established the principle that politics should not be allowed to interfere with the NEA in its handling of grants and applications.

While I am as offended as anyone else at the few works that have given rise to the current controversy, I also understand the context in which these grants were made. Eighty thousand grants have been made and not more than a dozen have caused any kind of uproar over the last 25 years. I view it as a lapse of good judgment on behalf of the Endowment; not as a crime that merits the setting forth of standards to regulate what can and cannot be supported in the future. I have discussed this situation with Mr. Frohnmayer, the new NEA Chairman, and I am confident that he will work with us to clarify review procedures but without adding strict standards that would chill the creativity of our artists and the climate of artistic freedom that is ours to protect.

The language in the committee's conference report, while not necessary in my view, does send an important signal that the Endowment must not spend the taxpayer's money on obscene art. But the Endowment must be the final arbiter of what it does and does not support—not those of us in the Congress. We have said that the standard must be "artistic excellence" and I believe that is what the conferees have done on this issue. I congratulate them on the results of their labor.

I intend to vote against the pending amendment and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] 4 minutes off the amendment, and then I would hope the Senate could go to a vote on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN). The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, you heard that old saying, fools rush in where angels fear to tread. I have not spoken on this issue and did not intend to. It is a complex one. It is the one that has had the Senate frozen with a great deal of terror and fear, fear of the 30-second spot when they run for reelection.

It has finally occurred to me it does not make much difference how you vote because you are probably going to get 30-second spots run against you because the language in both the conference report and the language of the Senator from North Carolina are very similar. I do not think anybody would argue that they are not both trying to accomplish the same goal.

I want to say one thing. Every country on Earth that has ever had a dictator, the first thing they want to do, of course, is control art, literature, and the judicial system. And yet, while I feel very strongly about those freedoms, I am also deeply offended by the art that precipitated this debate. I have looked at it. I suppose somebody might say it is artistic. I would not. I found it to be trash. It has no redeeming value that I could find.

I am arguing with my daughter at the breakfast table; she disagrees with me. She said, "You are getting into something you do not have any business getting into—85,000 grants by the National Endowment for the Arts and 25 of them questioned." She said, "What if a youngster in school on a Pell grant"—and that is pure taxpayers' money—"perpetrates a rape. Are you going to abolish the Pell grants?" And she gave three or four other fairly salient examples. I said, "Brooke, you do not understand. People of this country, I do not care—I agree with the Senator from North Carolina. If somebody wants to use their own money to do this kind of thing, I think under the Constitution that is their privilege. But I do not want my taxpayers paying for that kind of obscenity." She said, "Well, I find it kind of obscene that you all spend billions of dollars down there to build bombers that will not fly." She and I finally wound up having a serious disagreement.

If the Senator from North Carolina would have permitted this body to insert the word "obscene" at the right place in the conference report, he would not have had a leg to stand on. But the tree is full and that is not doable now, is it? And so we have to go with what we have.

The language is different from the Fowler language. I voted for the Fowler language the other night; I thought it was fine, and I regret we could not get this in conference. The Fowler language said obscene depiction, and the Supreme Court has defined obscenity in three very specific ways.

Let me say there cannot be that much difference because the conference report says art that may be considered obscene including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, et cetera. I think the Senator from Georgia, if he had his way, would insert obscene depictions, but if you take the language immediately before that, it says that it may be considered obscene including but not limited to depictions. It seems to me there really is not enough room to argue there, to go through this whole thing again.

It seems to me the conference committee has done an outstanding job of resolving what is an irresolvable proposition. You are not ever going to resolve this to everybody's satisfaction here or across the country. I plead with my colleagues to support the committee because you are not going to wind up with anything better, and I promise you we are going to revisit this proposition next year and the following year.

Let me just close by saying, I do not care what kind of language you include, these grants are given to the National Endowment. They in turn give them to the Arts and Humanities Commission in Arkansas, and they in turn give grants to somebody to accomplish a particular purpose. But the point is the art work is done and the money is spent before anybody really has an opportunity to determine whether it is obscene or not. How you censor on the front end before the art work is done, I do not know.

I am going to support the conference report and move to table the Helms amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Arkansas. I yield 3 minutes to Mr. KENNEDY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. This is the third time in recent weeks that the Senate has considered this kind of punitive proposal to censor the National Endowment for the Arts.

Next year the Arts Endowment will be 25 years old. In that time, it has compiled an outstanding record of achievement. It has made an unprecedented contribution to the artistic and cultural life of our country. The continuing assault on the Endowment by Senator HELMS is unjustified, unacceptable, and an insult to all those who have worked skillfully and with great dedication to enhance the artistic heritage of our Nation.

Because of the Endowment, the quality of artistic presentations has increased many fold throughout the United States, and so has the number of artistic performances, bringing the wonders of music, dance, painting, sculpture, and literature to countless communities across the Nation.

The Senate has an obligation to defend the Endowment against irresponsible attacks that would undermine its important work and jeopardize the progress it has achieved.

The arts are a measure of our civilization—they chronicle our history, record our successes, warn of our weaknesses, and challenge us to seek out what is best in ourselves and in our national character.

Sometimes, art shocks our sensibilities. It is supposed to. But in a free society, we must not yield to the appeals of the know-nothings. We must not embrace the calls for censorship. We must not tolerate the extreme and unwarranted intrusions of those who—if the truth be known—are against Federal support for the arts.

The peer panel review system is the heart of the success of the Endowment. Perhaps it can be improved in the wake of the present controversy, but it could easily be destroyed by unwarranted and excessive restraints of the kind that Senator HELMS would impose in order to punish the Endowment for the grants that have so offended Senator HELMS. In my view, the Senate should be commending the Endowment for its thousands of grants that have enhanced the arts in communities across America, instead of condemning the Endowment for two minor grants that have provoked the present controversy.

The Interior conference committee has done a commendable job in working out a wise resolution of this controversy. The conferees have imposed guidelines on the accountability of the Endowment which I support. The new Commission recommended to evaluate grant procedures will provide an ample opportunity to review this issue in an independent manner in the next 6 months.

The Senate has now confirmed a new chairman at the Arts Endowment, and I am confident of his ability and commitment to lead the Endowment in the years ahead in a manner that will heal the present wounds, enhance the Endowment, and contribute to the arts. I urge the Senate to reject the Helms amendment.

BLACKSTONE RIVER VALLEY NATIONAL HERITAGE CORRIDOR

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished managers of the conference report on Interior Appropriations if they would respond to a question on provisions of the conference report relating to the Blackstone River Valley National Heritage Corridor.

Mr. BYRD. I would be pleased to do so.

Mr. PELL. I understand that the conference committee stated the division of funding for the Blackstone River Valley National Heritage Corridor as follows: $230,000 to go to the Blackstone River Valley National Heritage Corridor Commission and the balance to the National Park Service. It would be my preference that the Commission receive the full authorized amount, $250,000, and the National Park Service receive $75,000 for technical assistance to the Commission.

Can the distinguished floor managers tell me if the division of funding I have proposed would be acceptable to them?

Mr. BYRD. Yes; that division of funds is agreeable.

Mr. McCLURE. I, too, find that division agreeable.

Mr. PELL. I thank the distinguished managers of the conference report.

LOBBYING ACTIVITIES

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to address a question to the distinguished manager of the bill for the purpose of clarifying his amendment 319 related to lobbying activities.

Would the Senator indicate whether elected officials such as mayors, for example, are exempt from section 319?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, Mr. President. Mayors, as regularly employed officers of their cities, are exempt from the reporting requirements of the new section 1352 of title 31, United States Code, added by the bill. The exemption appears in subsection (e)(2)(A) of that section.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

PROTON EXCHANGE MEMBRANE FUEL CELL PROGRAM

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to address the manager of the conference report, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, regarding the conference recommendation for the Department of Energy's Proton Exchange Membrane Program.

It is my understanding that the proton exchange membrane [PEM] fuel cell joint program between International Fuel Cells and Los Alamos National Laboratory was transferred from the energy storage program to the transportation program by the conferees.

Mr. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Under the report language to accompany the Interior appropriation, therefore, the International Fuel Cells/Los Alamos joint program is to be funded in the competitive program administered by the Office of Transportation Systems.

Mr. BYRD. The joint program is eligible to compete under the competitive industry-government PEM fuel cell development program for transportation applications.

Mr. DOMENICI. The reference in the report to major automotive manufacturers is not limited to the big three automobile companies, but includes component suppliers as well as specialized manufacturers of mass transit vehicles such as the Transportation Manufacturing Corp. in Roswell, NM.

Mr. BYRD. The report indicates that any manufacturer of automotive components or systems can compete in the cost-shared program administered by the Office of Transportation Systems.

YUROK TRANSITION TEAM

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I rise to seek clarification of an amendment to House Resolution 2788 that was adopted in conference.

Mr. President, in the 100th Congress we enacted legislation to address a longstanding problem between two tribes in the State of California—the Hoopa Valley Indian Tribe and the Yurok Tribe of Indians. Among other things, this legislation, Public Law 100-580, provided for the establishment of a Yurok transition team to assist the Yurok Tribe in its formal organization, including the establishment of an organized tribal government. Among other duties statutorily imposed upon the Yurok transition team is the duty to provide counseling and promote communications among potential tribal members, to study and investigate programs, resources, and facilities that may be of assistance to the tribe, and to undertake certain economic development studies.

Mr. President, despite this clear statement of statutory responsibilities, the Yurok transition team has had difficulty in obtaining financial assistance through grants or contracts with Federal agencies. With enactment of Public Law 100-580 it can no longer be questioned whether or not the Yurok Tribe is federally recognized—it is; nor can there be any questions with respect to the existence of a defined Yurok Reservation. Despite clarification of these issues, and the clear statement of statutory responsibilities of the Yurok transition team, the eligibility of the team for Federal grants and contracts has been questioned. In particular the Yurok transition team has applied for a grant from the administration for native Americans at the Department of Health and Human Services. This grant has been held up pending clarification of the status of the Yurok transition team.

Mr. President, it is my understanding that the amendment of Public Law 100-580 that is provided in section 315 of this bill will provide the necessary clarification and make clear that the Yurok transition team is eligible to receive such grants or contracts.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator from Hawaii is correct in his analysis. The language provides the necessary clarification to accomplish this purpose.

GRAY RANCH COLLOQUY

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, as we consider the Department of the Interior and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990 I would like to clarify conference report language pertaining to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

As you know I have been a strong advocate for the acquisition of the Gray Ranch in southwestern New Mexico for the creation of the Animas Mountains National Wildlife Refuge. The Gray Ranch is an internationally significant natural area that contains a rich diversity of plant and animal life found nowhere else in the United States. Some 76 mammal species and subspecies find habitat on the Gray Ranch, more than are found in any existing national park or national wildlife refuge. In addition to its rich biological diversity, the ranch contains significant archeological resources.

I understand that the conference report includes the following language:

> Although the managers have not provided any funds for the Animas Mountains NRWR, NM [Gray Ranch], there is strong interest in this area being in Federal ownership. When mineral rights, grazing and hunting questions have been resolved, the managers will give every consideration to providing appropriations.

Is this correct?

Mr. BYRD. My colleague from New Mexico, your quotation of the report language is correct.

Mr. BINGAMAN. While the conferees did not provide funding to begin acquisition of the Gray Ranch in fiscal year 1990, I believe they view such a purchase as a worthy project in the near future. It appears that there are concerns about mineral rights, grazing and hunting issues which I believe that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service can resolve shortly.

The timing of action by the Federal Government is critical. The ranch is currently for sale and the nature conservancy, an international, private, nonprofit organization, is committed to assisting the Federal Government in the acquisition of Gray Ranch.

Therefore once the remaining issues mentioned in the report are addressed, presumably in the very near future, I would presume that the committee will regard an appropriation for acquisition favorably.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, Senator, I believe that that would be the case.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I note that the Gray Ranch is discussed as the Animas Mountains National Wildlife Refuge under the section of the appropriation pertaining to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. I look forward to the protection of the important resources of the Gray Ranch as a national wildlife refuge. We need to secure the beautiful, biologically diverse and unique cultural and natural resources of the Gray Ranch for future generations.

I would ask the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee if this is his understanding of the intent of the committee?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HATFIELD. I would like to inquire of the distinguished chairman whether my understanding is correct that the conference report provides $1,000,000 for industrialized housing research at the University of Oregon and the Florida Solar Energy Center?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Oregon is correct. Under energy conservation within the Department of Energy, the managers have agreed that the Senate would recede from its recommended funding level of $1,200,000 to the House level of $1,000,000 for the two industrialized housing research centers.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator, and also would inquire as to whether the conference report includes any specific language detailing how these funds will be distributed to these two centers? I ask this question because it is my understanding that the Senate and House reports are somewhat conflicting. The House report (Report 101-120) simply provides that the funds will go to the two centers. The Senate report (Report 101-85), however, refers to a competition between the two centers that has not been established. It is my hope that we could clarify these potentially conflicting directives.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct in his interest in clarifying this matter. It was not the intent of the report language to establish competition for Federal funds between the two industrialized housing research centers. The reference to competition was included in the Senate report to encourage each institution to compete to develop their long-term potential in the industrialized housing research field. I am aware that the two centers work in tandem with one another, and it is not our intent for the Department of Energy to distribute the funds on a competitive basis between the two centers. It is our hope, however, to encourage both centers to increase industry participation in these research efforts.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator for this clarification.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, as we consider the Department of the Interior and related agencies appropriation bill for fiscal year 1990 I would like to highlight two units of the National Park System in my State of New Mexico. During the August recess, I had the opportunity to visit northeastern New Mexico and discuss the future of the Fort Union and Capulin Volcano National Monuments with representatives of the National Park Service and with residents of the area.

Fort Union is located on the Santa Fe National Historic Trail and the National Park Service has prepared a draft comprehensive plan for this very important historic trail. The junction of the Cimarron Cutoff route and Mountain Branch of the Santa Fe Trail is near Fort Union in the small community of Watrous, NM. The Watrous area, with its many historic structures and sites related to the Santa Fe Trail, can play a role in public interpretation and provide needed tourist services.

I would hope that the National Park Service would utilize its excellent expertise in planning and historic rehabilitation to assist the residents of Watrous and the State of New Mexico Historic Preservation Office in completing nomination forms for the national historic landmark district. Also, it would be useful for the Service to assist private landowners and preservation organizations in preparing a historic preservation plan for Watrous that would include proposals for making this area a vital part of the public experience along the Santa Fe National Trail. Beyond the historic preservation benefits, the economy of this area would benefit from the plan.

The Capulin Volcano National Monument near Raton tells the story of vulcanism. I am concerned that this volcanic cinder cone and lava flow area are not adequately protected by current Federal ownership. Fortunately, some adjacent landowners are willing to cooperate to protect this nationally significant resource. I would hope that the National Park Service would evaluate the resources adjacent to the current monument boundary to determine the significance of these resources, threats to the integrity of the existing monument, and opportunities to pursue acquisition to protect the monument.

I would ask the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee if these two projects are the types of projects that you view as a priority and important use of the National Park Service's park recreation planning funds?

Mr. BYRD. I commend my colleague from New Mexico for his attention to matters that will improve public service in our national parks. I agree that the Fort Union/Watrous and Capulin Mountain National Monuments projects are the types of projects that are worthy of National Park Service planning funding.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to take a few moments of the Senate's time to congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, for his excellent work in bringing this conference report before the Senate. Once again, the Senator from West Virginia has shown his skill in negotiating difficult and controversial issues. This conference report virtually resolves all of the acrimonious issues that were contained in this bill—including the so-called Hatfield-Adams amendment—and this is certain proof of the chairman's dedication to, and willingness to work with, Members from both sides of the aisle.

There is no question in mind that this year's Interior appropriations conference was the most difficult in recent memory, and I was pleased to have the opportunity to observe and work with Chairman BYRD and the ranking member of the subcommittee, Senator MCCLURE, during last week's difficult sessions.

Notwithstanding the Helms amendment concerning funding for the arts, the most controversial issue that was resolved in the conference was the timber supply/northern spotted owl amendment that Senator ADAMS and I offered to the Senate bill. As most of my colleagues know, this amendment was offered reluctantly as a 1-year, short-term solution to the timber supply crisis that currently exists in Oregon and Washington. When this amendment was accepted by the Senate on July 26, Senator ADAMS and I made it clear that we were amenable to changes to our amendment. There was no doubt in my mind that the other body would make its own mark on the amendment, and that it would be revised in various ways. Accordingly, Mr. President, the compromise contained in the Interior appropriations conference report before us today is significantly different from the original Senate amendment.

However, Mr. President, let there be no doubt in anyone's mind that I support the timber supply/northern spotted owl compromise as it appears in the conference report. I cannot say that it is perfect legislation, or that it is my preferred approach, but it does provide short-term relief for the thousands of wood products workers in the Pacific Northwest whose livelihoods hang in the balance—caught between efforts to protect old growth forest stands and habitat for the northern spotted owl and the need to provide raw materials for the wood products industry. In my opinion, this compromise does provide an adequate balance between these two competing desires—neither of which are unreasonable objectives.

Mr. President, I have been intimately involved in the debate over the conservation and utilization of Oregon's natural resource base for many years—both as Governor and, for the last 23 years, as a Member of the Senate. During this time, my one overriding concern has always been the balance between natural resource preservation and basic human needs. In different debates—spanning different decades—I have insisted that we strike that balance. Sometimes I come under fire from those who believe I have done too much to preserve Oregon's natural resources—this time I am under fire from those who would prefer we ignore the human needs of thousands of workers throughout the Pacific Northwest.

But the balance is the bottom line for me, and I would like to point out to my colleagues some of the provisions of this agreement that combine to protect the sensitive balance I have sought and which I believe we have reached. First, the compromise allows for a total offer of 7.7 billion board feet of net merchantable timber from the national forests in Oregon and Washington for fiscal year 1989 and fiscal year 1990. This figure, which is 300 million board feet below the original Senate amendment, is approximately 1.5 billion board feet below the amount that the existing forest plans allow, 1 billion board feet below the historic offer level set by the Appropriations Committees, and approximately 300 million board feet below the aggregate allowable sale quantity recommended in the draft forest plans in Region 6. At the same time, Mr. President, the 7.7 billion board feet offer level will preserve the jobs of approximately 11,000 forest products workers in Oregon and Washington over the 1-year life of the amendment.

I also want to point out that this amendment provides the first statutory protection for old growth forests on Federal lands. This provision will preserve the habitat of the northern spotted owl and will allow the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to continue its investigation of the long-term viability of the owl. The amendment does not alter either the Endangered Species Act or the listing process for a species established under that Act. The agreement also directs the Forest Service to minimally fragment the existing ecologically significant old growth forest stands in the Pacific Northwest. This will further increase the future viability of the northern spotted owl and will protect the options available to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Forest Service—should it be determined that the owl is a threatened species.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to emphasize that the compromise allows citizens to challenge management decisions made by the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management—both administratively and judicially. Although we have streamlined the judicial process for individual timber sales under the amendment, the language specifies that no timber sale may be operated for a 45-day period after the sale is awarded. It is our belief that such a period will allow the courts sufficient time to rule on any challenge brought before them.

There is no question in my mind that this compromise protects the Federal old growth forests in the Pacific Northwest and the northern spotted owl. Just as important, this amendment provides a predictable supply of Federal timber for the region's sawmills. While the issue of certainty is important to the environmentalists who want a lock-tight guarantee that old growth forests will be preserved in perpetuity, it is just as important to provide certainty for the workers in the timber-dependent communities—certainty that they will have a job over the next 12 months. Only through a predictable timber supply can we successfully stabilize the economies of those communities and provide economic security for the people who live in them.

Mr. President, this Senator is proud of his environmental record over the last four decades in public office. I take a back seat to no one with regard to my efforts to ensure that this country remains inhabitable for future generations, and am especially pleased to have been involved in several landmark Oregon-specific legislative initiatives in the past several years. These bills include the addition of over 1.5 million acres to the National Wilderness Preservation System, 40 Oregon rivers to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, the Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area, the Oregon Dunes National Recreation Area, the Hells Canyon National Recreation Area, the John Day Fossil Beds National Monument, numerous acres of critical land acquisitions within the State of Oregon, and others. In each case, I am pleased to report that equal weight was given to both the environmental and human elements—that a proper balance was achieved each and every time.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank my good friend from Washington State, Senator ADAMS. The compromise agreement we have today could not have been possible without his diligent work and in-depth knowledge of this complex issue. Over the years that I have had the pleasure of working with Senator ADAMS, I have grown increasingly impressed by his tenacity and his willingness to take positions on different issues. The Senator from Washington could have chosen to take a much less visible role in this effort, but his understanding of the importance of preserving both our fragile national forests and the forest products industry in the Pacific Northwest led him to assume a leadership role in negotiating the package we have before us. It is my hope that his important role in this effort will be fully recognized and appreciated by all parties.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to thank the many staff people from both the House and the Senate, and the Forest Service and BLM, who have worked many long hours on this issue over the last several months. These staffers include Anne Badgley from Senator ADAMS' office, Kevin Lynch with Congressman AUCOIN, Nick Ashmore with Speaker FOLEY, Mike Bagley from Congressman DICKS' office, Doug Marker with Congressman DEFAZIO, Nancy Green with Congressman ATKINS, Kathy Johnson from the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, Sue Masica and Jeff Cilek from the Senate Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, Mark Walker with the Senate Appropriations Committee, Mike Salsgiver and Pat Reiter from my personal staff, Jeff Handy and Susan Yonts-Shepard from the Department of Agriculture and the Forest Service, and Roger Nesbitt and Chuck Hoyt from the Department of the Interior and the BLM. Each of these individuals performed above and beyond the call of duty, and were valuable sources of information for each of the Members and officials they serve.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Senate now has before it the conference agreement accompanying H.R. 2788, the fiscal year 1990 Interior and related agencies appropriations bill.

I commend the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee for bringing this bill to the floor in a timely fashion. This important bill had numerous conference issues, some of which were not without controversy.

The conference agreement is coming back at essentially the House Subcommittee 302(b) allocation, which is $0.4 billion in budget authority and $0.1 billion in outlays above the corresponding Senate allocation.

On October 2, the distinguished chairman revised the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee 302(b) allocation to accommodate the final conference agreement.

With that reallocation, I am pleased to support the conference agreement, and I thank the chairman and my good friend, the distinguished ranking member, and their staffs for the attention and consideration they gave to many programs important to this Senator and to my home State of New Mexico.

It was indeed my pleasure to serve on the Interior Subcommittee this year, and I took forward to a long association with the distinguished chairman and ranking member.

I would like to thank the chairman for his efforts to clarify for this Senator the implications for State and local government officials of the language relating to lobbying for Federal assistance.

Section 319 of the conference agreement adds a new section 1352 to title 31 of the United States Code that prohibits the use of appropriated funds by recipients of Federal contracts, grants, and loans to pay any person to influence or attempt to influence a Federal employee or Member of Congress in seeking such assistance.

There are two subsections that clarify the implications of this amendment for State and local government officials and employees.

Subsection (e)(2)(A) provides that the reporting requirements in the amendment shall not apply to any person with respect to, and I quote:

> Payments of reasonable compensation made to regularly employed officers or employees of a person requesting or receiving a Federal contract, grant, loan, or cooperative agreement or a commitment providing the United States to insure or guarantee a loan.

The amendment later goes on to define a "regularly employed" person in subsection (h)(10) as, and I quote:

> An officer or employee who is employed for at least 130 working days within one year immediately preceding the date of the submission that initiates consideration of such person for receipt of such grant, loan, cooperative agreement, loan insurance commitment, or loan guaranty commitment.

In general, State and local government officials and employees currently serving their States and localities are not required to file under the disclosure provisions of this amendment if they have served in that capacity, or a similar capacity, for more than 130 days in the preceding year.

For example, if a city clerk were to become the mayor, and in his new capacity approached the Federal Government for a loan or grant, he would not be subject to the disclosure requirements if he had served as city clerk for at least 130 days in the previous year.

Likewise, if the city clerk had served in that position for 70 days before becoming the mayor, he would be subject to the reporting requirements only for another 60 days in his new term. In other words, until he has served in his or her governmental unit for a total of 130 days.

It is my understanding that newly elected or appointed State or local officials or employees who approach a Federal agency, official, or employee about a grant or loan, but who have not served as an officer or employee of their governmental unit in any position for 130 days before taking office, would be subject to the disclosure requirements in this section.

However, after such officials or employees had served for more than 130 days in their governmental unit, they would not be subject to the disclosure requirements included in section 319 of the conference agreement.

I appreciate the assurances of the chairman and the Senate legislative counsel that State and local employees, acting in their official capacities, are generally not intended to file under the disclosure provisions in this amendment.

I hope that this serves to clarify the implications of the lobbying amendment in the conference agreement for State and local government officials and employees.

Finally, I am pleased that the final language clarifies in that the terms "person" and "recipient" of Federal assistance does not include an Indian tribe, tribal organization, or any other Indian organization for specific purposes permitted by other Federal law.

I urge my colleagues to support this conference agreement, and I thank the chairman and ranking member for the many courtesies they have extended to me.

ARBOR DAY CENTER

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for the Interior appropriations bill. I congratulate the managers for their hard work and ability to reconcile so many contentious and difficult issues.

I especially thank the managers for preserving the Senate language supporting the National Arbor Day Center in Nebraska City, NE. I was proud to assist the National Arbor Day Foundation in their effort to secure Federal support for this needed facility. The $6 million Federal investment in the Arbor Day Center will be leveraged against private and State funds to build a $12 million international education complex dedicated to the study, promotion, and implementation of tree planting, forestry, and conservation programs across the Nation and the globe.

The center will be built on the estate of John Sterling Morton, Nebraska's great statesman and founder of Arbor Day. The center will allow the Nation to implement an effective response to the national and international deforestation crisis. The center will provide conservation professionals with a much needed forum and study center.

According to John Rosenow, the director of the National Arbor Day Foundation, global forests are lost at a rate equal to one football field of trees per second. With the enactment of this legislation and the building of the National Arbor Day Center the Congress will make a meaningful step toward reversing the disastrous trend toward deforestation.

I thank the managers and my junior colleague from Nebraska for their help and support for this excellent project and urge the Senate to adopt the Interior appropriations bill.

PROVISIONS IMPORTANT TO MONTANA

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Interior Conference Report.

This legislation contains several provisions of great importance to the land and people of Montana.

While I doubt there is an American who does not feel an attachment to Yellowstone National Park, we Montanans know the park's continued vitality depends upon the sound management of adjacent public, private, and State lands.

Yellowstone National Park is not an island. Rather, it is part of a larger, fragile ecosystem. And last winter, as millions of Americans tuned in the evening news, they saw a most visible symptom of the Yellowstone's problems: massive wildlife winter kill. Under current ownership patterns, the land will not support existing populations of elk, bison, and other wildlife.

Fortunately, this legislation contains an appropriation to help restore the health of the Yellowstone ecosystem. The $3.5 million for the acquisition of additional elk winter range will greatly improve the management of the Yellowstone's rich wildlife resources. These dollars will be used to fund an innovative package of conservation easements, life tenancies, and acquisitions north of the park.

While the Yellowstone's problems will not be solved with a single appropriation, we have made a significant step forward.

This conference report contains another provision important to the Yellowstone ecosystem. With an appropriation of $1 million, the Forest Service will begin negotiating the purchase of Plum Creek Timber Co.'s lands in South Cottonwood Canyon. This pristine area located 10 miles outside of Bozeman—one of Montana's fastest growing communities—is a great recreation, wildlife, and fisheries resource. As part of the public domain, Cottonwood Canyon will become an important part of life in Montana's Gallatin Valley.

Furthermore, Mr. President, this legislation contains a provision allowing the harvest of bugs-killed timber in Montana's Upper Yaak River Valley. For two logging seasons, this area has been under a sweeping court-ordered injunction.

While this legislation permits timber harvest in the Yaak, it also contains significant environmental safeguards: First, cutting is only permitted in stands classified as lodgepole pine. The Forest Service has identified many of the Yaak's lodgepole stands as dead or dying due to mountain pine bark beetle infestation; second, no new system roads shall be constructed; and third, the Forest Service must comply with all standards and guidelines contained in the Kootenai National Forest plan. This means we are not exempting timber sales in the Yaak from environmental regulations.

This legislation is a product of compromise. It balances the need for jobs in an economically depressed region of Montana with the need for wise stewardship of our natural resources.

In addition to these three main projects, the magnificent facilities found in Glacier National Park will begin to be rehabilitated, returning them to the state of their former grandeur. The legacy of Lewis and Clark will be preserved and commemorated by an interpretative center that will make their exploits available to all Americans. Clean coal technology—magnetohydrodynamics—will continue to proceed toward its unlimited promise.

In closing, I thank the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member for their consideration and leadership on these issues.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise to thank the managers of H.R. 2788, the Interior appropriations bill, for the commendable job they have done on this bill. They, along with staff, put many hours of hard work into this bill. Their willingness to assist this Senator means that through this bill we will be able to address the multiple needs of the people of Arizona. I want to assure the chairman, his ranking member, and staff that their accommodation of Arizona needs is greatly appreciated by this Senator. I also would like to take a few minutes to discuss a couple of Arizona items which were discussed at some length during our conference meeting last week.

ARIZONA URBAN INDIAN CARE PROJECTS

Mr. Chairman, I would like to advise the managers of the bill of a slight problem with the conference report which affects two Arizona projects under Indian Health Services. The problem concerns the allocation of additional urban Indian health funds provided by the bill for Arizona between two projects. The agreement reached in conference was to provide a total of $550,000 in new funds to serve the urban Indian populations of Flagstaff and Phoenix. The conference report reflects this agreement accurately. The difficulty arises when the report indicates that $300,000 rather than $350,000 is earmarked for the Phoenix project and $250,000 rather than $200,000 for the Flagstaff project. According to my recollection of the discussion in conference, we agreed to $350,000 for Phoenix and $200,000 for Flagstaff.

It is important to me to have the funds allocated in this manner because the Phoenix service population is larger than Flagstaff's. Second, the additional funds for Phoenix are needed to initiate a prenatal clinic. This expansion of services in Phoenix is consistent with the existing project's emphasis on maternal-child health needs. And, we learned that one cannot establish a prenatal clinic for less than $350,000. With respect to Flagstaff, the $200,000 is to be used to start a primary care clinic. While this amount is hardly sufficient, the Flagstaff funding could be supplemented with other available funds much more easily. That is not the case with Phoenix where the additional funds are to be utilized to serve a special target population—pregnant women and infants.

I recognize that when we are in conference, staff have the difficult task of keeping track of many different items for various members and occasionally confusion on the specifics of agreements made by members will occur. In this case, we discussed these particular items at the end of 2 long days of conference. I understand how the misunderstanding could have occurred. While it is too late to correct the conference report at this point, I intend to work with the committees to clear up this confusion so the Indian Health Services' allocation of these funds can be made in accordance with my original intent.

FOREST SERVICE RECREATION

Mr. President, frankly our ability to meet the recreational demand on Forest Service lands in Arizona is inadequate. Recreation use on these national forests has become the first use replacing other types of activities. The pressure on existing recreation resources is enormous and will result in much greater costs in the long run by the degradation of the natural resources if we do not take immediate and significant measures to improve the opportunities to the recreating public.

I would like to share with my colleagues some facts and figures that highlight the current situation on Arizona's national forests.

Arizona ranks second in the United States in population growth—Nevada is first.

Arizona's population is estimated to more than double by the year 2015, from 3.5 million to 7.3 million.

Arizona's growth of personal income is the highest in the United States.

Ninety-eight percent of Arizonans participate in outdoor recreation activities.

The Arizona population is very young with only 12 percent being over 65.

It is estimated that one-half of the recreationists using Arizona lands and facilities are from out of State.

Arizona ranks fourth nationally with respect to recreation visitor days spent on the national forests with over 18 million annually.

In recent years, the Southwest region—Arizona and New Mexico—has ranked last in dollars spent per visitor day.

Compared to other States, Arizona ranked second to last in that same timeframe.

According to the Forest Service's Annual Report, Fiscal Year 1988, each of the other regions' budgets increased about $4.5 million, but the Southwest region's budget has for the most part remained the same.

Excluding timber, funding for the national forests in this country averages about $3.33 per acre. The Northwest region is getting $3.78 per acre, but the Southwest region is receiving only $2.61 per acre. The Southwest region is $0.72 per acre below the national average. If the Forest Service would only fund the Southwest region at the national average, this region would receive almost $15 million—20.5 million acres times $0.72.

As you can see, Mr. President, the recreational use of national forest lands in Arizona is extensive, intensive, and increasing. According to the Forest Service, Arizona has two problems: First, the funding of recreation on Arizona's national forests needs to catch up with current demand; and second, funding needs to keep pace with the growth in recreation demand. In my opinion, it is about time that we start addressing both of these problems.

In my opinion, the fiscal year 1990 Interior appropriations bill takes very significant steps to address this deficiency in the funding of recreation use on Arizona's national forests. First, the conference report contains language directing the Forest Service to evaluate the processes by which nationwide recreation funding priorities are determined. I'm sure that based upon the foregoing statistics, the Forest Service will no doubt come to the same conclusion I have; the recreation needs in the Southwest region are not being met.

Second, out of the $27.9 million appropriated in the fiscal year 1990 bill for recreation construction, there is $12.5 million for the Forest Service to meet high priority recreation needs nationally. In my conversations with the Chief of the Forest Service, he has indicated to me that he recognizes the needs in Arizona and I feel confident that a portion of these funds will find their way to Arizona.

These are both substantial steps in our efforts to meet the recreation demand on the national forests in Arizona. I am most appreciative of the efforts of the managers and their staffs in this regard. I want to particularly thank the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee. He has worked with me to address this problem and in my opinion, we are much closer to a solution because of his leadership on the committee.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise in support of this conference report, and commend the leadership of the Appropriations Committee, in particular the distinguished chairman, Senator BYRD, for completing the report and bringing it to the floor today.

Mr. President, the conference report includes $3.75 million of funding to repair the Maxent Lagoon Levee at Bayou Sauvage Urban National Wildlife Refuge in New Orleans. My good friends, Senator BYRD and Senator JOHNSTON, were most helpful in working with me to obtain significant funding for this important project, in addition to generous funding for a number of other programs of vital interest to Louisiana.

As the conference report notes, the estimated cost of repairing the levee could be as much as twice the $3.75 million provided in this measure. The Congress has appropriated nearly $12 million to provide for the acquisition of the refuge and repair of the levee. These funds are available, and are waiting to be spent. It is the view of the conferees that others must demonstrate their commitment to this project by contributing to the repair.

The time has come to finally complete these efforts and make the refuge a reality. That will require cooperation, imagination, and assistance from all those concerned about completing the acquisition of the refuge. The conferees have directed the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to seek the additional funding needed for the levee repair from other sources. I expect the Service to lead an aggressive effort to engage the public and other Government interests to resolve this issue and complete repair of the levee.

I do wish to make it clear that levee repairs are only required to bring the levee to a condition sufficient to meet existing FEMA standards. It is possible that these repairs may not be as costly as some preliminary estimates have suggested. It is certainly the desire of this Senator that costs of the repair be minimized to the extent possible consistent with the public safety. The Bayou Sauvage Refuge can and should become a reality. This matter has been drawn out far too long, and I am optimistic that we are finally close to a resolution. I urge all of those associated with this issue to roll up their sleeves and pull together to bring this refuge into existence for the benefit of the people of Louisiana and the Nation.

While I will support the conference report today, I do have serious concerns about provisions of this bill that place moratoria on OCS leasing. These moratoria are ill-conceived policy. The moratoria in this bill effectively place 84 million acres of the OCS off limits to oil and gas production. This amounts to an estimated 5 billion barrels of oil critical to meeting our domestic energy needs. Prudhoe Bay, our single largest oil reserve, reached the 5-billion-barrel production mark this year after 10 years of operation. So you see, Mr. President, we are cutting off development of critical domestic reserves, placing our Nation at risk.

We seem intent on continuing a policy that compels us to meet our energy needs through increased imports from the Middle East and elsewhere. We are once again, Mr. President, placing our energy policy and energy security in the hands of the OPEC ministers. In July, we imported 50 percent of our oil needs and demand for oil continues to increase. Yet, the continuation and expansion of OCS moratoria only adds to the current trend of declining domestic production. Combining increased demand with decreased production can only mean more oil imports. This addiction is both dangerous and avoidable.

Many of those who support these moratoria maintain that their areas of the coast are environmentally sensitive. Concerns are routinely expressed about the potential for oilspills associated with OCS development. I applaud my colleagues for their concern, a concern that I share, and encourage them to look at the facts. OCS facilities are among the safest facilities in terms of the likelihood of an oilspill. The horrifying rash of spills we have witnessed this year have been the result of tankers, not OCS facilities. According to the National Academy of Sciences, of the total oilspills in the world's waters, only 2 percent come from the OCS. Nearly 40 percent, however, come from tankers. This policy of OCS moratoria will increase, not decrease, the risk of oilspills. As we cut off domestic production we become increasingly reliant upon imported oil. Day after day we will continue to see tanker after tanker arrive. These vessels will continue to ply our coastal waters, and offload in our harbors and estuaries, placing truly sensitive environments in daily jeopardy. The policy of OCS moratoria is not only foolish energy policy, but foolish environmental policy as well. Mr. President, this policy badly needs to be reevaluated, and I hope that when we turn to this measure next year that we will instead take a more responsible approach to our energy future.

Mr. JEFFORDS. As you know, I have been meeting with various interested parties to attempt to reach an agreement on the Killington-Appalachian Trail-Parkers Gore issue.

I have developed a draft proposal that I hope will become the basis for a mutually agreeable solution to the problem.

As you know, I support your effort to require the Park Service to conduct an environmental impact statement on the trail segment through Pico and Killington lands in Sherburne and Mendon. However, I am concerned that the language included in the Interior appropriations bill could complicate reaching a final agreement.

It would be helpful to include an escape clause in the provision that would allow for the possibility of a negotiated resolution. If all parties agree to a solution, the EIS process would not need to go forward. If a resolution is not possible, the EIS would go forward as required under your amendment.

What are your thoughts about this matter?

Mr. LEAHY. I appreciate the Senator bringing these matters to my attention. I do not think that we should change the language in the Interior appropriations bill. I can assure him that if a resolution of this issue is developed and is accepted by the parties, I will be glad to seek expedited consideration of any legislation that is necessary. If the parties in Vermont are in agreement and the delegation is united in its views, it should be possible to move a bill through the Senate by unanimous consent and through the House on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. BIDEN. I voted in favor of the fiscal year 1990 Interior appropriations bill, as did the vast majority of my colleagues. For the programs that are of the most interest to me and to the State of Delaware, the bill provided funding levels that are better than thought probable in the beginning of the year.

On drug use reduction programs, funding for the Forest Service to combat drug production on Federal lands increased, as did funding for similar programs in the Bureau of Land Management and the Park Service. The Bureau of Indian Affairs will receive more money for alcohol and drug abuse treatment programs.

Support for State and local energy conservation and weatherization programs were all increased above fiscal year 1989 levels. Matching grants for States to acquire park land were maintained. The National Park Service will have more funds available for its efforts to protect our Nation's most valuable areas.

However, there is one aspect of the conference report that continues a disturbing trend of the past few years. That is the limitations on judicial review of environmental issues that have been included in recent Interior appropriations bills. The compromise reached by the conference may be viewed as an improvement over restrictions imposed in previous years, but it is still ad hoc meddling in established court procedures for dealing with environmental concerns.

This is a habit Congress must break. Some may consider the conference agreement a victory because it moves in the right direction. I disagree. It continues a wrong-headed and potentially devastating practice of using legislation approved with no public review to undermine environmental laws that were developed through a lengthy public process.

When economic concerns and environmental law conflict, the law should be reviewed, not circumvented. If it is unreasonable, it should be changed. If the law is simply the scapegoat for changing economic conditions, continuing to undermine it year after year does no one any good.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time and I urge that the Senate adopt the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BYRD. All time has been yielded back, has it not, on the conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator McCLURE still has 9 minutes on the conference report.

Mr. BYRD. I was not aware of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCLURE. I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back on the conference report. Who yields time on the amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may reserve the time on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did request that. Is there objection? Without objection, the Senator reserves his time on the conference report.

Mr. HELMS. I make the same request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection and notwithstanding the previous agreements, the question is on agreeing to the conference report. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 91, nays 6, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 241 Leg.]

NOT VOTING—3

Bond	Cochran	Nunn

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 991 TO HOUSE AMENDMENT TO SENATE AMENDMENT NO. 153

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina has an amendment pending to the amendment in disagreement. I shall move to table the Senator's amendment, not because I am not in sympathy with the underlying problem that he attempts to address. I am fully in sympathy with his position, as far as I can understand it.

This is not a question of censorship. This is a question as to whether the American people should continue to subsidize with their hard-earned money, paid in taxes, such so-called art as is at the crux of this matter.

Let me read just a portion of a paragraph from a Washington Post editorial of today. It refers to the language in the conference report barring funding for material that "may be considerd obscene, including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts, and which, when taken as a whole, does not have serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value."

The Senator is not satisfied with that language in the report. I am not satisfied with it. I suppose that most Senators would not be satisfied with the language in the conference report.

But that language results from many hours taken out of many days in preconferences and in the conference in a sincere effort on the part of the conferees to develop language that could be taken back to both Houses in the conference report and hopefully be enacted by both Houses. It is an extremely difficult matter to resolve.

But, Mr. President, we have been at the conference table, and I hope that the Senate will not adopt the amendment.

The Post editorial goes on:

> This last language is from the Supreme Court's definition of obscenity in Miller versus California, and under it, the NEA could, in theory, still approve even some of the artworks that touched off the current controversy.

But read this:

> In reality, of course, it is unlikely to do any such thing. The endowments and the institutions they fund are more likely to respond to their narrow escape with increased caution, making their choices with a view to avoiding another firestorm.

Mr. President, I believe that that is an accurate description of how this language will be interpreted, and I just as strongly believe that if the endowments and the institutions they fund do not take heed, after this shot across the bow, there will be another and greater firestorm, and it may be that, in the final analysis, the Congress will just have to stop its funding to the endowments.

That would be a most unfortunate result, but if there is a repetition of what has happened in this instance, I think that the next firestorm would be much, much greater, and as I say, it could lead to the unfortunate result of the withholding of Federal funds entirely from the endowments.

I hope we do not have to come to that, but if this Senate is driven to that, it would certainly find it an amenable course if all other options fail.

So I hope that Senators feeling as I do, that they are not satisfied with this language, will at least recognize the problems that will occur if this conference report is sent back to the House with the amendment by Mr. HELMS attached.

The hours and the days that have gone into the development of this bill in the course of hearings and in the course of markup sessions, in the course of the conferences that were held, the preconference work, could finally go for naught, if an unbreakable impasse were to occur, and so I hope that, recognizing the extremities of the situation we now find ourselves in, we will take the best of the options that are available, even though the option may not be entirely to our liking.

I am going to move to table shortly, and I hope that Senators will support that tabling motion.

We need to get this bill passed. It has appropriations in it that affect every State in this country, and programs and projects are involved that affect all the Senators in this body.

So I hope we will not prolong this debate and this battle, when obviously there are many more battlefields on which this subject can be fought over and over again. I hope that we will wait until another day to continue this battle.

Mr. President, if I have any time, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes and 15 seconds left.

Who yields time?

The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, it is all well and good to assume that the National Endowment for the Arts has gotten the message. I agree with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia on that. If they have not gotten the message, then they have wax in their ears.

Nevertheless, the American people expect the Congress to take a stand on this. Thus far such a stand has been circumvented. The House leadership, led by Mr. YATES, circumvented a vote by the House of Representatives on this question. They would not let it come to a vote.

I watched on the television set in the cloakroom when that occurred. They did not want to let the people's representatives vote on the question.

So they took the issue to the conference and completely whitewashed it by writing in a loophole the "art" critics could drive truckloads of their garbage through.

As I said earlier, Congress has a duty to speak out on this.

As for the argument that my amendment jeopardizes the conference report, that is simply not the case. All the conferees in the House have to do if my amendment passes in the Senate is to let the House vote on it as well.

I will tell you this, Mr. President, if the House of Representatives votes against the Helms amendment, I will be shocked. I know it will not happen and Congressman YATES knows it will not happen. That is why the earlier vote in the House of Representatives on the amendment was blocked.

But I say to you, Mr. President, Senators have to take a stand one way or another. They will not take it by voting to table or not voting to table.

The question is simple. If Senators believe the National Endowment for the Arts should be allowed to use the taxpayers' money to fund materials that depict or describe patently offensive sexual or excretory conduct, they should vote to table the amendment. However, if Senators agree that funding such disgusting material with taxpayers' money is outrageous, they should vote against tabling the amendment and let the process work by letting the House of Representatives vote on the real issue since the House has not yet had that chance.

I believe the liberal leadership in the House is afraid to do that, and I think that the conferees on the Senate side ought to stick the issue before the House and say put up or shut up. I do not believe that is going to happen, but I hope the Senate will have the courage to make it happen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time just expired.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following items be printed in the RECORD: An editorial in the Washington Post by Frederick Hart, an article by Bruce Fein, another article by Fredrick Decker published in the New York Post, this morning's Washington Post editorial on the conference report language, and yesterday's Los Angeles Times article on the report language.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 22, 1989]

CONTEMPORARY ART IS PERVERTED ART

(By Frederick E. Hart)

The air is becoming suffocatingly pungent with the incense of pious indignation from the art world concerning Congress' reaction to the way the National Endowment for the Arts is spending taxpayers' money.

What is taking place is yet another perverse manipulation of the public by the contemporary art establishment. The public, through its instrument, Congress, has reacted to the baiting and taunting of this sense of decency by the art world through its instrument, the NEA. Underneath its outrage, the art world can rarely contain its secret delight at this publicity bonanza featuring a heroic scenario of free spirits versus troglodytes.

What eludes the public is the current philosophy and practice of art, which not only delights in but thrives on a belief system of deliberate contempt for the public. In order to understand this, you have to understand the values of art today and how contemporary art is intellectually packaged for the marketplace. To grasp this is also to grasp the sorry moral condition of art today and how this is driveling art, making it less and less a meaningful endeavor.

Since the beginnings of bohemianism in the late 19th century, rejection by the public has become the traditional hallmark of what comes to be regarded as great art. An offended public is a critical necessity for the attainment of credentials by any artist. The idea that art and artist must be initially misunderstood and rejected has become doctrine in the mythology of great art, and consequently it has become one of the primary criteria in evaluating the historical importance of a given artist. The art world embraced this rule in the late 19th century and has been running hard with it ever since.

There is, however, a critical difference between then and now. Life in the late 19th century was heavily regimented by strict societal mores; the public expression of emotion and sexuality was severely repressed. When art and literature broke through those layers of repression, people were offended, outraged and ill at ease about the truths they discovered about themselves. But we live in a different world. Today, "repression" is a bad word. Nothing is ever, ever repressed. Everything is discussed, analyzed and ventilated by people ranging from Phil Donahue in the morning to Larry King at night, day in and day out. It's gotten damned hard if not almost impossible to offend anyone anymore.

But art persists. Every artist worth his salt yearns to create works of art that are (mistakely perceived, of course) so offensive, so insulting to the public as to earn him a clear judgment of genius for his success at being misunderstood.

It has become the intense pastime of contemporary art to pursue controversy, the bigger the better, as a form of art. But the artist has had to reach farther and deeper to find some new twist with which to offend. A simple-minded little sophomoric gimmick of making people walk on the flag to make a cute point arouses vast passion and national controversy—for which artist and art world pat each other on the back.

What is really going on is the cynical aggrandizement of art and artist at the expense of sacred public sentiments—profound sentiments embodied by symbols, such as the flag or the crucifix, which the public has a right and a duty to treasure and protect.

When one looks back at the majestic sweep of art in history and its awesome and magnificent accomplishments, how nasty and midget like are so many of the products and so much of the philosphy of contemporary art by comparison. Once, art served society rather than biting at its heels while demanding unequivocal financial support. Once, under the banner of beauty and order, art was a rich and meaningful embellishment of life, embracing—not desecrating—its ideals, its aspirations and its values.

Not so today.

Look about you. The artlessness of contemporary life has come about because of a breakdown in the fundamental philosophy of art and who it is created for. The flaw is not with a public that refuses to nourish the arts. Rather it is with a practice of art that refuses to nourish the public. The public has been so bullied intellectually by the proponents of contemporary art that it has wearily resigned itself to just about any idiocy that is put before it and calls itself art. But the common man has his limits, and they are reached when some of these things emerge from the sanctuary of the padded cells of galleries and museums and are put in public places, where the public is forced to live with them and pay for them.

If one visited a town or a city in Renaissance Italy, the motive of art and its resulting products would come off entirely differently. Art was not then thought of as an end in itself but as another form of service. When the Italian peasant looked about, he saw an array of dedicated embellishments from his church to his public buildings, fountains and plazas. The artwork, which was exquisitely created, embraced his values, his religious beliefs, his history, his aspirations and his ideals. It was meant to give enrichment through its artistry but, more important, to give purpose through its meaning. It was, as Dante called sculpture, "visible speech." It was not created for art's sake but for his sake.

The measure of achievements in art was determined by the degree to which that art was considered ennobling. Art and society had achieved a wonderful responsibility for each other. Art summarized, with masterful visual eloquence born of a sense of beauty, the striving of civilization to find order and purpose in the universe. This service to truth was more important that the endeavor of art itself. And it was this dedication to service that gave art its moral authority.

This moral authority is the critical element by which a society regards art either as an essential and meaningful part of life, as in Renaissance Italy or, as today, a superfluous bit of fluff, mainly indulged in by a small snobbish minority. Art is regarded by contemporary society much the same way architects now regard art—not as an essence, but as a high-rent amenity.

The most touching and noble impulse toward "visible speech" in recent times was the short-lived creation of the Statue of Democracy in Tiananmen Square. Naively executed, it was nonetheless a wonderful display of the unique ability of art to embody and enhance concisely and movingly a deeply felt public yearning for an ideal of a just society. The profound meaning the statue had for tens of millions of people gives the art a value and moral authority of profound significance.

In ancient Greece, which generated 2,500 years of Western art, there existed no distinction between aesthetics and ethics in the judgment of a work of art. Works of art achieved greatness by embodying great ideas, as well as by sheer mastery of the medium. The inspiration and the motivation for that mastery were in the nobility of the ideas pursued.

It is the contemporary renunciation of the moral responsibility of art that is the source of the recent hostilities between art and public. The cutback of funds by Congress is a graphic display of the public's declining conviction of the importance of art, caused by a self-absorbed art that has lost all sense of obligation to the public good and the betterment of man. It is possible to live without art, and if the nourishment provided by art continues to be so nauseating, life without art will become, for some, desirable.

If art is to flourish in the 21st century, it must renew its moral authority by philosophically and fundamentally rededicating itself to life rather than art. Art must again touch our lives, our fears and cares. It must evoke our dreams and give hope to the darkness.

THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD SHUN BIGOTRY AND OBSCENITY

(By Bruce Fein)

A nation lives by symbols. When the government funds works of art, it necessarily gives tacit approval to the grantee and the goals he promotes with taxpayer dollars. As Justice Louis D. Brandeis lectured in Olmstead v. U.S. (1928), "Our Government is the potent, the omnipresent teacher. For good or for ill, it teaches the whole people by its example."

The government, accordingly, must be scrupulously concerned with the message it sends to the public by underwriting specific types of art. Bigotry, for instance, that appeals to racial, religious, or other prejudice should receive no government backing. Suppose David Duke, a former member of the Ku Klux Klan and current member of the Louisiana legislature, requested a grant from the National Endowment of the Arts to paint a picture celebrating post-Reconstruction lynching of "niggers." To make the grant would signify government approval or indifference to racial bigotry, and would inflame race relations throughout the country.

Suppose a neo-Nazi sought NEA funding for a mural applauding the Holocaust. To underwrite the applicant would foster anti-Semitism, and suggest the government would be phlegmatic about private persecution of Jews.

The government is vitally interested in suppressing, not promoting, bigotry because it threatens democracy. Freedom and liberty cannot thrive in communities frenzied by prejudice.

As President Harry Truman explained in 1952: "Mutual respect and tolerance for the beliefs of others is the secret of the strength of this blessed land." Truman was echoing the sentiments conveyed by President George Washington in writing to a Hebrew Congregation in 1790. He asserted that our Government "gives to bigotry no sanction, and to persecution no assistance."

That is why the United States Supreme Court in Beaubarnais v. Illinois (1952), upheld a state law making it a crime to defame any "class of citizens, of any race, color, creed or religion (that exposed the object) to contempt, derision, or obloquy, or which (was) productive of breach of the peace or riots." The statute was invoked to punish the public distribution of an emotionally incendiary leaflet intended to arouse racial hatred. It demanded that Chicago officials "halt the further encroachment, harassment, and invasion of white people, their property, neighborhoods and persons by the Negro," called for the unity of one million self-respecting white Chicagoans, and vituperated that "(i)f persuasion and the need to prevent the white race from being mongrelized by the negro will not unite us, then the aggressions . . . rapes, robberies, knives, guns and marijuana of the negro, surely will."

Speaking for the Court, Justice Felix Frankfurter noted that "(r)esort to epithets or personal abuse is not in any proper sense communication of information or opinion safeguarded by the Constitution." Frankfurter understood that the utterances at issue sought exploitation of emotional irrationality and racial prejudice, not development of informed opinion.

Playing on human prejudice was the evil genius of Adolf Hitler. Writing in Mein Kampf, he observed that the art of successful propaganda requires directing speech "more and more toward feeling, and only to a certain extent to so-called reason." That understanding is why many colleges and universities have embraced rules of student conduct that discipline stigmatization or vilification for reasons unrelated to individual merit. The University of Michigan, for example, adopted in part a policy against "any behavior, verbal or physical, that stigmatizes or victimizes an individual on the basis of race, ethnicity, religion, age, marital status, handicap or Vietnam veteran status," and creates a demeaning educational environment. (On September 7, 1989, a federal district judge enjoined enforcement of the policy because of vagueness).

Universities should thus be applauding the much maligned and misunderstood "Helms Amendment" that would bar NEA funding of art that is intended to "denigrate, debase, or revile a person or group or class of citizens on the base of race, creed, sex, handicap, age, or national origin." If an intent to vilify by the artist is lacking, as with Salmon Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses," then the amendment is not violated.

The amendment's prohibition on taxpayer underwriting of obscene or indecent art is also praiseworthy. Obscenity, the Supreme Court held in Miller v. California (1973), reaches only works of art that appeal to the purient interest of the average person, depict or describe, in a patently offensive way, sexual organs or acts, and lack "serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value." Indecent material under F.C.C. v. Pacifica Foundation (1978) includes artistic endeavors that would be obscene except for some redeeming literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

The government is legitimately concerned with steering citizens away from an unelevating obsession with the obscene or indecent that arouse or satisfy sexual appetite, but seldom if ever stir great thoughts. Thomas Jefferson taught that "If a nation expects to be free and ignorant—it expects what never was and never will be." With but limited taxpayer dollars, the government should favor Shakespeare or Thucydides over Hustler Magazine to upgrade the deliberative faculties and wisdom of its citizens.

Democracy descends to tyranny with citizens who are uneducated or preoccupied with sensual pleasures. The obscene or indecent makes no contribution to insuring that the forces of reason triumph over the arbitrary in public life.

The Supreme Court in Board of Education v. Pico (1982) acknowledged the broad powers of public school authorities to determine book selections in school libraries in furtherance of "educational suitability." Justice Harry Blackmun agreed that the promotion of virtues is a legitimate government endeavor. The Helms amendment thus properly recognizes that government subventions of the obscene or indecent dissipate scarce funds that should boost more ennobling art that raises rather than lowers the quality of community life.

Government funded art would be deadened, however, if NEA decisions were dominated by typically philistine lawyers, scrutinizing applications for compliance with the Helms Amendment. Thus, NEA compliance should require only that would-be grantees submit affidavits pledging to avoid violations of the amendment. A grantee who submitted an affidavit in bad faith and produced a work of art that flouted the amendment could be prosecuted for a felony under the federal false statements statute, 18 U.S. Code 1001.

In summary, the Helms Amendment is no benighted effort to censor freedom of artistic expression; it is a judicious attempt to allocate taxpayer dollars to advance important community aspirations. Its critics need reminding that fanaticism in the defense of the First Amendment is no virtue.

CELEB CALLED ON CARPET OVER GAY AID

(By Fredric Dicker)

ALBANY.—State Council on the Arts bosses Kitty Carlisle Hart and Mary Hays yesterday were summoned to the Capitol to explain why the panel is bankrolling groups promoting transvestism and homosexuality.

The order—to appear next Wednesday—came from the powerful chairmen of the state Legislature's arts committees following yesterday's exclusive report in The Post.

The committees have the power to recommend cuts in the council's budget.

"I was shocked by the Post report and we want some answers," said Assembly Tourism and Arts Committee chairman Matthew Murphy, a Niagara County Democrat.

Senate Arts Committee chairman Tarkey Lombardi (R-Syracuse) said he and Murphy would hold a joint committee session with Hart, the council's chairman, and Hays, its executive director.

Also yesterday, Gov. Cuomo's director of state operations, Henrik Dullea, told the council and Hart to prepare a justification of the spending programs for the governor.

Meanwhile, The Post also has learned that the Arts Council has been using tax money to subsidize a pro-Sandinista film, an anti-landlord tenants group and an anti-apartheid "newspaper" committed to being "an active social force."

Those programs are among dozens of activist, left-of-center or homosexual-oriented projects given cash awards annually by the council, official records show.

No council money is going to help the cause of Nicaragua's anti-Sandinista contras.

Council officials have repeatedly denied The Post access to documents explaining why the controversial projects got council money.

This year the council gave Video Repetorie Ltd. of Manhattan a $20,000 grant to help complete a motion picture on the life of Omar Cabezas, a leader of the Marxist Sandinistas.

The grant application says Cabezas represents "a generation struggling for freedom and dignity."

It also says the film will show how the Sandinistas "are confronting the ever-present threat of the continuing U.S.-backed war against their fledgling revolution."

Meanwhile, the Arts Council has awarded $10,000 to the Manhattan-based Assn. for Neighborhood and Housing Development, a well-known tenants' advocate group.

The money was given to "improve New York City's planning, politics and programs for meeting the housing and neighborhood needs of poor, working and minority New Yorkers," according to the grant proposal.

However, ANHD does not have any legal power to improve the city's planning efforts.

"We're an unusual grantee because we do housing advocacy and housing work," conceded ANHD executive director Bonnie Brower.

"This group has nothing to do with the arts. I can't believe it and I'm shocked," said John Gilbert, head of the pro-landlord Rent Stabilization Assn., when told of the council grant.

THE REVISED HELMS AMENDMENT

Congress this week succeeded in beating back the sweeping restrictions on government arts funding proposed by Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.). That's fine. But the House-Senate conference then approved a couple of paragraphs of language whose effect is to leave a lingering cloud. The compromise legislation bars government funding for "obscene" material: it stipulates that the arts and humanities endowments continue to make that judgment themselves, rather than transferring it directly to Congress as Sen. Helms would have done.

The compromise is less destructive than the original proposal, and it offers no explicit bar to the arts endowment's continued ability to function freely. But in practical terms this is no victory. The arts endowment and the institutions it works with lose ground when any such restriction is written into law, even if, as in this case, the law merely formalizes selection criteria that those evaluating the grant applications are presumed to bear in mind anyway.

The new language bars funding to material that "may be considered obscene, including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts, and which, when taken as a whole, does not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value." This last language is from the Supreme Court's definition of obscenity in Miller v. California, and under it the NEA could, in theory, still approve even some of the artworks that touched off the current controversy, In reality, of course, it is unlikely to do any such thing. The endowments and the institutions they fund are more likely to respond to their narrow escape with increased caution, making their choices with a view to avoiding another firestorm.

The creation of a commission to reevaluate present funding procedures, and perhaps recommend new standards after a year, constitutes a further imponderable. The commission's members have yet to be chosen. But a sensible and prudent commission will flatten the restrictions still further and leave the government's funding procedures as they are.

LANGUAGE IN NEA FUNDS BILL STIRS DEBATE

(By Allan Parachini)

WASHINGTON.—The National Endowment for the Arts moved Thursday to head off some unexpected political fallout. Some legal experts have concluded that a House measure intended to resolve the arts agency's censorship crisis will not outlaw "obscene art, after all.

Thursday's concentrated effort at political crisis prevention came as Senate conservatives stalled for time by holding up approval of a House-passed compromise endowment funding bill that purports to bar federal support for "obscene" artwork. Senate approval of the appropriation bill, which includes the Interior Department and several other agencies besides the endowment, had been expected as early as Tuesday night, but got bogged down,

Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) and other conservatives were reportedly upset by an interpretation of wording in a conference committee compromise that was offered earlier this week by Rep. Sidney Yates (D-Ill). In an exchange with Rep. Dana Rohrabacher (R-Lomita), Yates said funding of "obscene" artwork—which played a crucial role in precipitating the endowment's crisis earlier this year—was not effectively prohibited.

Helms did not respond to requests for his reaction. Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W. Va.), who is charged with maneuvering the endowment compromise funding bill through the Senate, said only "good-bye" and slipped through a doorway when questioned about the arts-content compromise.

The permissive interpretation by Yates, which surprised Rohrabacher, did not prevent overwhelming House approval of the compromise. But on Thursday, endowment Chairman John E. Frohnmayer acknowledged that the agency was increasingly concerned that the apparently permissive take on the wording might endanger Senate approval of the compromise and return the endowment to the crisis mentality that has virtually immobilized its operations since early June.

"A large number of congressional people on both sides of the Capitol are concerned that we do not have to fight this kind of battle again." Frohnmayer said Thursday in a telephone interview from Oregon, where he is vacationing.

"As I have said repeatedly, I am not at all interested in funding obscene art. I don't believe that's the national endowment's function. We don't consider this just business as usual."

Repeatedly and emphatically, Yates told Rohrabacher that "obscene" arts projects in a variety of media could receive federal financial support if they had exemplary artistic or literary merit. Endowment sources, speaking on the condition they would not be named, said the wording appeared to be so vague that virtually no artistic subject matter would be taboo.

The increasing prominence of such interpretations prompted senior national endowment staff members to contact reporters in an ironic attempt to emphasize that the compromise wording isn't powerless, after all, but would achieve a degree of arts-content regulation, after all, Frohnmayer noted that "there's a spirit of the law that we need to pay attention to. I don't want this squabble to continue."

The issue appeared to turn on a single insertion of the word and in the phrasing of the conference committee report. The report held that "none of the funds" appropriated for the endowment could be used to "promote, disseminate or produce materials . . . considered obscene, including . . . sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the sexual exploitation of children or individuals engaged in sex acts."

But the wording added another crucial phrase: "and which, when taken as a whole, do not have serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value." The wording is taken almost verbatim from a 1972 U.S. Supreme Court pornography decision, Miller vs. California, but the structure of the sentence seemed to legal experts to make clear that, to be refused on content grounds, an art project would have to be both obscene and devoid of significant artistic merit.

Frohnmayer, a lawyer and First Amendment expert himself, declined repeatedly to offer his own interpretation of the wording. But James Fitzpatrick, a prominent arts lawyer with the prestigious firm of Arnold & Porter here, said that his own reading of the wording led him to conclude that it fails completely to achieve any degree of subject matter control.

It was that control that Helms and other conservatives in Congress demanded when they declared war on the endowment earlier this year and attempted to withdraw all funding for the agency or impose such severe restrictions on what it could support that the endowment would have been rendered unable to operate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator's depiction of how this vote will be perceived I do not think need be entirely accurate. This is not the last act in this play.

I think that reasonable men should understand that there comes a time when we have to get on with the bill that is before us. I do not think that we should continue to delay action on this bill.

There will be other times when we can take a stand on the matter that Mr. HELMS has addressed. I do not take any back seat to my friend from North Carolina or to any other Senator as far as the indignation that is felt with respect to the so-called art creations that are concerned. We are all indignant about it.

I am not going to agree with Mr. HELMS that what he says about a certain Member of the other body is entirely accurate. I hope that we can discuss these matters without ridiculing in person a Member of the other body. I do not think we would take it well if the other body were to resort to mentioning names of Senators in debates, and it seems to me we ought to do what we can to preserve the comity between the two Houses. We have to continue to work with Members of the other body. We have to get along with them. They, too, are elected Representatives of the people.

I hope that we will avoid taking excursions into the area of criticizing Members of the other body by name. I just say that in the interest of comity. I cannot control the language of any Senator on this floor.

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. HELMS. Congressman YATES has referred to me time and time again. I think it is fairplay if I mention him one time.

Mr. BYRD. Well, if he does that on the House floor, I can understand the Senator's feelings. If he does it outside the other body, that is quite another thing. I am talking about how we refer to one another on the floors of the two Houses. For decades, it has been the practice to avoid referring to Members of the other body, whether one is speaking from the House floor or the Senate floor, and naming them by name and subjecting them or their States to criticism that is unbecoming of a Member.

I say that, just in the interest of comity, not by way of criticism of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. I know he has strong feelings and I know he has had his feelings hurt and I do not blame him. But I simply would say we do have to get along with the Members of the other body. I am not absolutely sure that what has been said about a certain Member of the other body is entirely accurate. I cannot question it, nor can I confirm it.

Mr. President, I now move to table the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The nays and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to table the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS]. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 35, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 991 was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from Ohio, moves to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move the Senate concur in the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 153.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I thank all Senators.

Mr. President, I also want to compliment Charlie Estes, Rusty Mathews, Sue Masica, Dan Salisbury, Shannon Skripka, Jeff Cilek, and Debbie Rieman for the excellent work they have done as staff members on both sides of the aisle in connection with this very important legislation. They have demonstrated a great degree of skill and a very high degree of dedication without which it would be most difficult for the Senate to accomplish this task which has just been accomplished. I again thank all Senators for their support.

(Mr. BREAUX assumed the chair.)

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There being no objection, at 2:01 p.m., the Senate took a recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate reassembled at 4:53, when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. WIRTH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I begin by thanking all our colleagues for their patience. This has been a difficult period for all concerned and each Senator has displayed remarkable patience and restraint in being present and participating in the deliberations which have been underway, in an attempt to determine the best method of dealing with the reconciliation bill and with other pending matters.

Early this afternoon the Democratic Members of the Senate met in conference. I understand from the distinguished Republican leader that a number of Republican leaders, committee ranking members and others, met to discuss the matter.

I think I can best summarize it by saying, while we do not have an agreement on how best to proceed, we both believe that the prospects for such agreement are sufficiently encouraging to permit that we continue our meetings. The distinguished Republican leader and I, and other chairmen and ranking members, plan to meet tomorrow morning to discuss further how we might best resolve this matter.

Earlier this week I had announced that the Senate schedule next week would be for no session Tuesday, a pro forma session on Wednesday without rollcall votes, and a full session on Thursday and Friday with rollcall votes and full consideration of pending business.

In order to minimize the already substantial disruption of Senators' schedules that has occurred, it is now my intention to announce that we will adhere to that previously announced schedule and what we will do is attempt to reach and begin the implementation of an agreement for the disposition of the reconciliation bill, beginning promptly on Thursday morning.

If we do reach an agreement, that disposition should be relatively prompt and controversy free. If we are unable to reach an agreement, then we will take up the reconciliation bill promptly Thursday morning and consider it in a circumstance which will involve a considerable amount of controversy and numerous amendments and votes.

Either way, we will take up the reconciliation bill beginning next Thursday morning and we will continue until such time as we complete action on it.

The possibility of reaching agreement in a manner that would resolve this matter, and permit fair consideration of other related matters, is sufficient to justify, in my judgment, the continuing discussions which I have just described. However, both the distinguished Republican leader and I, and all of the other participants in the meetings, have concluded that we simply must go to and complete action on reconciliation next week, commencing on next Thursday. So we are going to try very hard to reach an agreement to dispose of it. But if we are unable to do so, then we are going to go to it in any event and simply proceed until we complete action.

I am now pleased to yield to the distinguished Republican leader for any such comments as he may wish to make.

Mr. DOLE. First, I think the majority leader has fairly stated the situation. There will be a meeting tomorrow morning and there will be additional efforts to try to come together on an agreement that affects some items; special items, I guess would be the category. Hopefully there is still a great deal of interest, I think on both sides, of getting together on some stripped down reconciliation bill. That also involves what might happen in the House. It is going to be a lot of work for the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee and the ranking member, Senator DOMENICI. If that could be done, as the majority leader stated, we could complete action on reconciliation probably in 1½ or 2 days. Without it, it could be considerably longer.

In any event, we have had good meetings. While my colleagues were having their caucus we were meeting with ranking Republicans on the committees. They were being instructed on general guidelines in the event there were some agreement for stripping out the extraneous provisions. So we are prepared to continue to see if there is some common ground.

The leader indicated there is no agreement. We do not have any agreement. There are matters like IRA's, and capital gains, and child care, and other very special matters that have been discussed today.

I would just hope maybe we will do the best we can to come to agreement. If we cannot, we will start off, as the leader said, on Thursday morning with the reconciliation bill we will then have, and do the best we can.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the distinguished Republican leader will yield, if we cannot reach agreement then the Budget Committee will simply report out the measure that would appropriately then be before them and we would begin promptly, I anticipate, at 9 o'clock Thursday morning, going right to the bill and proceeding until we complete action.

I hope we will be able to reach agreement. If not, we will proceed in any event.

Mr. EXON. Will the leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. EXON. I want to congratulate the two leaders for the efforts they put forth. There has been a lot of stress and strain, and I know you both carried a heavy burden on this. I think you both worked out a plan that disrupts schedules the least possible.

I know this is an iffy question. All the Members of the Senate would like to know what you anticipate for next weekend. It is pretty obvious if we come back Thursday and if we reach an agreement, then I suspect it would be possible for us to finish the reconciliation bill by Friday night.

If not, I would anticipate if there is not an agreement that there is the high likelihood we would at least be back here in session next Saturday. Is that a fair assessment of the situation?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is an iffy question because we do not know how we will be able to proceed or what will occur when reconciliation is before us. As the Senator knows, there is a 20-hour time limit under reconciliation.

I suspect if we start early Thursday morning, we are going to have very lengthy consideration during Thursday and Friday. If at all possible, it would be my hope we can complete it by Friday evening, whatever the circumstance. But I do not think it is possible to assure that with any certainty at this time.

Mr. EXON. So next Saturday is pretty iffy at this point.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. KASTEN. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. KASTEN. As the majority leader is aware, there was a leadership package worked out with regard to democratic free elections in Nicaragua and a $9 million appropriation that was to work its way through, hopefully before Sunday, tomorrow, as the majority leader is aware. A significant amount of that money goes for a registration process. There are 4 registration days in the month of October, each Sunday.

If we fail to do anything today, we will have missed two of the four registration possibilities. I see the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee is here. Is it possible that we can expedite this agreed-to package today so that we can—I know the Secretary of State has spoken with the majority leader and spoken with a number of us—is it possible we can expedite this package today?

It seems now it would be delayed maybe even until next Thursday, Friday, or Saturday. We might find ourselves a week from now in exactly the same position we are in now, which means 3 out of the 4 registration days would have passed and our ability to help free and fair elections in Nicaragua would be significantly setback.

I might also say to the majority leader that the House did pass this in an expedited procedure. They took it through the Rules Committee and on the floor last Wednesday. The vote last Wednesday was 263 to 156. I am hopeful that we can somehow work out a way to do this today.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. I have spoken with the Secretary of State as recently as last evening. As the Members of the Senate know, the bill that was received in the Senate yesterday, the Appropriations Committee considered it today. It is not yet even on the calendar. We could take it up by unanimous consent, but as you are aware, in the past there have been numerous objections made by numerous Senators to bringing up legislation prior to the expiration of the time required under Senate rules for review of the legislation and any report that might accompany the legislation.

I know that there has been insistence on that point by a number of Senators on a variety of bills and, in this case, objection has been made on that basis that the bill is just here. There has not been the requisite time for Senators to become sufficiently aware of it. I personally would like to move to it and will do what I can to expedite its handling next week, but it requires unanimous consent now to proceed to that under the Senate rules and objection has been made and, therefore, we will not be able to do so.

I will undertake every effort between now and our return to session on Thursday, and if we can get that, then it would be my intention to move to that very quickly, perhaps on Thursday, to get it done for the reasons the Senator from Wisconsin stated.

Mr. KASTEN. If the leader will yield further, it is my understanding we still have yet to have an Appropriations Committee meeting on this issue. We are two steps behind.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was unaware of that. I say to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I was under the impression there was going to be a meeting today with respect to the Nicaragua legislation, but, of course, the chairman was on the floor managing the Interior appropriations conference report.

Mr. BYRD. Will the majority leader yield? There will not be a meeting of the Appropriations Committee today. My being busy on the floor earlier today in connection with the Interior appropriations conference report and then the subsequent conference which tied up a lot of Members makes it impossible at this time to get a quorum to act on the bill. So we will not be meeting today.

Mr. MITCHELL. I inquire of the distinguished chairman whether it will be possible during next week prior to Thursday to have a meeting of the committee and to have the legislation ready in the event we can move to it promptly when we return next week?

Mr. BYRD. I will certainly make every effort to get a quorum of Senators for that purpose. If we can get a quorum for that purpose, I will be around in ample time to get that done in advance of Thursday. If we get a quorum to report out the measure, I will be happy to call a meeting.

Mr. KASTEN. If the majority leader will yield one point further, I know there have been a number of concerns expressed by Senators on both sides of the aisle.

I would simply like to tell him that on our side of the aisle, we are ready to move forward in an expedited way. Some of the Senators who expressed concern with amendments will either introduce or withdraw their amendments or in other ways expedite the process and procedures.

From our point of view, we are clear on this legislation. This is for voter registration, and there are only 4 voter registration days. We have, in effect, used up half the voter registration days for this election. I am anxious to work with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee next week.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator very much for his comments. I must say it is very encouraging as one who supports the efforts to do something, because as the distinguished Republican knows, most of the objection that has arisen during this year to taking up legislation by unanimous consent prior to the expiration of the requisite time under the rules has been from Members on that side of the aisle. I am thankful in this case that objection is not being made.

As the Senator may know, the Senate just received the bill yesterday. We do want to move promptly. I hope we will do so, and I am committed to moving this matter forward. I hope we will be able to do so next week.

Mr. BYRD. Will the majority leader yield? I also want to express my thanks to the distinguished Senator for his prognostication as to what would happen from his side of the aisle in the committee.

I would hope that we would not have any amendments called up in the committee because those same amendments would be fought over again on the floor, and I do consider it to be a waste of time, to be a payload unworthy of taking the time.

I probably will not support the resolution. That will not keep me from doing whatever I can to bring it to the floor and letting the Senate work its will.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield to me? To make the RECORD complete, as the Senator points out, there were objections on our side, from Senator HATFIELD, the ranking member on appropriations, because the bill had not been referred to appropriations. That was done, I think, yesterday afternoon.

As the majority leader pointed out, the chairman was tied up all morning on another matter and then there was an objection by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS]. I think that after a discussion with Secretary Baker, at least there is a willingness expressed by the Senator from North Carolina to offer an amendment and maybe talk about it.

I think the Secretary of State also talked to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] and he is not willing to remove his objection. He has every right not to remove his objection, particularly since there is no bill on the floor.

Hopefully, with only two Sundays left after tomorrow, we can resolve this matter by next weekend sometime.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the leader will yield to me, as both leaders know, whenever you get 100 Senators together, you are going to get 200 opinions on any subject, particularly on this subject. Since we are all here, I wanted to state my own. It is this: That the effort the leaders have undertaken to try to strip this reconciliation bill down is not only good for Senators from a scheduling standpoint, but is a very, very significant effort for the long-term good of the country, let alone the Senate.

This reconciliation process started out to be a way to sort of balance the budget in year's end, and it has turned out to be about the most abusive possible legislative process. We all remember it got started with the notion that at the end we would have to sort of put through some little spending cuts and maybe some tax measures.

What we have done is we have added everything that comes along to this reconciliation bill, because it comes to the floor under privileged procedures. What we are going to end up with if we do not somehow break ourselves of this addictive habit of rolling everything into one piece of legislation is sort of an omnibus legislative vehicle, and more and more, a higher and higher fraction of the year's legislative work will end up being done on this one reconciliation bill, a bill that comes to the floor under expedited pressure, without the right of full amendment, without the right of unlimited debate, without the ordinary regular rules of procedure that have served the Senate so well.

I think in the middle of the night the other night, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] at the end or near the end of the Finance Committee consideration of his reconciliation measure, said something that was so resonant that even though it was in the middle of the night and everybody was tired, that statement has echoed all over the country. I read it in a number of papers.

Senator BRADLEY said here we are trying to save $5 billion, and to do it we have raised $35 billion.

That is just one aspect of the reconciliation bill that I find troubling, as did Senator BRADLEY. Mr. President, I think Senators on both sides of the aisle believe that what Senator MITCHELL and Senator DOLE are trying to do is good legislative practice. I know there are some cynics around here who say, well it is impossible, but once we start getting into this kind of a rut we cannot get out. But I think we can. I for one wish them well. I believe it is very, very important that somehow we restore some integrity to this process.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] amended the rules here, or proposed a rule which has to some extent been helpful in this reconciliation process, but inventive minds have found a way to get around the so-called "Byrd rule." I think now every Senator ought to get behind the two leaders as they try to find a way to slim this thing down to manageable proportions.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to say that the overriding consideration, even more than the process reform in the Senate, which is urgently needed, is that we get the issue resolved, not only the issue of budget reconciliation, but also a fair vote up or down on IRA's and on capital gains reform.

I hope, after they have a chance to get rested up over the weekend, the two leaders will come back next week and give us a package deal that we can all get behind.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I assure the majority leader I am probably as tired as he, although I do not have as many burdens as he. I will not take very much time.

I want to say to my friend from Colorado, he has said it right. I want to say to the two leaders that we have made some progress. When we consider how difficult this situation is, it should not surprise anyone that we have not resolved this issue.

On the other hand, I think the distinguished majority leader will agree at least that we have the Byrd rule on extraneous material to use on our bill if we are not able to reach agreement on the proposals that have been submitted between the two leaders on trying to arrive at some understanding on IRA's and capital gains, and then proceed to an informal process of removing the extraneous material. At least we can try to get some of that out here on the floor.

I would like to make the point that clearly the U.S. House has no such rule. They do not even have any rule that would give a Member or the leader or anyone else permission on the floor to attack the extraneous nature of materials in this bill. We have not had a chance.

Capital gains: I think the majority leader would agree, the House is probably acting in good faith at this point on an idea about our ideas, but there is no one here to work with. That is not their fault. We only had a few minutes with the distinguished Speaker. He cannot speak for everyone. He, too, had to leave for a scheduled event. All of his Members, and probably the Republican leaders, are out of town.

So I understand some effort will be made next week to talk with the leadership there about this very exciting idea of arriving at a conclusion that is acceptable to everyone on IRA's, capital gains, and maybe some other specific items; capital gains proceeding in a all-out effort to make this a minimal bill on reconciliation; one that would comply with the extraneous material rule that we have here.

It is interesting this body voted for the rule almost 100 percent when we adopted it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it was 100 percent. It was 96 to nothing.

Mr. DOMENICI. It was 96 to nothing. We all worked on it. It was the idea of the distinguished Senator, Mr. BYRD, but by the time we finished, it is a pretty effective tool.

I must say, however, you cannot provide this kind of a measure with the absolute certainty that the minds of committee staff and Senators will not find a way to get around it one way or another. So it is not as easy as one might think.

I am somewhat pleased. I do not want to leave the Senators with the opinion, at least from this Senator, that we are there. We could have the big reconciliation bill on the floor Thursday. I think there is a possibility of that, maybe even a high possibility. On the other hand, we are going to try to see if we could avoid that.

So I understand the distinguished majority leader and minority leader will try again in the morning. As the week ensues, we will try to narrow the issues down. I might say to the Members I think there is a real chance that by Thursday we will see some daylight. If not, 2 or 3 days on reconciliation may indeed force the light in another way when we see what is before us and how difficult it is.

So we will continue to work on it. We thank the leadership for letting us work with him on it, and hopefully we will succeed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague, and say it was precisely the considerations that he raised and the Senator from Colorado raised, among others, that led me to suggest this course of action on late Thursday evening. I am pleased that we are at least making some progress, however slow.

The Senator form New Mexico is quite correct that we are going to try to get an agreement. We do not have it. We may not be able to get one because what we find as we proceed down this road is each time we resolve one issue it raises two new ones that were not previously considered. But we will do the best we can in good faith.

In any event, we will complete action on the reconciliation bill next week one way or the other.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed as if in morning business for no longer than 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PANAMA

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I think many were shocked as to the rapid turn of events which took place this week in Panama. First we were filled with hope, hope that the Panamanians, who had undertaken an opportunity to bring about freedom and the removal of General Noriega, would be successful.

Mr. President, Manuel Noriega has turned Panama into a money-laundering center, protecting billions of dollars of the drug dealers' profits. He has used Panama's border with Colombia to make Panama a superhighway for smuggling drugs into the United States.

Noriega is a drug dealer and a dictator. When the Panamanian people rejected his candidate for president on May 7, he simply suspended the election and continued to rule by the gun. Last week the Panamanian people tried to win their freedom. They believed that the United States would help them in their fight. But the help they had hoped for never came.

Noriega is still in power. But, Mr. President, I believe the Panamanian people, like our own forefathers, have a thirst for freedom. Some have died in their attempt to oust Noriega and there is no doubt they will try again. When they do, I think we—the United States—have a moral obligation to support them in their quest for freedom.

Mr. President, I learned today from newspaper accounts, as it relates to Manuel Noriega's own military newspaper, a newspaper in which he has published the names of those Panamanians which he declared to be now outlaws, that he has placed a price on their heads of $250,000. It is a publication of Noriega's hit list which is tantamount to a declaration of war against the peaceful restoration of democracy in Panama, not to mention a gross violation of international law.

Imagine, he published the names of people and has through his cronies offered a reward for their execution; many of them leading Panamanians who are critics, who have sought safe haven here in this country: Ambassador Gabriel Lewis Galindo, $250,000 placed on his head; Jose Isabel Blandon, $250,000 dead or alive; Col. Roberto Diaz Herrera, $250,000; Ambassador Juan Sosa, who so many of the Members of the Congress have come to know and admire for his advocation of peaceful transition and democracy. I hope we begin to wake up when we find these publications of a hit list which Noriega's cronies publish in his Army newspaper in Panama to the fact that it is about time that the United States begin to adhere to a policy of a great President of the United States, Teddy Roosevelt, when he said "Speak softly, and carry a big stick."

We have encouraged the people of Panama to rise up against this despot, and yet we have never been there. We gave them every reason to believe that we would be there in their time of need, and we failed them.

We have seen officers who have been executed, families who have been held and threatened—now a hit list of those who have sought sanctuary here in the United States. Great arsenal of democracy. It certainly does not look like it is meeting its obligations. I would hope that we would show a little more backbone.

I suggest that the people over at Joint Chiefs begin to get their act in line, because certainly this was a terrible, miserable display of coordination, and there is no excuse for it. For anyone to say this was one of our finer days, that we did what we should have done, I suggest that does not square up with the real facts and all of the facts.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, today marks the 1,666th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

I ask unanimous consent that an article from Maclean's magazine, which describes what was in 1987 an absolute rash of hostage-taking, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEBANON: PAWNS OF TERROR POLITICS

Even by the chaotic standards of Lebanon, where kidnaping has become almost a local industry, the past two weeks have produced a fearful haul of hostages. On Jan. 24 four men disguised as police officers walked into Beirut University College and seized four male professors—three Americans and an Indian. Two days later gunmen kidnaped two unidentified men, believed to be foreigners, and a Saudi national. And last week there was growing concern that Terry Waite, the special envoy of the Archbishop of Canterbury who had previously helped to free hostages from Iran, Libya and Lebanon, may have been taken hostage himself on his latest mission. Waite had not been heard from since he left a West Beirut hotel on Jan. 20. The archbishop, Most Rev. Robert Runcie, announced that, according to the Druze militia leaders responsible for Waite's security, the envoy was safe and negotiating with hostage takers. But at week's end the Lebanese weekly magazine Al-Shiraa reported that Waite was being held under house arrest.

Waite's return to Lebanon was an attempt to complete the business left unfinished when the U.S. arms-to-Iran scandal broke last November. His intention, apparently, was to persuade the faction called Islamic Jihad (Holy War) to release Americans Terry Anderson, 39, Mideast correspondent for the Associated Press, and Thomas Sutherland, 56, dean of agriculture at the American University. Militia sources in Beirut said last week that the tall, bearded Waite had been seen in the Bekaa Valley of eastern Lebanon. And the Voice of Lebanon radio station in Christian East Beirut reported that Waite had been taken, blindfolded, to four villages in the valley, where he met with American hostages. But according to Al-Shiraa, the magazine that exposed the arms-to-Iran sale last November, Waite was seized as security when the kidnapers detected U.S. military preparations in the area.

That was an apparent reference to Washington's decision, announced last week, to send a group of Mediterranean-based warships closer to the Lebanese coast. The move was ostensively designed to aid in a possible evacuation of foreigners. With the latest spate of kidnappings raising the number of foreign hostages in Lebanon to at least 26, the state department ordered 1,500 Americans in Lebanon to leave within 30 days and barred all travel there on U.S. passports. In Ottawa, External Affairs Minister Joe Clark said that Canadians in Lebanon should leave and others should not travel there unless they had a "very strong reason."

But the show of U.S. naval force was also an unmistakable threat. In response, the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, a previously unknown terrorist group that claimed to have kidnaped the four professors, threatened to kill them if the United States attacked Lebanon. The group's message to a news agency included a photo of 56-year-old American hostage Robert Polhill—with two submachine guns pointed at his head.

The key to the current rash of kidnapings is 22-year-old Mohammed Ali Hamadei. A Lebanese who has lived in West Germany since 1984, Hamadei was arrested on Jan. 13 at Frankfurt airport carrying several bottles of methyl nitrate, a liquid explosive. Since then, the United States has been trying to extradite him to stand trial for air piracy and the murder of a U.S. navy diver during the 1985 hijackng of a TWA jet. But two weeks ago Beirut gunmen countered by seizing two West German businessmen—Rudolf Cordes, 53, and Alfred Schmidt, 47—and threatening to murder them if Hamadei were extradited.

That left the government of Chancellor Helmut Kohl with a thorny dilemma: whether to comply with the U.S. request and put the hostages at risk, or refuse extradition and alienate Bonn's U.S. allies. In an attempt to buy time, West German officials asked the Frankfurt high court to validate the U.S. request. They also sent an envoy to Tehran One option reportedly under consideration by Kohl's crisis team was to try Hamadei in West Germany on the lesser charge of possession of explosives, then deport him to Lebanon in exchange for the German hostages. A high-placed foreign ministry source noted that Bonn had ample precedent to negotiate with the kidnappers, including the U.S. arms-for-hostages swap with Iran. The liberal newspaper Die Zeit said that the United States had "discredited itself as a pioneer" against terrorism and "can hardly be offended if we preferred to save our countrymen at the expense of America's legal claim."

As Bonn officials debated the issue last week, West German authorities arrested Abbas Ali Hamadei, 28, the suspect's brother. A naturalized West German, the older Hamadei was apparently picked up in connection with the kidnapings of the two West German businessmen. A spokesman for the Hamadei clan denied any family connection with the abductions. But based on information provided by Abbas, police found 4.5 gallons of volatile methyl nitrate in a field outside the town of Beckingen near the German border with Luxembourg.

The U.S. arms scandal may also have had an impact on Waite's safety. The Anglican envoy has repeatedly denied that he was operating as an agent of a foreign government. But the three releases of Americans that he arranged had coincided with U.S. arms deliveries to Iran, suggesting that he had at least been an unwitting cover for Washington's efforts. And late last week a spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization said that Waite had paid $2.6 million for the release of David Jacobsen last November—money that he said had been raised privately in the United States. Waite had indicated recently that his latest mission might be among his last, and he had never minimized the dangers of his efforts. "When you get into a car," he said last month, "you never know whether you will be coming back again." With the flow of American arms now dry, U.S. analysts said, the kidnappers might have concluded that Waite was less valuable as a hostage negotiator than as a hostage.

While Western officials worried about Waite, they also tried to ensure that no more hostages would be taken. The state department edict gives Americans 30 days to leave Lebanon or face penalties of up to five years in jail and a $2,600 fine. Most of the Americans are of Lebanese extraction or married to Lebanese, but some without such connections have stayed as well—even in Beirut, the war zone once known as the "Paris of the Middle East." Some were clearly unhappy about the U.S. order. "I hate to be blackmailed by my own government," said Barbara Sayers, an English professor at the American University, who said that she would leave.

Washington has also tried to intimidate the hostage takers. Two weeks ago U.S. officials told reporters that they were considering military action against terrorists in Lebanon if any American hostage was killed. And last week the United States moved a carrier group, led by the nuclear-powered Nimitz, closer to Lebanon. The likely targets of an American attack would be the Hezbollah, a pro-Iranian party that is the largest Shiite Moslem terrorist group in Lebanon. "We know where to find the Hezbollah," said Neil Livingstone, president of the Washington-based Institute on Terrorism and Subnational Conflict. "We have people entirely capable of going into Beirut and making a number of strikes."

Although the Hezbollah is at the top of the U.S. hit list, terrorism in Lebanon is not an exclusive domain. The country harbors some 32 terrorist organizations, and, according to U.S. and French intelligence sources, many free-lance kidnappers have emerged as well. Those gangs kidnap foreigners on speculation, then sell them to the highest bidder among the extremist groups. They have helped to create a virtual open season on foreigners, a state of affairs that has been heightened by the Hamadei extradition case. The next move in the legal proceedings will be up to the West Germans, and both the Americans and the Lebanese kidnappers will be watching closely. They will also be watching the fate of Terry Waite, the envoy who tried to invoke reason and compassion in a land where the only conspicuous law is that of the gun.

THE MILWAUKEE SYMPHONY IN WASHINGTON

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I was privileged 2 days ago to attend the performance of the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra at the Kennedy Center.

My wife Eva and I agreed that these talented men and women turned in a performance that ought to be a source of pride to all music-loving Wisconsinites. Under the baton of conductor Zdenek Macal, the orchestra rendered a particularly memorable interpretation of Berlioz's "Symphonie fantastique."

I was especially pleased to welcome the members of the orchestra to the U.S. Capitol yesterday—and I join my colleagues in hoping that they will return soon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the glowing review of the orchestra's performance by Washington Post music critic Joseph McLellan be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 6, 1989]

MUSIC: MILWAUKEE'S FINE BREW

(By Joseph McLellan)

Milwaukee?

Milwaukee!

Beyond the baseball, bratwurst and beer that have made it famous, the city clearly has other resources. One of them, the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, came to the Kennedy Center Wednesday night with conductor Zdenek Macal and electrified an audience whose long standing ovation at the finish signaled reluctance to let the music end.

Macal is known here through his too-infrequent appearances as a guest conductor. His orchestra (his since 1986) has not been here in quite a while. But Wednesday night's performance, beginning with Ellen Taaffe Zwilich's joyfully haunting "Celebration" and ending with the formidable "Symphonie fantastique" of Berlioz, left the audience eager for its next visit.

Between these orchestral showpieces, cellist Matt Haimovitz gave a poised, polished performance of the Saint-Saens Cello Concerto No. 1. The pace seemed rushed in the opening measures, though the contrast was all the more effective when the same material returned, somewhat less driven, near the end. And there were moments of unbalance when the soloist was drowned out by the orchestra—a problem for which the cellist can hardly be blamed, though his youthful impetuosity (he is 18) might have had something to do with the fast tempo.

In any case, even at his most headlong pace his phrasing was always cleanly articulated, and in the dancelike Allegretto con Moto section his rhythmic lilt was totally disarming. The full-blooded tone and superb control in the cadenza-bridge leading into the finale were also impressive. He is an artist of enormous potential and, already, impressive achievement.

The Milwaukee Symphony has a relatively young membership, including a substantial number of women who have even infiltrated those male bastions, the percussion and double bass sections. With about 90 players, it is relatively small for an American symphony orchestra, through no smaller than some world-famous European orchestras such as the concertgebouw of Amsterdam. It can produce refreshingly light textures (the shimmering, transparent string tone during the soft woodwind dialogue in Berlioz's third movement, for example), but when power was called for, as in the "March to the Scaffold" and the "Witches' Sabbath," power was overwhelmingly there.

Macal is a superb conductor, whose gestures have grace and clarity when the music requires it. But he puts expression and communication first; there were times, in the spookier moments of the Berlioz, when his movements might have come right out of "Night of the Living Dead." But they were the right gestures, and the music reflected their rightness.

C.S.S. "ALABAMA"

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is my pleasure to inform my colleagues that on October 3, 1989, after almost 2 years of negotiations, France has conceded the United States title to the C.S.S. Alabama, and the associated artifacts. This famous ship sank 7 miles off the coast of Cherbourg, France, in 1864 in one of the most famous battles of the Civil War and has been embroiled in controversy since its discovery in the mid-1980's.

In 1987, I introduced legislation stating that title to the C.S.S. Alabama and her related artifacts were vested in and had never been abandoned by the United States. Since that time, the State Department has been working to obtain an agreement that would recognize the United States' title to the wreck, while acknowledging the rights of France in its own territorial sea. However, this concession by France has come as a surprise to all of us who have been working to obtain this agreement. I believe that this goal has been accomplished and expect that a scientific committee will be set up in the next few months to implement the elements of this agreement.

While the procedure for the disposition of these valuable artifacts has not yet been completely decided, I believe that the French recognition of American title to these artifacts should enable us to see that many of these artifacts are returned to the United States.

Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate our entire State Department negotiating team, particularly Peter Bernhardt, the Deputy Director for Ocean Law and Policy, for their outstanding and tireless work on this matter. I also would like to thank Jim Delgado, the Director of the National Park Service's Maritime Initiative, who greatly assisted me in my legislative efforts on this subject and who has worked with the State Department on this issue.

I would also like to thank those Alabamians who initially contacted me about the discovery of this ship and who brought to my attention the importance which this ship held historically and personally to so many Alabamians. I particularly want to thank David Toifel, a Mobile teacher and a member of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, who formed the "Save the Alabama Committee" and has given of himself and his time to see this agreement reached.

Mr. President, many people have worked hard to see this agreement become a reality. I congratulate everyone who has worked on this project and look forward to the recovery of these artifacts which are expected to shed new light on Civil War naval history for the betterment of our Nation and the world.

FRENCH TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER TO BRAZIL IN VIOLATION OF THE MTCR

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss a matter of grave concern. French President Francois Mitterrand has reportedly approved the transfer to Brazil of rocket technology which is clearly prohibited by the Missile Technology Control Regime [MTCR]. Both France and the United States are signatories to this agreement, and the administration has gone on record that it opposes this transfer. Mr. President, at this time, I ask unanimous consent that an article in the November issue of Signal and a story from Thursday's AP wire be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FRENCH ROCKET TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER

(By Robert K. Ackerman)

The French government, overriding Bush Administration objections, plans to transfer to Brazil sensitive rocket engine technology that could be converted to ballistic missile use and eventually end up in the hands of Libyan strongman Moammar Gadahafi.

France initially appeared to pull back from transfer of the Viking liquid fuel rocket motor for the Ariane space launch vehicle in the face of strong U.S. State Department diplomatic protests in July, at the time of the Paris Economic Summit. But the decision to go ahead with the technology transfer is linked to an estimated $60 million contract to launch two Brazilian communications satellites on the Ariane launch vehicle. The decision was made personally by French President Francois Mitterrand, according to senior State Department officials.

Arianspace, a French company, has been competing with McDonnell Douglas for the contract to launch the two communications spacecraft for Brazil. When France appeared to back away from the Viking motor sale in July, China made overtures to Brazil. That may have caused France to reevaluate its position on transferring the rocket motor technology.

Serious concern has been expressed by State Department and senior Arms Control and Disarmament Agency officials, who believe that the rocket motor technology will end up powering intercontinental ballistic missiles, possibly for Libya. Brazil and Libya already have established a strong link in seeking to develop ballistic missile boosters. A 1988 report from Vice President (then Senator) Dan Quayle stated that Libya offered Brazil $2 billion to buy that nation's theater ballistic missiles. Brazil is on the international watch list of nations that could acquire and transfer ballistic missile technology to other countries.

In protesting the French rocket motor transfer, the State Department cited in a demarche the possible violation by France of the Missile Technology Control Regime. This is an agreement signed in 1987 by the U.S., France, Canada, West Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom (see SIGNAL, "Missile Technology Control," June 1987, page 13). The regime is not a treaty, but does call for restraint in sales of dual-use launch vehicle technology.

A clause in the regime, according to State Department officials, permits technology transfer for peaceful purposes, and President Mitterand is claiming that safeguards will be placed on the Viking rocket motor sale to ensure peaceful space launch applications.

It is anticipated that France's action with Brazil will force a reevaluation of the regime, which already is under fire in Europe because the U.S. Congress is viewed as trying to curtail foreign military sales by allies based on the regime. Some Europeans believe that the Congress is meddling in their internal affairs.

U.S. PROTESTS FRENCH PLAN TO GIVE BRAZIL ROCKET MOTOR

(By Ruth Sinai)

WASHINGTON.—Despite strong U.S. protests, the French government plans to trade Brazil sensitive rocket technology that could be used by U.S. enemies to make ballistic missiles, government and industry officials said Thursday.

France has promised to give Brazil the technology of a liquid fuel motor called Viking, which powers the Ariane space launch vehicle, the officials said. In return, the French company Arianespace would be awarded a $60 million contract for the launch of two Brazilian communications satellites, they added.

The U.S. officials, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, said French President Francois Mitterand personally made the decision to give the technology to Brazil, promising that safeguards would be placed to prevent use of the motor for lethal purposes.

But a statement issued by the government in Paris denied a final decision had been made. "The definitive contract will be submitted to the government for approval and this contract has not yet been given" to the government, the statement said.

"This contract will have to follow certain purposes and restrictions regarding technology transfers," it said.

The United States, however, is doubtful such safeguards can be implemented effectively.

"If someone like Libya wants to use this motor to harmful purposes, who will stop them?" asked one official.

Libya has been seeking to buy from Brazil equipment and know-how in an effort to develop a ballistic missile arsenal capable of delivering chemical weapon warheads, according to U.S. experts.

Brazil, one of an estimated 20 Third World countries which have some form of ballistic missile capability, has been exporting some missile technology while attempting to develop a more accurate and sophisticated arsenal of its own.

Word of the planned French sale was first reported by Signal magazine, published by the Armed Forces Communications and Electronic Association.

Representatives of McDonnell Douglas Corp., the St. Louis-based firm competing for the Brazilian launch contract against Arianespace, were informed of the French proposal by Brazilian officials and conveyed the information to the Defense Department, officials said.

A spokesman for McDonnell Douglas, Bob O'Brien, said that if the French "transfer is made, obviously it wouldn't enhance our chances" to win the contract. He said Brazil had been expected to announce its decision already but has not done so yet.

The United States first protested the planned French sale last July during the seven-national economic summit in Paris, one official said.

For while it appeared the protest had stopped the French plan, the official said. But the French government reconsidered when it appeared France stood to lose the lucrative satellite launch contract, he said.

The United States has warned France the technology transfer would violate the Missile Technology Control Regime, a 1987 agreement to stem the proliferation of such weapons, of which France is a signatory, the official said.

But France contends the Viking motor will be used for peaceful purposes and would not violate the agreement.

The United States is still reviewing whether it can stop the deal, the official said.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, for those of my colleagues that are not familiar with this case, Brazil has issued two requests for proposals [RFP]. Under the first RFP Brazil would purchase satellites. Under the second RFP, Brazil would purchase launch services for two separate launches of the satellites. The competition for these contracts has essentially come down to two companies, McDonnell Douglas of the United States, and Ariane of France. The Brazilian RFP is in the public domain, and from reading the RFP, it is very clear what Brazil was really after in the first place. The Brazilian Government's request for proposals clearly states in section 5.4. Transfer of Technology, and I quote, "The Bidder shall present a detailed proposal of Transfer of Technology related to satellite launch vehicles in particular with liquid propellant and its launch and test facilities. . . ."

In addition, the RFP goes on to state that Brazil prefers the bidder's government to include a formal statement authorizing the transfer. At this time, I ask unanimous consent that an excerpt from the Brazilian RFP be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TELECOMUNICAÇÕES BRASILEIRAS S.A.—TELEBRAS

5.3.3.3. The Selected Bidder is solidarily responsible with the Financial Institution(s) indicated in the Bidder's Proposal for the financing of the Contract. In case the Financial Institution(s) does not maintain its offer at any time from Proposal presentation until the final conclusion of the loan agreement, the Selected Bidder shall be responsible and burden all costs concerning the introduction of a new Financial Institution(s) and, furthermore, the original terms and conditions approved by "Banco Central do Brasil" shall be followed.

5.3.3.4. EMBRATEL shall retain control over the launch insurance strategy, whether it will be through the insurance market, self insurance or a pooling arrangement.

5.4. TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY

The Bidder shall present a detailed proposal of Transfer of Technology related to satellite launch vehicles in particularly with liquid propellant and its launch and test facilities preferably, attaching a formal statement of the Government that holds the technology authorizing that transfer. Other items of related technology transfer may also be included.

5.5. OTHER PROVISIONS

5.5.1. The Bidder shall include in his Proposal the Annual Reports for the three (3) previous fiscal years, including the correspondent financial statements.

5.5.2. DECLARATION

The Bidder shall include in his Proposal a formal statement expressing his agreement to all the terms and conditions contained in this RFP, its Annexes, Attachments and Exhibits.

Compliance with the Terms and Conditions (Attachment 1) is expected.

Any exceptions to the Terms and Conditions or their principles, must be clearly delineated in the Commercial Proposal and not in the Technical Proposal. Unspecified exceptions to the Terms and Conditions (Attachment 1) are not acceptable and any exceptions will clearly be taken into consideration in evaluating one proposal against another.

Mr. BINGAMAN. The fact that the French proposal is moving forward is an indication that the Government of France may indeed have provided such a statement. Mr. President, at this time, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD details of the French technology transfer proposal to Brazil, information available in the public domain in Brazil.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CNES French National Space Center is offering the Technology Transfer for the French Brazilsat Proposal.

As an overview, the French are offering "System Concept, system studies program management, quality engineering launch operational training, and participation of Brazilian engineers at/with ARIANE launches. They are also offering training of Brazilian engineers at European companies for know-how transfer. They will also offer Operational training of engineers and technicians at CSG Kourou. The French will also offer engineering support for the final integration and validation of the Alcantara base.

Liquid Propellant Propulsion Technology:

The French propose to license the Viking Engine having 65 to 75 tons thrust. This engine uses liquid propellants Nitrogen tetroxide and dimethyl hydrozine.

Option 1:

1. Phase 2.5 to 3 years—transmission of the industrial files (technical drawings?) and definition of the test fixtures and installation of a quality assurance system.

2. Phase 3rd to 6th year—Modify if required, tooling (by French). Purchase of tooling by Brazil. Purchase of test equipment by Brazil. Supply (purchase?) of SEP of Master pieces (Master Parts for gaging?). Training of engine test team.

3. Phase 6th to 8th year—Production, assembly and material acceptance. Firing tests and start of series production.

Test Facilities—suggested a list of test equipment that will be required.

Option 11 Transfer of and Familiarization:

1. Combustion: the "Viking" gas generator 3 yrs.

2. Rotating clements: the "Viking" turbo pump 4 yrs.

3. Combustion chamber/nozzle/diffusor technology 3 yrs.

4. Regulation: Propellant Feed Systems 2-3 yrs.

5. The Complete Engine—Build an engine 2.5 yrs.

6. Tests and test benches.

Whatever option, or any intermediate program selected, it can be negotiated after examination of this proposal by the Brazilian authorities.

Training of engineers in Europe:

a. Launch concept

1. Configuration and mass control.

2. Dynamic state separation studies.

3. Flight safety and operations.

4. Concept and reliability of inflight software.

5. Quality assurance service.

6. ECM and electrostatic protection.

b. Definition of tracking and safety requirements.

c. Launch operations at CSG, Kourou during ARIANE Launch.

Supply of Technical elements for flight hardware.

Brazilian engineers are invited for training in the supplier companies.

1. Launch Pyrotechnics (AMD Co).

2. Miniature strap-down inertial guidance system MS D80-UT80 (SAGBM).

3. On-board Computer (SAAB)

4. Flight control actuator amplifier ECP (Alcatel-Kirk/SFENA).

5. Command dispatching unit (ETCA).

6. Controlled destruction box (ETCA).

7. Fairing Separation Mechanism (CONTRAVES/AMD).

8. Satellite separation system (SAAB).

9. Payload supporting structures & Fairings (CONTRAVES).

Launch of small orbiting satellites by Arianespace.

Free launches of up to 50kg each. (Qty undefined).

Items offered under options 2, 3 & 5 will receive export clearance by the end of June 1989 and upon the implementation of the new CNES-CTA agreement.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, these plans include the French licensing to Brazil of Viking engine technology with liquid propellant propulsion and 65 to 75 tons thrust. This technology is clearly useful for ballistic missiles. While Brazil's intentions may be peaceful, it is not intentions, but rather capabilities, that count with Brazil's neighbors.

The proposed French transfer is exactly the kind of transaction that the MTCR was intended to halt. The signatories to the MTCR knew very well that without agreed upon mutual restraint, concerns over missile proliferation would inevitably lose out to short-term economic considerations, to the detriment of the security of all in the long run. The MTCR was thus created out of the realization that, if proliferation continues, the strategic balance would be permanently changed. In the long term, this would have devastating security consequences. In the final analysis, if the proposed French technology transfer goes through, the MTCR will be effectively a dead letter.

Therefore, the question is, what does the President of the United States plan to do to prevent a French violation of the missile technology control regime, and, if necessary, what steps will he take if the French go forward with this transfer and violate the MTCR? This is the greatest challenge to the administration's declared missile nonproliferation policy to arise thus far. Yet it may be an opportunity as well as a challenge, if the administration can use this case to develop a game plan to strengthen the MTCR, and if Congress uses it to provide additional legislative tools to the administration. Back in 1976 and 1977, the proposed West European transfer of sensitive reprocessing and enrichment technologies to the Third World provided a similar challenge and forced the reexamination of nuclear nonproliferation policy both in this country and abroad. Out of that effort came the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978 in the Congress and international agreement to restrain further transfer of sensitive nuclear technologies.

I know that President Bush and Vice President Quayle are very concerned about missile proliferation. Vice President Quayle, in an article that appeared in yesterday's Financial Times, called for broadening the number of MTCR adherent nations, to include all members of the European Community. I ask unanimous consent that the article in yesterday's Financial Times be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SEEKS FULL EC MEMBERSHIP OF MISSILE TREATY

(By Alan Friedman and Victor Mallet)

Mr. Dan Quayle, the US vice president called yesterday for all members of the European Community to join the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR), an accord reached in 1987 by the seven leading industrialised nations to restrict missile proliferation in the developing world.

Mr. Quayle's remarks follow high-level diplomatic protests by the US to Paris over a French proposal to transfer rocket launching technology to Brazil as part of a satellite-launching deal for Ariane-space, the French-dominated group of European aerospace companies.

The sale of this launching technology is prohibited under the MTCR of which France is a signatory.

Although the US lodged its first protest three months ago the dispute has intensified during bilateral talks in recent days. British and US officials claim that France has adopted a deliberately loose interpretation of the MTCR.

Western officials are particularly concerned about a three-nation project between Iraq, Egypt and Argentina, code-named Condor, whose planned range and payload, they believe, would threaten Middle East stability. Among other countries involved in ballistic missile projects which worry MTCR adherents are Pakistan, India, Israel and South Africa.

"The key loophole in the MTCR is the need for new MTCR adherents," Mr. Dan Quayle, US Vice President, told the Financial Times. "We need to get as many nations as want to join the MTCR on board as soon as possible. Certainly the EC members."

The US Administration is under pressure from Congress to impose sanctions on European companies which violate the MTCR.

The accord's adherents hope to meet later this year in an attempt to bring other countries into the regime, to clarify how the MTCR guidelines should be interpreted and to tighten restrictions on certain missile technology exports.

Mr. Quayle warned: "If any firm having major contracts with the US Government engages in such co-operation in the future, they will face strong US Government actions." He said the best way of policing the missile regime was to make specific complaints. "This approach has begun to produce results in the case of Germany and Italy as a result of our actions over Condor. . . . I can assure you we intend to keep up the pressure."

The US Vice President, asked what action should be taken against Messerschmidt of West Germany and Fiat's Snia-BPD of Italy—both companies that have been accused of involvement in the Iraqi-Egyptian-Argentine Condor 2 missile project—replied that the US had taken strong measures to ensure that the countries from which the companies operate would prevent them from co-operating in the Condor project. The companies have, in any case, repeatedly denied the sale of technologies for the project.

US anger over the possible Arianespace deal coincides with the scandal over $3bn of unauthorized Iraqi export credits issued by the Atlanta, Georgia branch of Banca Nazionale del Lavoro of Italy.

Some of the credits were used to finance the shipment of apparently civilian technology which has helped Iraqi military industry.

The US is actively seeking co-operation from Moscow to prevent further missile proliferation in the developing nations.

Interpretation of the MTCR, originally agreed by the US, Japan, West Germany, France, Britain, Italy and Canada, is a particularly thorny issue.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, bringing the entire European Community into the MTCR would be a concrete step in the right direction, and it is essential in light of the changes that will occur in 1992. I commend the Vice President for placing high priority on this problem.

Nevertheless, the MTCR itself has serious weaknesses. The French-Brazil case clearly shows that there are fundamental differences between the U.S. interpretation of the MTCR provisions and the interpretation of at least one of our allies. Clearly, the proposed French transfer is a violation of the agreement as it has been presented to the Congress. It is equally clear that we must iron out these differences and reach a common interpretation of the MTCR principles, including agreement on strict enforcement of its provisions. The administration would be off to a good start by using the French-Brazil case to rally all adherents to a strict and common interpretation of the agreement.

We must also set an example for our allies. We need to ensure that we ourselves are not in violation of the MTCR, and that we understand the consequences that would ensue if there were a U.S. violation. The administration should ensure that there is adequate coordination and cooperation between the agencies charged with responsibility for carrying out U.S. policy on missile control: The Departments of Commerce, State, and Defense. There is evidence from previous cases of missile technology proliferation, in which valid U.S. export licenses were issued without appropriate interagency consultations, that this has not always been the case. We also need to ensure that each of these agencies has enough qualified and dedicated staff to use the export control process as an effective screen against missile technology proliferation.

Finally, there are additional steps the administration can take to stop the proliferation of missiles, missile equipment and technology. The French-Brazil case will be a test as to whether or not the administration's tools are adequate to the task. I and others in Congress are more than willing to provide him with additional tools with which to combat this problem.

Mr. President, I hope that the French will be responsible and stand by their commitments under the MTCR. I urge my colleagues to support the administration's efforts to resolve this crisis. However, should the President's powers prove inadequate, I expect that my colleagues and I will move expeditiously to provide additional tools for the President.

WRAP-UP ON CATASTROPHIC

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, after hours of deliberation and consideration of numerous amendments, this body adopted a proposal to reform the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 by a vote of 99 to 0.

This proposal preserves the essential parts of the catastrophic illness program, while killing those portions least valued by the elderly. And, it eliminates the surtax.

Earlier this week, our colleagues in the House voted to repeal the entire program, good benefits and all. I share the opinion of my colleagues, as reflected in the vote last night, that full repeal it not the answer.

Last night was a historic occasion, and one that I am sure will bring a sigh of relief to millions of our Nation's elderly. We, through our action, proved that we understood the elderly's criticism of the act and that we had the guts to fix it.

Last night was a victory, not for me, or for the organizations representing this Nation's seniors—it was a victory for our Nation's seniors.

A couple of individuals, however, do deserve special recognition for the role they played in this effort. First, is Judy Park of the National Association of Retired Federal Employees. And, second, is George Henrikus of the Retired Officers Association. While there were many others, these two individuals joined forces to form the Coalition for Affordable Health Care. Through the hard work of Judy and Paul, the Coalition's ranks swelled to nearly 50 seniors' organizations representing the entire spectrum.

I ask unanimous consent that a list of those groups endorsing the proposal adopted by the Senate last night be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. McCAIN. Last night's victory is also testament to one thing, representative democracy works! The people we represent do have a very real say in the laws adopted here in Washington.

I might add that I am hopeful that last night's action, to reform the act, will not result in this body—or Congress as a whole—being reluctant to address important health issues facing the elderly in the future. For example, I think we all agree that some assistance needs to be provided in the near future with that which is most catastrophic to our Nation's elderly, and that is the cost of long-term nursing home or home care.

There is no question that the experience we have just gone through with regard to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act might make some of my colleagues a little reluctant to do anything in the area in the near future, I might suggest to my colleagues that the problem created could have been avoided.

Maybe we should have been doing a little better job of listening to what the people we represent were willing to pay, and what benefits were highest priority for the revenue available.

But, I will admit, that's not always a very easy job. Particularly when it comes to issues that are as complex and difficult to explain as the ins and outs of health care coverage. It takes a lot more time, but its time that must be spent.

Mr. President, I for one, do not see our action last night as the last word with regard to the Government's assistance to our Nation's seniors in the area of health care. I look forward to working with my colleagues both on and off the Finance Committee as we seek to move forward to issues such as long-term care protection.

EXHIBIT 1

SUMMARY: McCAIN CATASTROPHIC PROPOSAL

BENEFITS

Retain core catastrophic benefits:
Long-term hospitalization protection.

"Spousal impoverishment" protection.
Medicaid buy-in and pregnant moms and infants program.
Retain other benefits in Act:
Blood Deductible.
Home Health.
Respite.
Mammography Screening, one year delay in implementation.
"Mitchell" Drugs, one year delay in implementation.
Hospice.
Repeal the skilled-nursing facility benefit would be returned to its form prior to the passage of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 for those stays after November 1. For those stays prior to November 1, they would receive the benefit under the terms of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. The terms of prior law were:
3-day prior hospitalization.
Beneficiary co-payment from day 21 to the end of coverage.
100 day limit on coverage.
Instruct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to study what led to the problem with the skilled nursing benefit costs, and report to Congress by March 1, 1990, his findings as well as any recommendations for future changes of this benefit.
Repeal remaining benefits in Act:
Outpatient prescription drug program, beyond "Mitchell" drugs.
Part B "out-of-pocket".

PREMIUMS

Retain existing flat Part B premium.
Repeal the entire surtax.
Flat premium pays 100 percent of the cost of the retained benefits and provides for a significant cushion in the outyears. If costs do not rise, this proposal allows the Secretary to reduce the premium.

AIRLINE ACQUISITIONS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, on June 23, out of a concern over the future of the U.S. airline industry, I introduced legislation directing the Secretary of Transportation to provide prior review and approval for all airline takeovers and leveraged buyouts. At that time, there was little more than a faint wind blowing from Wall Street in the direction of the airline industry. Suddenly, we are seeing an onslaught of airline LBO's not unlike the winds of Hurricane Hugo.

As such, a response by the Federal Government is clearly in order. I am pleased that my colleagues on the Commerce Committee have agreed, as earlier this week, a modified version of S. 1277 was approved by an overwhelming margin. The time for Senate action is thus at hand.

In recent years, we have watched Wall Street devour the food and retail industries, television networks, and telecommunications companies. Now, the airline industry has become the target of choice for investment bankers. Nothing makes the fact more evident than the announced $7 billion bid this week for the Nation's largest carrier, American Airlines.

Mr. President, our airline industry is a national asset, providing a critical service to millions of Americans. These highly leveraged buyouts threaten the future of the industry and, as such, must be carefully scrutinized. We must ensure that the only beneficiaries of airline takeovers are not just the Wall Street wizards who finance them, but the public as well.

I have learned a great deal about the aviation industry during the time that I have served as chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee. And, as such, my hesitancy in allowing this industry to suffer the fates of leveraged buyouts hinges on two concerns: the cost—both to the carrier and its passengers—of reducing massive amounts of debt, and the possible shift of control of the U.S. airline to foreign interests.

Typically, highly leveraged firms have had to take drastic steps in order to recover from a takeover. For an airline, this could mean selling aircraft or international routes, delaying the acquisition of new aircraft, cutting corners on safety programs, or forcing employee wage reductions. Each of these actions could have significant adverse effects on the airline industry and the traveling public.

This was confirmed by witnesses who testified at our July 14 Aviation Subcommittee hearings on this measure. At that hearing, we had an opportunity to hear from experts in Government, the airline industry, and the financial community. Each agreed that, should we face a serious economic downturn, a highly leveraged airline will face difficult choices in meeting interest payments on its debt load. And I challenge anyone to convince me that the proposals now on the table to acquire United Airlines and American Airlines—which, in both instances, will lead to some $7 billion new debt—will not present a threat to the future of those airlines.

If I may remind my colleagues, it was only last year that there was an enormous outcry from within Congress and the traveling public regarding delays and poor service. At huge costs, the airlines worked to correct these problems. If new management came into an airline wedded only to the bottom line, it is highly doubtful that they would have made a similar effort to correct service problems.

Mr. President, my second concern lies with the degree of foreign participation in these transactions, a matter which I addressed in Aviation Subcommittee hearings earlier this week. I am not unilaterally opposed to the idea of foreign investment in U.S. airlines. We have a statutory requirement that foreign ownership in any U.S. air carrier be limited to a total of 25 percent of its voting stock and that at least two-thirds of the board of directors of that carrier must be U.S. citizens. However, I am concerned that through the high level of equity participation by foreign air carriers in a number of these takeover proposals, we may be allowing the effective control of our airline industry slip away.

For his part, the Secretary of Transportation is to be commended for playing an active role in reviewing airline acquisition proposals. However, DOT has no authority to approve such transactions. The Secretary can only take the most extreme action—to declare that new management is not fit to operate the airline, and withdraw the carrier's operating certificate. This drastic step—shutting down that airline and leaving thousands of travelers stranded throughout the country—is arguably an unlikely course of action. As such, the Secretary recently testified that this legislation would make DOT's review process "cleaner and more efficient."

For that reason, we introduced S. 1277—legislation to establish a framework under which the Secretary of Transportation would be required to approve airline acquisitions. It is our responsibility to ensure that that airline industry is financially fit to operate at the highest level of safety. As such, a formal process must be established within the Federal Government to scrutinize proposed acquisitions, ensuring they will not weaken or impair an airline's ability to meet existing fitness and safety standards.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. Res. 193. A resolution in recognition of the March for Housing; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE):

S. Res. 194. A resolution authorizing the appointment of a special Senate delegation to host a delegation of members of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and for other purposes; considered and agreed to.

S. 1115

At the request of Mr. EXON, the name of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1115, a bill to amend the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 to permit the prepayment and refinancing of Federal Financing Bank loans made to rural electrification and telephone systems, and for other purposes.

SENATE RESOLUTION 193—RECOGNITION OF THE MARCH FOR HOUSING

Mr. MOYNIHAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

S. RES. 193

Whereas hundreds of people walked hundreds of miles to the nation's capital in September and October, 1989 to underscore the lack of affordable housing and the extent of homelessness;

Whereas they endured great hardship to bring their message to Congress;

Whereas we must not ignore the numbers who marched to the Capitol, nor the problems they bear witness to;

Whereas a greater supply of low income housing would help solve problems in other areas such as drug abuse and education;

Whereas the Housing Act of 1949 called for, "a decent home and suitable living environment for every American family," and it has not been repealed; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the needs of the homeless and the ill-housed must receive attention and that the march to the Capitol on October 7, 1989 will not be forgotten.

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to submit a resolution to recognize the efforts and the message of the people who are marching to Capitol Hill today to draw our attention to the issue of housing. It is a crucial issue that must be addressed. Homelessness, the lack of affordable housing, the threat of subsidized housing being withdrawn from the low-income housing stock, the shortage of public housing and the condition it is in, all these require attention. When we consider these issues we must remember the message being brought here so clearly today.

I ask my colleagues for their support.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 194—APPOINTING A SENATE DELEGATION TO HOST A DELEGATION OF MEMBERS OF THE SUPREME SOVIET OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 194

Resolved, That (a) the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon consultation with the majority leader and the minority leader, is authorized to appoint a special delegation of Members of the Senate (hereafter in this resolution referred to as the "delegation") that shall host a delegation of members of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The majority leader and minority leader of the Senate shall serve as co-chairmen of such special delegation.

(b) The Senate delegation shall be composed of 14 Members of the Senate, including the majority leader and the minority leader, with the remaining 12 members appointed as follows:

(1) 6 Members of the Senate from the majority party to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the majority leader.

(2) 6 Members of the Senate from the minority party, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the minority leader.

(c) Any vacancy in the membership of the delegation shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

SEC. 2. (a) The co-chairmen of the delegation may designate Senate employees who shall provide professional staff support and expertise for the delegation. All administrative support services for the delegation shall be provided by the Secretary of the Senate.

(b) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized, from funds made available under subsection (c), to incur such expenses as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out his duties and functions for the delegation. Such expenses shall include such special expenses as the co-chairmen may deem appropriate, including—

(1) expenses incurred on behalf of such delegation;

(2) official representation expenses; and

(3) reimbursements to any officer or agency of the Government.

(c) The expenses of the delegation as authorized in subsection (b), including the expenses of staff members assisting such delegation, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, out of the account of miscellaneous items, upon vouchers approved by the Secretary of the Senate, after consultation with the co-chairmen of the delegation.

(d) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized to advance such sums as may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 3. This resolution shall terminate upon the adjournment sine die of the first session of the One Hundred First Congress.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1990

HELMS AMENDMENT NO. 991

Mr. HELMS proposed an amendment to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153 to the bill (H.R. 2788) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes; as follows:

In the House amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 153 in section (A), strike the phrase "None of the funds" and all that follows to the period and insert the following: "None of the funds authorized to be appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used to promote, disseminate, or produce materials that are obscene or that depict or describe, in a patently offensive way, sexual or excretory activities or organs, including but not limited to obscene depictions of sadomasochism, homo-eroticism, the sexual exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sexual intercourse".

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

FRANK KELLY CALLS FOR "SUMMIT MEETING FOR HUMANITY"

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, for some years I have watched the progress of a proposal by Frank K. Kelly, senior vice president of the Nuclear Age Peace Foundation, for a "Summit Meeting for Humanity." The purpose of such a meeting would be to deal with planetary problems that require global cooperation in such fields as health, food and agriculture, disarmament, human rights, and the environment.

Frank Kelly is a former speech writer for President Harry S. Truman who served in the past as an assistant to the Senate majority leader and as staff director of the Senate Democratic Policy Committee. He helped with the creation of the U.S. Institute for Peace and is the editor of a volume entitled "Waging Peace in the Nuclear Age."

This background has led him to conceive of the "Summit Meeting for Humanity." I ask that a statement by him on this proposal be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point along with an article from the July 10, 1989 Santa Barbara, CA, News-Press.

The material follows:

WAGING PEACE PROPOSAL—A SUMMIT MEETING FOR HUMANITY

(By Frank K. Kelly, Senior Vice President, Nuclear Age Peace Foundation)*

Campaigning for election in 1948, President Harry Truman said: "The fate of mankind depends upon the foreign policy of the United States." His first act as President—when he succeeded Franklin D. Roosevelt—was to give strong support to the formation of the United Nations. In 1948, he ran and won on a global platform, declaring: "The heart and soul of American foreign policy is peace. We are supporting a world organization to keep the peace, and a world economic policy to create prosperity for all nations."

In 1988, who speaks for humanity's future—who reminds us that the fate of humanity depends upon us? Do we hear our presidential candidates speaking of "the fate of humankind" or talking of our planet as humanity's home? Do our leaders clearly tell us that we are really living in a world without national boundaries, that we are linked with people everywhere on Earth, that we can't solve our deepest problems in America without considering all those people and working with those people?

Forty years ago, when I wrote speeches for President Truman, I admired his global vision and his willingness to take responsibility for his part in plunging humanity into the nuclear age. He made a terrible decision, knowing that it would have an enormous impact on the future. He told me in the Oval Office that he knew he had done a hellish thing by dropping atomic bombs upon Japan, but he believed that those monstrous weapons would compel humanity to accept the necessity for peace. He resisted the pressures brought upon him to risk a war with the Soviet Union. He insisted that the Soviet people and the American people could find a way to live together in peace. He said that what was at stake was "life or death, not only for ourselves and our children, but for our civilization."

In a summit meeting in 1988, Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev have taken some steps in the right direction. Yevgeny Yevtushenko, a Soviet poet, has pointed out: "It's time to understand a new nuclear truth. The best policy is above politics. The first agreement signed by the two biggest nuclear powers to reduce nuclear weapons rises above mere ideology. . . ."

It is time for a Summit Meeting for Humanity—with voices raised from every part of the Earth.

Twenty-one years ago, in an editorial in the Saturday Review, I proposed that it should be an obligation of the United Nations to give a full report each year on the State of Humanity. My proposal was endorsed by U Thant, then the Secretary General; by former President Dwight Eisenhower; by twenty-two members of the United States Senate, and by other leaders. But U Thant was not able to carry it out.

I think that the moment has come for a reconsideration of the idea. If our air is being polluted, our climate is being changed, our resources are being wasted on guns and bombs, if our earth is being ravaged, as scientists say it is—should not the voices of humanity be heard?

Through the use of communications satellites, the Secretary General could convene a Summit Meeting for Humanity in Geneva or in the General Assembly Hall in New York. He could open the meeting by reviewing the planetary problems that require global cooperation—and give his personal statement on what might be done. He would speak with all the knowledge available to him from many nations, but he would also speak forthrightly as a person, a human being with a family and friends, standing before the people of the world as a Citizen of Humanity, calling upon all human beings to join in saving the Earth.

Representatives of international organizations could then speak from the fields of health, food and agriculture, disarmament and development, human rights, the global environment, and other areas of concern. The needs of the Earth could be presented comprehensively by men and women with deep resources of information and wisdom from many nations. The sessions of the Summit for Humanity could be broadcast around the world in many languages, and people everywhere could be invited to send their comments and questions to the Secretary General for future meetings. The proceedings could be printed in paperback books and distributed to schools and civic organizations in every country.

The moderator for the Summit Meeting could be a distinguished journalist such as Bill Moyers, a writer and broadcaster who has been probing the problems of humanity for many years. At the end of each meeting, the moderator could hold a series of dialogues with leading participants.

If the leaders of the United Nations are unable to sponsor such a meeting, I urge international organizations such as Parliamentarians Global Action, the Better World Society, the Nuclear Age Peace Foundation, the Center for a Post-Modern World, the Institute of Noetic Sciences, and others to join together in sponsoring it. It might be financed by several foundations.

In my editorial in the Saturday Review, I said: "The faces and voices of Africa, Asia, Europe and America are known now. . . . We Can build one world or set the Earth on fire." Twenty years later, it is clear that people in many places are saying to one another, "This Earth is ours. We live in a web of life that extends from continent to continent. We breathe air that moves across oceans and leaps mountains. We live in one world—and we must act upon that fact."

A Summit Meeting for Humanity offers us an opportunity to confront the dangers and celebrate the wonders of our world, and to see that the needs of humanity can be met by the cooperative efforts of all those who are aware of the fundamental fact: We will thrive together—or go down into a planetary death together.

Let us speak for life. Let us lift our voices for humanity.

[From the Santa Barbara News-Press, July 10, 1989]

HUMANITY SUMMIT MEETING IS URGED

(By Heron Marquez Estrada)

Seventy-five-year-old Frank Kelly has lived through two world wars.

As a correspondent for the Associated Press in World War II he saw his share of people killed or injured.

After the war, as a speech writer for President Harry Truman, Kelly heard Truman discuss the reasons for bombing Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

While Kelly says he admired Truman's willingness to accept responsibility for plunging humanity into the nuclear age, he thinks that the use of nuclear weapons poses the greatest hazard to human life on this planet.

Kelly has spent decades battling the presence and use of such weapons, and has spent his time in recent years "waging peace." He was one of the four founders of the Santa Barbara-based Nuclear Age Peace Foundation in 1982.

He recently returned from a conference in Cosa Rica entitled "Seeking the True Meaning of Peace." Among the participants were the Dalai Lama, the spiritual leader of Tibet, and Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, a past winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

At the end of the conference Kelly addressed the 600 participants from 30 nations who attended. He unveiled an idea he has been formulating for a long time: "A Summit Meeting for Humanity."

"If our air is being polluted, our climate is being changed, our resources being wasted on guns and bombs, if our earth is being ravaged . . . should not the voices of humanity be heard," Kelly told the delegates.

Kelly has been thinking of this kind of summit for decades, but it is only with the advent of advanced telecommunications that he believes it is possible to unite the world in a common cause.

"We never had the technology to link up the whole world before," he said. He believes that such a summit will help develop a "global consciousness."

When he returned to Santa Barbara, he found a letter awaiting him from a British member of the European Parliament. The letter said the lawmaker would present a resolution to parliament suggesting that it co-sponsor the proposed summit.

* In addition to his work as a speech writer for President Truman, Frank Kelly served as an assistant to the Senate Majority Leader and Staff Director of the U.S. Senate Majority Policy Committee, 1949-52; as United States Director of the International Press Institute's Study of World News, 1952-53; as Vice President of the Fund for the Republic and Vice President of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, 1956-1975. A graduate of the University of Missouri at Kansas City, he worked as a reporter and editor for the Kansas City Star and the Associated Press in New York, as an army correspondent in World War II, and as a book critic for Newsday. He has been a Nieman Fellow at Harvard and a Wilton Park Fellow in England. He was a director of the National Peace Academy Campaign which led to the creation of the U.S. Institute of Peace. He has written eight books and contributed articles and stories to many publications, including The New Yorker, Saturday Review, Esquire, Center Magazine, and others. His stories have appeared in anthologies and have been translated into several languages. He is the co-editor of Waging Peace In the Nuclear Age, Ideas for Action (Santa Barbara: Capra Press, 1988).

The Nuclear Age Peace Foundation will also be a sponsor and help to plan the summit, said Kelly.

"I have seen good ideas blocked or distorted many times," said Kelly in looking back upon his life. "I think the time has finally come," for a summit on humanity, he said.

The summit would involve linking, via satellite and telecommunication equipment, representatives from international organizations. They would be in difference countries, speak in different languages, but address common issues such as health, food and agriculture, disarmament and development, human rights, and the global environment.

The proceedings would be broadcast all over the world and would be moderated by a distinguished journalist, Kelly said.

"We live in a web of life that extends from continent to continent," Kelly writes in an outline proposing the summit. "We breathe air that moves across oceans and leaps mountains. We live in one world—we must act upon that fact."

Kelly hopes the summit, if it comes off, would be an annual rallying point for people to hear about the status of humanity and how it is doing in relation to the problems confronting it.

By having performing artists and athletic events interspersed with the socio-political messages, he believes it is possible to interest "the guys in the bars."

"People are hungry for hope," he said. "I think this (summit) would give them more hope. (The summit) offers us an opportunity to confront the dangers and celebrate the wonders of our world, and to see that the needs of humanity can be met by the cooperative efforts of all . . . We will thrive together—or go down together into planetary death together.

"The very terrible nature of our situation should motivate us to act," Kelly said.●

RECOGNITION OF TAIWAN'S ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, on Tuesday, October 10, the Republic of China on Taiwan will be observing its 78th anniversary.

In honor of this special holiday, Idaho's Governor recently proclaimed that this date will be celebrated in Idaho as Republic of China Day, and urged all citizens to extend their congratulations to this island nation. I am very proud of the friendly relations that exist between my State and Taiwan, and I ask that this proclamation be inserted in the RECORD after my remarks.

Mr. President, last November I had the opportunity to accompany Ruby Chow & Associates, a trade group and delegation from Seattle, WA, with people from the States of Oklahoma, Washington, and my own State of Idaho, to the Republic of China on Taiwan.

My trip revealed a dynamic society with people of strongly pro-American sentiments who have built a strong and growing economy. Much as I had expected, that island country is exceedingly prosperous, as evidenced by her $6,000 per capita income, her $74 billion foreign reserve, and her numerous downtown skyscrapers.

Much to the nation's credit, Taiwan has undergone the industrial revolution in a single generation without major social upheaval. Despite military pressure from the People's Republic of China and attempted diplomatic isolation in recent years, this island nation of about 19 million people has been transformed from an agrarian society to an industrialized nation that now enjoys trade with the rest of the world.

Many government and business leaders have expressed reasonable satisfaction with the current working relationship between Taipei and Washington. I know citizens in my State have noticed a great difference in the openness of Taiwan's markets for our produce and other goods. It is becomming a bigger and better market all the time for Idaho commodity producers.

Mr. President, in the 1990's, the Pacific Rim Countries, including Taiwan, will play an ever-increasing role in this global economy and will affect the well-being of every American. Let us continue to nourish our traditional friendship with the Republic of China. Because of their courage and dedication to peace, the citizens of Taiwan today are enjoying a prosperous life in a free-market society. I urge all Americans to join with them in celebrating this special anniversary.

The proclamation follows:

PROCLAMATION

Whereas the Republic of China's on Taiwan will be observing its seventy-eighth anniversary on October 10, 1989—the Double Ten Holiday; and

Whereas the Republic of China's has distinguished itself in the free world with its dynamic progress in the fields of economy, industry, and society; and

Whereas the Republic of China's 20 million citizens are enjoying a prosperous, free life in a free society; and

Whereas the United States of America and the Republic of China have been friends and allies for many decades; and

Whereas Idaho and the Republic of China exchange many items of trade—especially in agriculture—and maintain friendly relations in all areas;

Whereas it is fitting that we acknowledge this special anniversary being celebrated by our friends in the Republic of China;

Now, therefore, I Cecil D. Andrus, Governor of the State of Idaho, do hereby proclaim Monday, October 10, 1989 to be "Republic of China Day" in Idaho, and I urge all our citizens to join us in extending congratulations and best wishes to the Republic of China during this celebration of its peoples' courage and strength of conviction to achieve peace.●

NATIONAL DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, in recognition of October as "National Domestic Violence Awareness Month," I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Michigan organizations that are working together to help women and children escape the tragedy of domestic violence.

Domestic violence affects 4 to 5 million women each year in the United States. In addition, 50 percent of these instances of abuse involve the physical abuse of children. Battering is the single major cause of injury to women, exceeding rapes, muggings, and even automobile accidents. Nearly a third of female homicide victims are killed by their husbands or boyfriends. These deliberate acts of physical and sexual violence are inexcusable. Domestic violence is not a private matter between family members in their homes. It is serious criminal behavior that we as a society must not tolerate.

I am very proud of the ongoing efforts in Michigan to provide direct services to people in situations of domestic violence. We have over 40 domestic violence shelters for women and children who are being abused. For these victims, shelters are necessary to help them rebuild their lives by providing temporary housing, information, crisis intervention, and proper referrals.

In addition to the shelters, the Michigan Coalition Against Domestic Violence [MCADV] is a statewide organization that advocates on behalf of battered women and children. It works to promote awareness of domestic violence by sharing information, skills, and resources. Furthermore, the coalition encourages the development of shelter programs and advocates for better laws and criminal justice procedures.

Furthermore, the national toll-free domestic violence hotline has been installed in Michigan. This hotline is a valuable resource to all U.S. citizens, particularly to those millions of family members who live in abusive homes. The hotline is staffed 24 hours a day, 7 days a week by volunteers trained to respond to confidential requests, discuss options and provide shelter referrals.

These important services would not exist in Michigan without the participation of many concerned advocates. These advocates have spent a great deal of time generously providing care to victims of domestic violence. They have successfully coordinated efforts to inform and educate people about the difficulties faced by women and children in abusive situations and should be applauded for their attempts to break the chain of violence that is passed on from generation to generation.

The issue of domestic violence is more significant than ever before and is receiving greater attention by all levels of government. I have joined my colleagues in the House and Senate as an original cosponsor of the Economic Equity Act [EEA] of 1989. Since it was first introduced in 1981, this bipartisan legislation has become a cornerstone in the fight for women's rights in the U.S Congress.

Many of the bills in this package aid women affected by domestic violence. One of these bills includes housing assistance for homeless and displaced families in abusive situations. Another bill authorizes the State Justice Institute to award grants to investigate State judicial decisions relating to child custody cases involving instances of domestic violence.

We all realize that the work we do to end domestic violence is very important. Domestic violence occurs in one out of three homes in America, impacting people of every race, religion, age, educational level and economic group. We must strive to provide the necessary services to people in abusive families as well as continue to educate people about domestic violence. By working together we can help make a difference in the lives of families unjustly hit by domestic violence.●

REGARDING THE "HOUSING NOW" RALLY AND THE PLIGHT OF THE HOMELESS

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, as the Housing Now marchers approach us today, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to an article by Warren Brookes in Thursday's Washington Times entitled "Homeless Facts vs. Fantasy." This article raises a number of good points about our efforts to address the needs of homeless persons and provides a different and noteworthy perspective on this issue.

Since 1988, there have been four major studies of the homeless situation. These studies indicate that estimates of the homeless are highly exaggerated and Federal spending on housing programs has greatly increased. In fact, total Housing and Urban Development outlays have risen from $12.7 billion in 1980 to $20.4 billion in 1989, a rise of 60 percent. Excluding private expenditures, we devote $8,000 a year to each homeless person. So, as Mr. Brookes points out "homelessness has little to do with federal budget cuts." Instead, this problem is more related to other factors such as drug and alcohol addiction, mental illness, personal problems or serious criminal behavior.

As is suggested by this article, I would urge my colleagues to heed the advice of the Urban Institute's Dr. Martha Burt to focus our future efforts on caring for people who have problems other than homelessness. While I am concerned about their plight, these facts separate the truth from the rhetoric and should not be ignored.

The article follows:

HOMELESS FACTS VS. FANTASY

(By Warren Brookes)

This Saturday, something called Housing Now will march on Capitol Hill to protest the plight of the homeless and demand massive new spending on public housing.

The two principal organizers of this march are Mitch Snyder, a former adman once convicted of fraud, who deserted his family for life as a professional homeless advocate in Washington, D.C. and Donna Brazile, the 1988 Dukakis campign worker who was fired for publicly voicing an ugly rumor about George Bush.

Unfortunately, ugly rumors and downright lies will outnumber the facts in both the rhetoric from Housing Now marchers and the reports in the media.

This column will help you sort them out.

First, of course, you will hear Mitch Snyder and the TV news repeat their favorite charge that "the number of homeless right now is 3 million. Three million is a conservative estimate."

Baloney. There have been four major studies of this issue: In 1988, the National Academy of Sciences discovered 650,000 homeless in the nation; the Urban Institute found 570,000. In 1987, Harvard's Richard Freeman counted 350,000; in 1988, the General Accounting Office reviewed 22 city studies and found 300,000 to 600,000 as the national parameters. All are about one-fifth the hyped estimates.

Last December, ABC concluded a "Good Morning America" report on homelessness among children with the statement, "At a conservative estimate, there may be as many as half a million [500,000] homeless children in this country."

But the Urban Institute's 1988 study found that only 15 percent of the homeless, or about 86,000, were children. A June 1989 analysis by the GAO for Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts concluded, "On a given night, about 68,000 children and youths of age 16 or younger may be members of families that are literally homeless." That's 68,000 more than should be, but it's a whole lot less than 500,000.

Finally, you will hear a lot about President Ronald Reagan's budget cuts in federal housing. Mitch Snyder told journalist Tom Bethell last year, "Affordable housing is disappearing, because $25 billion a year has been cut out of the housing budget in the last seven years. Housing and Urban Development was spending $32 billion a year on housing programs, and they are down to less than $8 billion . . . in spite of all the voodoo nonsense the administration spouts."

But that, itself, is "voodoo nonsense."

If you will look at the official Historical Tables of the U.S. Budget on pages 70 and 72, you will find direct "Housing Assistance" (Item 604) has risen from $5.6 billion in 1980 to $15.3 billion in 1989, up 172 percent.

And if you look at pages 86 and 87, you will find that total HUD outlays have risen from $12.7 billion in 1980 to $20.4 billion in 1989, a rise of 60 percent, nearly double the inflation rate.

What Mr. Snyder is referring to is that "Budget Authority" to build future housing units was in fact cut by more than 70 percent, but that was because the nation had run up a massive $250 billion in such commitments during the late 1970s.

And most of that new housing actually came on line in the 1980s. From 1982 to 1988, more than 132,000 new units of federally subsidized housing were completed, an average of nearly 19,000 a year. By comparison, from 1977 to 1981 it averaged 15,000 a year.

So, homelessness has little to do with federal budget cuts. It has most to do with the deadly combination of soaring drug and alcohol addiction and the deinstitutionalization of nearly 300,000 mental patients. (See table.)

WHO ARE THE HOMELESS?

[Urban Institute—March 1987]

Using shelters in large cities	195,000
All homeless in large cities	330,000
Smaller city homeless (est.)	240,000
Total U.S. homeless	570,000
Children (15 percent)	86,000
Families	10 percent

	Number	Percent
Personal problems (one or more)	405,000	71
Mental hospitalization	104,000	20
Chemical dependency	200,000	35
Jail (5 or more days)	319,000	56
State/Federal prison	148,000	26
Two or more of these problems	239,000	42

Source: Urban Institute.

The Urban Institute study found that 71 percent of all homeless persons have one or more personal problems, including mental illness, chemical dependency, jail time and serious criminal behavior, and 42 percent have two or more of these problems.

Or as UI's Dr. Martha Burt told a homelessness conference held by The Heritage Foundation in December 1988, "perhaps as high as 50 percent or 60 percent [of the homeless] may have so many disabilities that they will never be able to take care of themselves." For them, the problem is not housing but care.

As she concluded, "There is not such a large number of homeless," and she advocated "letting the private sector take care of housing the homeless," concentrating government funds on caring for those for whom housing is not the main problem.

Unfortunately, Congress has not listened to sensible people like Martha Burt, but only to the noisy radicals like Mitch Snyder. In the process they have created in the McKinney Act a monstrous nightmare involving 17 separate federal programs managed by seven different federal agencies, with enough paperwork and bureaucracy alone to feed every homeless person by hand.

Today, we are spending $8,000 a year in tax money per homeless person, not counting private monies. Before spending more, we need to do a better job of separating facts from lies and finding out what really works.●

NATIONAL DISABILITY AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the millions of Americans with disabling impairments and the contributions they have made to our Nation. Disabled Americans have exhibited tremendous determination to break down the physical and social barriers that have impaired their ability to be full citizens of this country. Indeed, their determination is revealed in the fact that 82 percent of disabled people would give up Government benefits in favor of a full-time job.

As reflected in the overwhelming passage of the Americans With Disabilities Act by the Senate last month, our Nation is finally recognizing the contributions that Americans with physical and mental impairments can and must make to keep our country strong. Disabled people, Mr. President, are capable individuals, who if allowed the opportunities that the nondisabled have, can and will be productive citizens of this great Nation. The enactment of the Americans With Disabilities Act [ADA] into law would be the beginning of a clear, comprehensive national mandate to end discrimination against individuals in employment and the provision of public services and transportation.

Of the 43 million disabled Americans, about 4 million receive Social Security disability benefits. Disabled people stand to benefit not only from the ADA but also from the Social Security Work Incentives Act, a bill I introduced this year. This act extends Medicare coverage to disabled people seeking to rejoin the work force. It seeks to help those 4 million disabled workers who say they cannot afford to take a job for fear of losing health insurance coverage.

We can no longer afford to let the talent of the disabled slip through the cracks of ignorance. It is time that the disabled have the opportunity to do what they can and want to do. We can undoubtedly learn much from their determination.

The integration of disabled individuals into the work force provides both economic and societal advantages. Integrating disabled workers into the work force is the most effective way to bring the disabled where they belong, into mainstream America. Increased interaction with the nondisabled helps to break down preconceived notions of dependency and incompetency of the disabled.●

DRUG AND ALCOHOL TESTING: TIME FOR HOUSE ACTION

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, last week on the Transportation appropriations bill, the Senate approved—for the third time in 2 years—random drug and alcohol testing for airline and railroad crews, and commercial truck and bus drivers.

Last year, the House of Representatives refused to negotiate with us on those same drug- and alcohol-testing provisions. This week, it has happened again. The House has refused to negotiate with us on testing provisions contained in the Transportation appropriations bill.

Explaining why the House wouldn't deal with testing on the appropriations bill, Senator BYRD said the House authorizing committees "should have a right to consider these provisions in their committees, rather than allowing them to be conferenced in an appropriations bill."

Thursday night, the Senate passed random drug- and alcohol-testing legislation for the fourth time. Let's hope the fourth time is the charm.

Senator BYRD gave no indication that the House will, in fact, work with us to enact a law requiring drug and alcohol testing of safety-sensitive aviation, motor carrier, and railroad workers. It is not good enough that the House is ready to discuss testing for railworkers only.

In the wake of the USAir fiasco, it is critical that the House work with us now on drug and alcohol testing for airline pilots.

In view of the destruction and grief caused annually by drunk and drugged drivers of 80,000-pound trucks and buses carrying dozens of passengers, it is critical that the House work with us now on drug and alcohol testing for commercial truck and bus drivers.

The House needs to improve its track record in this area, Mr. President. The House needs to prove that it does care about the safety of transportation workers and the traveling public. The Senate—and the American public—will be watching.●

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am about to propound a unanimous consent request. I would make the request, but before the Chair rules on it, I will yield to the distinguished Senator from Maryland for a brief statement.

SEMBLER AND NEWMAN NOMINATIONS

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise to indicate my opposition to the nominations of Melvin Sembler to be Ambassador to Australia and Della Newman to be Ambassador to New Zealand. A careful review of the record—the nominees' detailed written submissions to the Foreign Relations Committee, the certifications of demonstrated competence submitted on their behalf pursuant to section 304(a)(4) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, and the hearing records—fails to disclose any involvements, experience, or training which would qualify them for the important diplomatic posts to which they have been nominated.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the standard biographical form and the certificate of demonstrated competence for each nominee submitted with their nomination papers be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MELVIN F. SEMBLER

Postion for which considered: Ambassador to Australia.

Present Position: Chairman, Mel Sembler Associates.

Office Address: 5858 Central Avenue, St. Petersburg, FL.

Born: May 10, 1930, St. Joseph, MO.

Legal Residence: Florida.

Publications: Numerous articles.

MARCH 1989.

REPORT FOR THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS UNITED STATES SENATE

Subject: Ambassadorial Nomination: Certification of Demonstrated Competence (Foreign Service Act, Section 304(a)(4)).

Post: U.S. Ambassador to Australia.

Candidate: Melvin F. Sembler.

Mr. Sembler, 59, since 1963 has been Chairman of Mel Sembler Associates, a real estate development firm in Dyersburg, Tennessee and St. Petersburg, Florida. Prior to that Mr. Sembler was Manager of Schlesinger's, a real estate development firm from 1956 to 1963.

In addition to the Real Estate business, Mr. Sembler has been very involved in civic activities on a local and national level. Mr. Sembler has been a member of the White House Conference for a Drug-Free America since 1988. He also is a Consultant to the Bush Drug Coalition as well as the Florida Drug Policy Task Force and was Co-Chairman, The American Bicentennial Inaugural. Mr. Sembler is Chairman of Straight, Inc. and a member of International Council of Shopping Centers, National Mall Monitor, and the Advisory Committee, Florida Business Magazine. Mr. Sembler is also a member of the Arthritis Research Foundation.

Mr. Sembler received a B.A. in 1952 from the Northwestern University. He is the author of many articles. Mr. Sembler's extensive business background combined with his involvement in a drug free America will serve him well as an excellent candidate for U.S. Ambassador to Australia.

DELLA M. NEWMAN

Position for which considered: Ambassador to New Zealand/Western Samoa.

Present Position: President and Owner, Village Real Estate.

Office Address: 1025 Financial Center, Seattle, WA.

Born: June 6, 1932, Seattle, WA.

MARCH, 1989.

REPORT FOR THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS, UNITED STATES SENATE

Subject: Ambassadorial Nomination Certification of Demonstrated Competence (Foreign Service Act, Section 304 (a)(4)).

Post: New Zealand/Western Samoa.

Candidate: Della M. Newman.

Mrs. Newman, 57, is presently President and owner of Village Real Estate, Inc., as well as sole proprietor of Braemer Associates and Treasurer of Pacific Factors Ltd., Inc. Mrs. Newman is also a member of the Puget Sound Multiple Listing Association of Washington and a member of Washington Women International. She also is on the Washington State Council on Economic Education and is Chairman of the Board of the Association of Washington Business. In addition she is Director of the Executive Committee for the Foundation for Private Enterprise and a member of the Washington Advisory Committee for the U.S. Civil Rights Commission. Mrs. Newman was a delegate to the 1988 Republican National Committee and was a member of the National Council for Women's Educational Programs in 1986.

Mrs. Newman's extensive background in the real estate business combined with her many civic commitments gives her the managerial qualities to make her an excellent candidate for U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, as is clear from a review of the above material, there is missing from the nominees' records those dimensions to their careers which could constitute the basis for bringing someone in from outside the career service to be an ambassador. Members of the career service spend a lifetime preparing themselves for such diplomatic postings, and it is not too much to expect that noncareer nominees would bring special talents and experience to the assignment. Unfortunately, what is clear in these instances is that heavy political involvement is the basis for the nominations. In Mr. Sembler's case, a member of Team 100, those giving over $100,000 to the Republican Party, very large campaign contributions have brought their reward. In fact in a New York Times article in which the financial chairman of President's Bush's campaign complained that more campaign fundraisers had not been rewarded with political appointments, Mr. Sembler was cited as one of a number of large campaign contributors who had been named as ambassadors.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the New York Times article of February 20, 1989, referred to above be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 20, 1989]

EX-FINANCE CHAIRMAN COMPLAINS FEW JOBS GO TO BUSH FUNDRAISERS

(By Richard L. Berke)

WASHINGTON.—Robert A. Mosbacher, Sr., the Commerce Secretary who was finance chairman of President Bush's campaign, says he is distressed that more campaign fund-raisers have not been rewarded with political appointments.

He blamed officials in the Administration, but not Mr. Bush himself, for favoring political operatives over fund-raisers for posts at all levels of Government.

"There's this perception in Washington and politics, and some degree in Government," he said in an interview this weekend, "that fund-raisers and fund-givers are nice, interesting people to be sort of patted on the head when you need them and ignored the rest of the time because they don't really understand the process."

CRITICISM OF ADMINISTRATION

"We're not trying to foist off any second-grade dummies," he said. "In truth, they are the most successful people in their communities."

Some critics counter that the fund-raisers are doing well in getting appointments. In fact, some of them derided the Administration for being partial to fund-raisers.

Mr. Mosbacher said in the interview that he planned to bring the issue to the attention of White House personnel officials and that he hoped to speak directly to Mr. Bush about it.

The Commerce Secretary, who ran the Bush fund-raising effort in the primaries and the Republican Party's drive to raise millions of dollars from wealthy donors, said there were "several hundred" fund-raisers who deserved appointments to ambassadorships, sub-Cabinet posts or lower-level jobs on commissions who were being neglected. The campaign had a national finance board of some 350 people in the primaries, and for the general election, 249 individuals and corporations gave at least $100,000 apiece to the Republican Party.

"Quite a high percentage of those who have been helpful haven't gotten anything—at least 50 percent," Mr. Mosbacher said.

TOP JOBS FOR MANY

More than a dozen people who gave at least $100,000 to the Republican Party last year, or helped solicit millions of dollars more for Mr. Bush, are being tapped for jobs as ambassadors or as policy makers at sub-Cabinet levels.

In addition, what officials describe as a " 'must be placed' list" is circulating in the Administration, with the names of 50 major donors who want jobs for themselves or their relatives. Many are expected to be named as part-time posts on Presidential boards and commissions.

Presidents of both parties have long rewarded their political loyalists with plum appointments. Because of changes in the Federal campaign finance law, which were made after the Watergate scandal, people no longer can give directly to a Presidential candidate in the general election. But they can give to a political party.

"There is definitely a perception problem when ambassadors and other high people are large contributors," said David M. Dorsen, a lawyer here who was assistant chief counsel in charge of campaign finance for the Senate Watergate committee.

"TERRIBLE WAY TO DO BUSINESS"

Fred Wertheimer, president of Common Cause, a public affairs lobby group, said the appointment of fund-raisers was "a terrible way to do business," and he called on the Senate committees considering those appointments to "conduct rigorous inquiries about whether money played any role in the appointments."

But determining how much a donation played into an appointment would be a complicated, if not impossible undertaking.

"What really matters to George Bush is not the number of zeroes after a figure in a ledger book, but the loyalty and commitment shown by a person, be it as a fundraiser or a doorbell ringer," said Charles G. Untermeyer, the White House personnel director.

Bruce S. Gelb conceded, though, that had he not helped raise $3 million for Mr. Bush's campaign last year, he might not have been nominated to head the United States Information Agency. "I may have been selected to be dog catcher," he said.

Beyond his fund-raising prowess, Mr. Gelb, who is leaving his job as vice chairman of Bristol-Myers Company in New York, contended that other factors helped him win the prestigious post: his loyalty to Mr. Bush for decades and his business acumen.

LOYALTY TO BUSH

"If you look at 10 really outstanding people and they all have great track records and you find one that has been a longtime fund-raiser, that person clearly has a real advantage," he said. "But if the person cannot represent George Bush in the way he wants to be represented, the person could give all the money in the world and it would not happen."

In the campaign, only a small minority of donors were blatant enough to say they expected an Administration post, Bush aides said. "Some people at the very beginning said, "I'm involved in this because I want this,' " said a Republican official who asked not to be named. "The response back was, 'It's great to have you on board but there is no quid pro quo.' "

Many of the most diligent fund-raisers were friends who have known Mr. Bush for decades. Mr. Mosbacher, for instance, has known the President for 30 years. He, in turn, is doing his part to place his fund-raisers.

Mr. Mosbacher is expected to select Michael P. Galvin, a Chicago lawyer and a top Bush fund-raiser, to the highly sought post of Assistant Secretary for Exports. And officials said Mr. Mosbacher plans to pick Rockwell A. Schnabel, a major donor who is now Ambassador to Finland, to another sought after job: Under Secretary of Commerce for Trade and Tourism, a post that involves much travel and few difficult policy demands.

Another major fund-raiser, Frederick M. Bush, who is no relation to the President, worked for Mr. Bush for 10 years in many fund-raising capacities, most recently as deputy finance chairman. He has been named Ambassador to Luxembourg.

SOME OF THE APPOINTMENTS

Other $100,000 contributors and Bush fund-raisers who have been named to important posts include Walter J.P. Curley Jr., a former Ambassador to Ireland, as Ambassador to France; Joseph Zappala, a land developer from Tampa, Fla., as Ambassador to Spain; Melvin F. Sembler, another Florida developer who held that state's first fund-raising event for Mr. Bush, as Ambassador to Australia, and Henry E. Catto Jr., a longtime Republican contributor who has previously served in Government, as Ambassador to Britain.

Several other appointments of top contributors are in the works, including Joseph B. Gildenhorn, a Washington real estate executive who may be tapped for Ambassador to Switzerland, and Eric Javits, a New York lawyer and nephew of the late Senator Jacob Javits, who is a leading contender for Ambassador to Venezuela.

Some big donors were not interested in appointments, particularly those in business who could not disentangle themselves from their companies or were not willing to have their finances scrutinized.

Even so, as Mr. Mosbacher emphasized, there are more donors interested in jobs than there are jobs available.

In one case, Republican officials are working behind the scenes to try to find a post for Joy A. Silverman of Manhattan, a diligent fund-raiser who was said to be disappointed not to be named Ambassador to Luxembourg. "By all standards she deserves something," Mr. Mosbacher said. "She raised a lot of money, worked hard."

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, furthermore, it is also apparent that Mr. Sembler has approached the nomination with a disturbing lack of seriousness. Question 15 in part A of the standard Senate Foreign Relations Committee questionnaire submitted to all ambassadorial nominees asks:

Are there any factors, other than the information provided above, which particularly qualify you for the position to which you have been nominated?

Mr. Sembler's official response reads:

I have been known as a coalition builder, able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthy civic, charitable, and political causes.

Remarkably enough, the response given to the same question by his close friend and fellow Florida real estate developer, Mr. Joseph Zappala, nominated by the President to be United States Ambassador to Spain, was as follows:

I am known as a coalition builder. I am able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthwhile civic, charitable, and political causes.

The strikingly similar answers occurred, according to an article in the Washington Post, as the result of Mr. Zappala's public relations consultant's filling out the questionnaire for him by copying the words of Mr. Sembler's public relations consultant's who filled out Mr. Sembler's form. As a Washington Post editorial later commented:

Modular testimony. Pre-fab (by someone else) self-description. It doesn't inspire a whole lot of confidence. Can the would-be ambassadors be trusted to enter into dialog with their host governments if they, apparently, cannot be trusted to write a few lines on their own qualifications?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Washington Post article of June 24, 1989, describing the preparation of Mr. Sembler and Mr. Zappala's forms, and the Washington Post editorial cited above be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was orderd to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, June 24, 1989]

TWO WOULD-BE ENVOYS ARE FREQUENT PARTNERS

NOMINMEES EVEN SHARED PHRASES

(By Bill McAllister and Paula Yost)

Joseph Zappala and Melvin F. Sembler of St. Petersburg, Fla., have a lot in common.

They are developers, frequently partners on the same projects, have offices two blocks apart, work in the same charities and political campaigns, gave about $126,000 each to many of the same Republican political candidates in recent years—and were nominated for ambassadorships by President Bush.

So when their names came up for Senate confirmation this week, aides said it was not surprising that both men used the same words to describe themselves in disclosure forms.

"I have been known as a coalition builder, able to organize by colleagues and peers to action in support of worthy civil, charitable and political causes," said Sembler, 59 nominated to be ambassador to Australia.

"I am known as a coalition builder. I am able to organize by colleagues and peers to action in support of worthwhile civic, charitable and political causes," said Zappala, 56, nominated to be ambassador to Spain.

Those coincidences, and a fear that they would be "ambassadors without qualifications," were enough to prompt Sen. Paul S. Sarbanes (D-Md.) into action and delay Senate Foreign Relations Committee consideration of the nominations until next month.

The number of ambassadorships that go to political appointees, especially to campaign contributors, long has been a source of major controversy in Washington. Sen. Claiborne Pell (D-R.I.), the committee chairman, said this week that the process has made the United States "a joke . . . in many nations around the world."

Aides to the two developers said in separate interviews that they, not their bosses, were responsible for the strikingly similar prose in the five-page questionnaire that every ambassadorial nominee must file with the committee.

"Those are my words," said Tampa public relations consultant Pat Lewis. She said she completed Sembler's form using the same description of Sembler she often employed during the past five years while serving as his speech writer and publicist. Lewis said, however, she was not certain how her words got onto Zappala's form.

Bruce Bannard, a Zappala associate, said he knew. Bannard said he filled out Zappala's form and had a copy of Sembler's resume, borrowed from Lewis, with him at the time. "Whether consciously or unconsciously," Bannard said, he lifted the wording.

"Coalition builders, which they both are. The langauge depicts them to a 'T'," he said.

Both aides said that they gave the forms to their bosses, who last served together as financial cochairmen of the Bush inauguration committee. They reviewed the forms separately, swore they were accurate and returned them to the State Department, the aides said.

An official in the State Department's congressional affairs office, which assembles the forms for submission to the committee, said they were reviewed there. But no one noticed the similarity in responses to question No. 15: "Are there other factors, other than the information provided above, which particularly qualify you for the position to which you have been nominated?"

(Many of the Bush ambassadorial nominees didn't bother to answer that question. Former Nevada senator Chic Hecht (R) did, saying he is qualified to be envoy to the Bahamas because the "lifestyle of the Commonwealth of the Bahamas is similar to the lifestyle of Las Vegas, Nev.")

The responses of the two Florida developers to the 15 other questions on the committee form appear dissimilar. Both men acknowledged that they and members of their immediate families gave a lot of money to politicians, mostly to Republicans.

Between 1985 and 1988, each gave $141,000 to the same political candidates or campaign committees, according to data filed with the committee. Most of the recipients were Republicans and many of the amounts were identical.

Asked to list all his languages, Sembler replied: "English (fluent)," Zappala, whom committee sources say wanted to be ambassador to Italy, replied: "English—1st language" and "Italian—spoken and understood well."

In a one-page summary of their qualifications, "a certification of demonstrated competence," the State Department listed many of their business and political activities.

"Mr. Sembler's extensive business background, combined with his involvement in a drug-free America, will serve him well to be an excellent candidate for U.S. ambassador to Australia," his certificate read.

The one for Zappala had similar wording. "Mr. Zappala's impressive business background in real estate, combined with his civic activities, qualify him as an excellent candidate for U.S. ambassador to Spain," it said.

Pell complained that the certificates of competence have "become complete fiction."

A spokesman for Sarbanes, who made a point of the language in the Sembler and Zappala forms during a hearing Tuesday, said he is not certain whether the senator or one of his aides had spotted the similarities.

Sarbanes, who has a reputation as a studious, almost bookish legislator, had directed a staffer to make a line-by-line review of the forms and then personally reviewed them before the congressional hearing.

His complaints delayed committee action on the nominations along with the nomination of Della Newman, a Seattle real estate broker nominated to be ambassador to New Zealand, until July 10, when the Senate returns from its Fourth of July recess.

A State Department official, who asked not to be identified, said she is not as concerned about the similar language in the Zappala and Sembler forms. "Just a fluke," said the official, a political appointee.

THE AMBASSADORS

We have been thinking of establishing yet another great public service honor: the Mrs. Farkas Award for the most exotic, not to say improbable, campaign-contributor appointee to the American diplomatic corps. Ruth Farkas, for those of you who may not remember, was the very rich woman who became famous when Richard Nixon's lawyer reported that she had complained about price-gouging in the dispensation of Nixon administration ambassadorships (". . . isn't $250,000 an awful lot of money for Costa Rica?"). Now, before you get us wrong, it is not our view that all ambassadorships need to go to Foreign Service officers or that campaign contributions should actually be disqualifying. There have been plenty of first-rate non-foreign service ambassadors over the years.

But in truth there have also been a lot more turkeys—incompentents, bad jokes, envoys who would more aptly be called the American embarrassador than the American ambassador. Nor is it as if these were always harmless appointments; real damage can be done and has been by some of the unsuited types and downright nitwits that this country has proudly sent overseas at the behest of Democratic as well as Republican administrations.

All this is background to the jousting now going on in the Senate, where Democrat Paul Sarbanes of Maryland has stalled Senate Foreign Relations Committee action on three administration appointees, putting off a final determination until after the July 4 recess. The embassies at issue are Spain, Australia and New Zealand. The nominees are a land developer, a businessman and a real estate broker. For all we know they may be well qualified, though Mr. Sarbanes thinks they are not and has pointed, among other things, to a rather discouraging aspect of their self-presentations before the committee. At the place on the resume form where would-be ambassadors are asked what special qualifications they have that were not previously mentioned by them, one wrote: "I have been known as a coalition builder, able to organize my colleagues and peers to action in support of worthy civic, charitable and political causes." Another wrote—guess what?—"I am known as a coalition builder. I am able to organize my colleagues and peers to acton in support of worthwhile civic, charitable and political causes."

Modular testimony. Pre-fab (by someone else) self-description. It doesn't inspire a whole lot of confidence. Can the would-be ambassadors be trusted to enter into dialogue with their host governments if they, apparently, cannot be trusted to write a few lines on their own qualifications? Guidance only gets you so far. We await with interest the next phase of the committee's hearing.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I think it is interesting that the St. Petersburg Times, Mr. Sembler's hometown newspaper, has been critical of the nominations of Mr. Sembler and Mr. Zappala, and I ask unanimous consent that the July 13, 1989, editorial from that paper be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Petersburg Times, July 13, 1989]

THE INTERNATIONAL LANGUAGE

According to U.S. Rep. C.W. Bill Young, St. Petersburg developers Mel Sembler and Joseph Zappala have all sorts of qualifications for their new jobs as U.S. ambassadors to Australia and Spain, respectively.

"Australia is so much like the United States, and Mel Sembler certainly knows his way around the United States," Young said. "He is certainly able to communicate, which is one of the essential requirements of diplomacy." Young had similar praise for the diplomatic skills of Zappala, who he said "has handled a lot of touchy situations in his business life."

Sembler and Zappala may turn out to be excellent ambassadors, and their appointments by President Bush undoubtedly bring prominence to St. Petersburg. However, their selection had nothing whatsoever to do with their ability to find their way around, or to communicate, or to handle touchy situations.

Actually, that's not entirely true. Sembler and Zappala know their way around the power centers of the national Republican Party, and they know how to communicate in the international language: money. They were members of "Team 100," a group of donors who contributed at least $100,000 each to the Republican Party during last fall's campaign. They also served as co-chairmen of the national committee that raised $20-million to help pay for the Bush inaugural. The services rendered by Sembler and Zappala add up to serious qualifications for political appointment.

The practice of making ambassadorial appointments based on politics is neither new nor necessarily bad. Some political appointees with no previous diplomatic experience turn out to be excellent ambassadors. For example, former U.S. Sen. Mike Mansfield turned out to be an inspired choice as ambassador to Japan.

On the other hand, some career Foreign Service officers turn out to be inappropriate choices for particular assignments. John Negroponte, most recently U.S. ambassador to Honduras, has become a controversial choice as our new ambassador to Mexico because of his previous involvement with the Contra guerrillas fighting the government of Nicaragua. His predecessor in Mexico City, John Gavin, an old Hollywood friend of President Reagan's, won generally high marks for his diplomatic performance.

However, an overabundance of politically based ambassadorial appointments can cause problems. First, an influx of political appointees can harm the morale of career Foreign Service officers better qualified for diplomatic duty. The percentage of political appointments rose from about 25 percent to 40 percent during the Reagan years, with a concomitant decline in ambassadorships awarded on merit. That percentage may go even higher with President Bush's new appointments.

Of course the real risk is that some political appointees can harm American interests because they lack the backgrounds and abilities needed to articulate and implement U.S. policy. Our new ambassador to Italy, another political ally of the new president, does not speak fluent Italian. Zappala, whose Spanish is similarly rudimentary, does not claim to be particularly familiar with the recent history of Spain's ambivalent political and military relationship with the United States and the rest of Western Europe.

In the past, some new ambassadors' lack of preparation for the jobs has been offensive to host countries and has prevented our government from taking advantage of important diplomatic opportunities. Whether political appointees or career diplomats, our ambassadors should possess the same qualifications that we have come to expect of foreign diplomats serving in this country. Otherwise, we run the risk of creating touchy situations that even successful St. Petersburg developers aren't capable of getting us out of.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I hope we have not yet reached the point in this country where we are prepared simply to accept very large political contributions as a basis upon which to make nominations for ambassadors.

It is quite true we have had people who have given large contributions in the past who have been approved; indeed some this year and some that I support. But there is a vast difference between someone whose record shows significant dimensions over and above their political involvement and someone whose résumé, or more accurately put lack thereof, raises the question why is this person being nominated as an ambassador only to find the answer in an appendix listing the political contributions.

Not only has the quality of noncareer appointments declined under the current administration, but the number of noncareer appointments has increased dramatically.

I have gone back and checked the percentages of other Presidents in terms of nominees submitted to the Senate at this point in their respective administrations—in other words, in the first session subsequent to an election. In no instance did the career percentage drop below 61 percent. With Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Carter, and Reagan the percentage of career nominees never dropped below 61 percent. In the case of President Bush of the 58 nominations submitted as country ambassadors, 22 are career and 36 are political. That makes 38 percent career and 62 percent political at this point in time—a reversal of the record of all administrations immediately preceeding this one.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a table which contains the percentage of political appointees made by President Bush as compared to previous Presidents beginning with President Kennedy.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Kennedy (first nine months of 1961)—64 Nominations total: 39 Career (61%); 25 Political (39%).

Johnson (first nine months of 1965)—39 Nominations total: 28 Career (72%); 11 Political (28%).

Nixon (first nine months of 1969)—70 Nominations total: 44 Career (63%); 26 Political (37%).

Nixon II (first nine months of 1973)—36 Nominations total: 23 Career (64%); 13 Political (36%).

Carter (first nine months of 1977)—59 Nominations total: 36 Career (61%); 23 Political (39%).

Reagan (first nine months of 1981)—57 Nominations total: 35 Career (61%); 22 Political (39%).

Reagan II (first nine months of 1985)—37 Nominations total: 26 Career (70%); 11 Political (30%).

Bush (first nine months of 1989)—58 Nominations total: 22 Career (38%); 36 Political (62%).

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I would also ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of July 3, 1989, entitled "Trivializing Ambassadors" which expresses clearly the perils of politicizing the ambassadorial nominations process.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 3, 1989]

TRIVIALIZING AMBASSADORS

Presidents and Congress have a habit of rewarding fat cats and cronies with foreign embassies, of treating many ambassadorial appointments as if they don't much matter in representing American interests and values. But they do matter, sometimes critically.

President Bush has not improved on the tradition, to judge by his nominations to Spain, Australia and New Zealand. The only distinction visible in his proposed Ambassador to Madrid, Joseph Zappala, a Florida developer, is a distinctively large contribution to the Republican Party, reportedly $126,000. Ditto for another Florida businessman, Melvin Sembler ($127,000), nominated to Canberra. And the choice for Wellington is Della Newman, a Seattle broker who managed Mr. Bush's state campaign.

Dispatching a lightweight or inexperienced envoy sends a message of unconcern verging on contempt. That's why a move by Senator Paul Sarbanes deserves support. The Maryland Democrat has forced the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to put off considering this trio until mid-July, giving the Senate more time to weigh the nominee's qualifications—and for all concerned to think harder about the importance of ambassadors.

No one argues that the country would be better served if all ambassadors were professional diplomats. That would have meant losing such star noncareer performers as Mike Mansfield, Averell Harriman, David Bruce and Edwin Reischauer, to name a few. Nor should campaign contributors be automatically excluded. They can do a good job, depending on their political instincts, stature, and experience. Moreover, foreign service officers can make feeble ambassadors, given to inertia, caution and fixation with form.

Presidents need considerable latitude in selecting what are in part personal representatives. The Constitution spells out their right to do so, subject to senatorial consent. It clearly stretches the legislative role to withhold or delay confirmation if a senator objects to a nominee on ideological grounds—an abuse repeatedly and indefensibly indulged by Senator Jesse Helms.

Yet advice and consent does mean something: the Senate has an obligation to hold Presidential nominees to rudimentary standards of competence. Senator Sarbanes has reason to be troubled when Mr. Sembler, the nominee for Australia, supplies this written answer to a question about his qualifications: "I have been known as a coalition-builder, able to organize my peers to action in support of worthy civic, charitable and political causes."

Nearly identical language was used by whoever answered the same written question for Mr. Zappala, the nominee for Spain, treating both the Senate and an important capital with the same manipulative cynicism.

Those old European capitals, with large embassy staffs and calm relations, have long offered safe places to reward fat cats. That's much less true today. Changes now buffets Western and Eastern Europe. Consider Italy, where only a year ago and at some political cost, a centrist coalition government agreed to accept U.S. airbases soon to be closed by a Socialist government in Spain. Yet Mr. Bush's choice for Rome is Peter Secchia, manager of his Michigan campaign, whose innocence in diplomacy seems complete.

Does it repay Italy's fidelity, or soothe Spain's nationalism, for the United States to send them envoys conspicuously unequipped by experience or knowledge? It would be wise for the President to reconsider such nominees, and if not, permissible, indeed salutary, for the Senate to reject them.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, what message does such politicizing of ambassadorial nominations give the career Foreign Service? We have young men and women across the country who take tests to enter the career service. They are sent to language school in order to learn languages. They go through an intense training period to be able to handle the complexities of the job. They have a variety of experiences out in the field and at home.

Under modern circumstances they subject themselves to great risk. More ambassadors since the Korean war have lost their lives than admirals and generals. Fortunately, the number is not large. Nevertheless, I think it is important to keep that in mind. Foreign Service personnel take extraordinary risks to serve their country.

The fact of the matter is that the only reason we can even contemplate sending inexperienced political ambassadors abroad without expecting catstrophe is that we can count on career people in the Embassy to shepherd them through their ambassadorship. If we start sending a message to the career people that they are never going to become ambassadors, that it does not really matter how well they do their jobs and serve their country, it is going to be harder to attract and hold good career service people. The quality of the career service will diminish, and the whole country will have to pay a very high price for it.

Sending an ambassador who possesses no obvious qualifications for a post conveys a very unfortunate message to the country involved. It says, in effect, that our relationship is not important enough to require an able representative of our country. In many respects it says we value the country's climate more that its respect and friendship. And to the world at large it says the United States is not serious about diplomacy, that America places a higher premium on political rewards than on furthering its interests abroad.

No other major industrial country appoints its ambassadors in this way. Countries which send ambassadors to the United States select them very carefully to make sure that they are people of quality, ability, and experience. The United States should do no less.

It is not difficult to understand the attractions which these two posts, Australia and New Zealand, hold out to the novice ambassador. They are anything but the "hardship posts" to which career Foreign Service officers can expect to devote much of their professional lives. Australia and New Zealand are stable and vigorous political democracies where civil strife is virtually unknown. They are English-speaking, and therefore impose no burden on the English-speaking nominee to master any language other than his or her own. Because the standard of living is high, they raise no specter of austerity and deprivation. They are nations of wonderful people and of breath-taking beauty.

At the same time, however, Australia and New Zealand play critical roles in the Pacific region, where economic challenges arise on an almost daily basis and security interests must constantly be reassessed. We cannot afford to treat them as some kind of playground with exotic scenery. The United States has important regional and global interests which require close and cordial bilateral relations with each nation, and harmonious working relations within a range of multilateral agencies and endeavors.

Australia, for example, has long been a loyal ally of the United States on defense issues and a cornerstone of the tripartite ANZUS alliance. Close United States-Australian relations are more important than ever today as Australia embarks on an extensive revitalization of its military forces, providing an important supplement to United States forces and assuming greater responsibility for shared security interests in the Pacific. Australia has assumed a new and vigorous leadership role in foreign policy issues, and next month will be the host in Canberra to a meeting of Secretaries of State, including of course, Secretary Baker, to discuss pan-Pacific cooperation and the formation of a new Pacific community organization.

Australia plays a central role in the "Australia Group" of industrialized nations working together to address the urgent problem of chemical weapons development and production; and Australia has been a leading force within the influential Commonwealth Foreign Ministers Committee on Southern Africa in the effort to bring apartheid to an end in South Africa and fundamental change to Southern Africa.

Like Australia, New Zealand has long had close ties to the United States through bilateral relations and membership in ANZUS. New Zealand and the United States have pursued very similar policies in the South Pacific: given its unique relationship with the other islands of the region, New Zealand makes a unique contribution to promoting democratic institutions and economic development. New Zealand Armed Forces have participated bravely in U.N. peacekeeping efforts, and that nation is today deeply engaged in the effort to address urgent international environmental issues.

There is, however, a new and complex dimension to United States relations with New Zealand. Divergent perspectives on nuclear policy issues have created very significant strains in the bilateral relationship; and while those tensions have been defused somewhat, the longer-term policy questions are far from resolved. A new Prime Minister took office only 2 months ago, and this remains a sensitive period in United States-New Zealand relations.

We are living in a time when disputes are increasingly being resolved by diplomats rather than generals, and we rely increasingly on our Ambassadors not only to resolve problems but to prevent them from arising in the first place. Our national interest is not well served by filling ambassadorial posts with persons of little or no relevant background who are not prepared for the magnitude of the responsibilities being placed upon them.

Mr. President, in considering these nominations one must keep foremost in his thinking that the national interest is at stake here, not a political interest, not a party interest, not a reward for political performance, not a personal interest, not a reward for friendship. I emphasize again that at the heart of the matter is the national interest. Campaign contributions and fund-raising activities in the absence of relevant background and experience do not constitute qualifications to serve this Nation as Ambassador. These appointments must be taken seriously. They are not simply political throwaways. We need to send envoys who can effectively represent the United States and enhance and advance our interests. I therefore oppose the nomination of Melvin Sembler to be Ambassador to Australia and of Della Newman to be Ambassador to New Zealand.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to Executive Session to consider the following nominations, en bloc:

Calendar 240. Melvin F. Sembler, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to Australia and to serve concurrently and without additional compensation as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Republic of Nauri;

STATEMENT OF THE NOMINATION OF DELLA NEWMAN TO BE UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO NEW ZEALAND AND WESTERN SAMOA

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I strongly endorse the confirmation of Della Newman to be United States Ambassador to New Zealand and Western Samoa.

I am delighted for Ms. Newman and this country. She has been a friend and close associate of mine for over 20 years, so I speak from personal experience when I say that Della has the qualities, talent, and dedication needed to be a fine representative of the United States. I know her to be an intelligent, thoughtful, and innovative leader. She is honest, considerate of other people and their views, and accurate in her judgments. Della Newman will speak with great clarity and force for the United States.

She is a successful businesswoman, a longtime leader in civic affairs, and an outstanding person. She has a distinguished record of accomplishment and service; she has been active in numerous charity, community, civic, political, and business organizations. A longtime State resident, Ms. Newman is regarded as one of Washington's finest citizens.

Della Newman is a person of strong character, experience, and knowledge. President Bush recognized her enormous talent when he chose her to lead his Washington State campaign. She has been a longtime associate of President Bush and knows his priorities well. As a result, she will be able clearly to articulate his policies to the Governments of New Zealand and Western Samoa. Indeed, these governments, knowing her relationship to the President, will have more confidence in her ability to communicate the concerns of New Zealand and Western Samoa to the United States, and trust that her response is authentic.

Mr. President, clearly, this is a proud moment for Della, her family, and all the residents of the State of Washington. The United States will be extremely fortunate to have Della Newman as Ambassador to New Zealand and Western Samoa.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, it is a great honor for me to be here this afternoon to speak on behalf of the nomination of Evie Teegen. I have known Evie since the late 1960's and can think of no other person who could better represent the United States to be Ambassador to Fiji than this highly motivated, intelligent, and extremely compassionate woman.

Evie Teegen has consistently distinguished herself over the years as a hard worker and a professional in every political and volunteer position she has ever held. She is a quick and eager learner and easily adapts to situations which many of us would find uncomfortable or difficult. She is a natural leader, exhibited by an outstanding and lengthy list of past and present positions of leadership: executive director of the Minnesota Seat Belt Coalition, vice president of Teegen & Associates, Republic National Committeewoman from Minnesota, Minnesota State vice chairwoman, deacon and elder of Christ Presbyterian Church where she has served as chairwoman of committees on World Hunger and Youth planning. The list of committees and organizations that she has chaired or in which she has been actively involved is endless. The most admirable aspect of her work is that much of it has been voluntary, and she has been involved only as a result of her selflessness and her desire to help others.

Evie Teegen is also a strong supporter of the President and a patriotic citizen of the United States. Her deep commitment to the Republican Party and to George Bush are symbolized by her active participation on numerous campaign committees, particularly the George Bush for President, Minnesota Steering Committee, and her long-term involvement as a Republican national commiteewoman. She has also spent many long hours working to elect her two Minnesota Senators, both RUDY and myself, of which we are both so appreciative.

Not only is Evie's performance in the professional world superior in every way, but most importantly, Evie brings a certain charm and personal warmth to every thing she does. At home she is surrounded by a loving and supportive family who have been fortunate enough to directly benefit from her wonderful qualities. She has been married to Richard Teegen, a successful businessman and entrepreneur, for over 30 years. This is a man with whom she has shared every hardship and every joy, and who is as warm and gracious and outgoing as she. How lucky we are, as citizens of the United States, to be represented by such a marvelous couple who together will bring so much to this ambassadorship.

Overall, Evie Teegen is exceptionally qualified for this position. She instills confidence and trust in those around her, and has the natural ability to make others feel comfortable in her presence. These are very admirable qualities that will be so valuable as Ambassador. Not only must she, as the most important representative of our country overseas, be quick-witted and intelligent, but she must have an exceptional ability to deal well with others in every strange situation that might arise. This job carries with it many new and difficult responsibilities that will demand immediate attention and prompt answers. Knowing Evie as well as I do, I have no doubt that she will be an enormous success as Ambassador to Fiji. I respectfully urge my colleagues to support her nomination.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZING THE APPOINTMENT OF A SPECIAL SENATE DELEGATION TO HOST A DELEGATION OF MEMBERS OF THE SUPREME SOVIET OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 194) authorizing the appointment of a special Senate delegation to host a delegation of members of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this resolution is to authorize the appointment of a special Senate delegation to host a delegation of members of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

This special Senate delegation will have the privilege of hosting this Soviet delegation for the first parliamentary exchange since the Supreme Soviet has been reconstituted and democratized under Chairman Mikhail Gorbachev. The official Supreme Soviet delegation which will be visiting the United States, at our invitation, will be led by Mr. Yevgeniy M. Primakov, Chairman, Council of the Union of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., and since September 20 a candidate member of the Politburo.

We look forward to this opportunity to meet with the Soviet delegation and conduct discussions of mutual interest and vital global concern. This resolution will authorize the activities of the special Senate delegation as it conducts the necessary events for the Soviet delegation's forthcoming visit to the United States.

I urge the Senate's immediate agreement to this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 194) was agreed to.

The resolution reads as follows:

S. RES. 194

Resolved, That (a) the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon consultation with the majority leader and the minority leader, is authorized to appoint a special delegation of Members of the Senate (hereinafter in this resolution referred to as the "delegation") that shall host a delegation of members of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The majority leader and minority leader of the Senate shall serve as co-chairmen of such special delegation.

(b) The Senate delegation shall be composed of 14 Members of the Senate, including the majority leader and the minority leader with the remaining 12 members appointed as follows:

(1) 6 Members of the Senate from the majority party to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the majority leader.

(2) 6 Members of the Senate from the minority party, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendation of the minority leader.

(c) Any vacancy in the membership of the delegation shall be filed in the same manner as the original appointment.

SEC. 2. (a) The co-chairmen of the delegation may designate Senate employees who shall provide professional staff support and expertise for the delegation. All administrative support and services for the delegation shall be provided by the Secretary of the Senate.

(b) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized, from funds made available under subsection (c), to incur such expenses as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out his duties and functions for the delegation. Such expenses shall include such special expenses as the co-chairmen may deem appropriate, including—

(1) expenses incurred on behalf of such delegation;

(2) official representation expenses; and

(3) reimbursements to any officer or agency of the Government.

(c) The expenses of the delegation as authorized in subsection (b), including the expenses of staff members assisting such delegation, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, out of the account of miscellaneous items, upon vouchers, approved by the Secretary of the Senate, after consultation with the co-chairmen of the delegation.

(d) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized to advance such sums as may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 3. This resolution shall terminate upon the adjournment sine die of the first session of the One Hundred First Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1989

RECESS UNTIL 12 NOON; MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 12 noon on Wednesday, October 11, 1989, and that following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican leader has no business, and if no other Senator is seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 12 noon, Wednesday, October 11.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, October 11, 1989, at 12 noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, October 10, 1989

The House met at 12 noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. GRAY].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
October 10, 1989.

I hereby designate the Honorable William H. Gray III to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We admit, O God, that we find excuses for not listening to Your good word and we are so involved with the many tasks of life that we do not heed Your still, small voice. Open our hearts, O gracious God, and speak to our very souls, that Your word and Your voice will show us the paths of peace. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] will lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MAZZOLI led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendments, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 1300. An act to amend the Head Start Act to increase the amount authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1990;

H.J. Res. 392. Joint resolution designating October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month";

H.J. Res. 400. Joint resolution designating October 27, 1989, as "National Hostage Awareness Day"; and

H.J. Res. 401. Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1989 as "Country Music Month."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 901. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to improve programs for the recruitment and retention of health-care personnel of the Department of Veterans Affairs, to extend certain expiring programs of that Department, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2788) "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes."

The message also announced, that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, 15, 18, 23, 26, 28, 34, 39, 43, 50, 55, 61, 62, 63, 70, 71, 72, 76, 81, 86, 87, 88, 93, 94, 96, 102, 104, 105, 107, 110, 111, 114, 121, 124, 133, 135, 139, 140, 143, 150, 152, 153, 164, 165, 166, 167, and 168, to the above-entitled bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills, joint resolutions, and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1443. An act to designate Bowling Green, KY, as an urbanized area.

S. 1735. An act to provide authorization, for Anti-Drug Abuse Appropriations, and for other purposes;

S.J. Res. 158. Joint resolution designating October 22 through 28, 1989, as "World Population Awareness Week";

S.J. Res. 204. Joint resolution designating October 28, 1989, as "National Women Veterans of World War II Day";

S.J. Res. 213. Joint resolution to designate October 22 through October 29, 1989, as "National Red Ribbon Week for a Drug-Free America"; and

S. Con. Res. 75. Concurrent resolution to congratulate His Holiness the XIV Dalai Lama of Tibet for being awarded the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize.

The message also announced that pursuant to sections 1928a-1928d, as amended, the Chair of behalf of the Vice President, appoints Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. LOTT, and Mr. MACK, as members of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly meeting, during the 1st session of the 101st Congress, to be held in Rome, Italy, October 6-10, 1989.

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 100-204, the Chair on behalf of the President pro tempore, appoints Thomas F. Eagleton of Missouri, from private life, to the U.S. Commission on Improving the Effectiveness of the United Nations.

NATIONAL SPINA BIFIDA MONTH

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, today I rise again to request the support of my colleagues, as they have given me over the years, for House Joint Resolution 286, which designates October as "National Spina Bifida Month." Spina bifida, as many of us know, is a condition resulting from the failure of the spine to close during pregnancy. It is a fairly common birth defect, affecting about 1 baby out of every 1,000 births.

Many of the March of Dimes and Easter Seal children have spina bifida. Unfortunately, there are few treatment facilities around the country. In years past I have introduced this legislation and all of you have been very supportive of it. I would ask for your support again this year.

Perhaps in sponsoring resolutions like this, we can call attention to the existence of this birth defect and also provide attention and hopefully legislation with money to provide for cures. It is important, because this is, of course, October, that we move quickly to pass House Joint Resolution 286. I ask for the support of my colleagues in this measure.

RETAIN SCREENING MAMMOGRAPHY BENEFITS IN MEDICARE

(Mrs. VUCANOVICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the action of the other body to retain screening mammography benefits in Medicare.

Although these benefits are not related to catastrophic health, they were attached to the Catastrophic Care Act, which the House repealed last week.

Screening mammograms are an essential procedure to detect breast cancer at an early stage. Ninety percent of women whose breast cancer is detected early survive more than 5 years after their cancer is treated. Eighty-five percent of the women whose cancer is not caught until later stages die within 2 years.

Mr. Speaker, the death toll from breast cancer is now over 43,000 American women each year, and breast cancer incidence is at epidemic levels, threatening 1 woman in 10.

I urge my colleagues to reinstate screening mammography coverage and to adopt the other body's approach to this lifesaving benefit in conference between the Senate and the House.

Every day, the lives of hundreds of wives and mothers, sisters and daughters are needlessly lost to this tragic disease. This is something we can put an end to by early detection and treatment, and let us not lose this opportunity to reinstate mammography screening coverage in Medicare.

INCREASE IN MINIMUM WAGE GETS WIDE SUPPORT

(Mr. VISCLOSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, Franklin Roosevelt's Democratic administration introduced the first minimum wage legislation and established the principle that everyone working for a living should be able to earn a living.

Americans still believe in that principle and 84 percent of the American people support an increase in the minimum wage.

The minimum wage has become a minimal wage over the last 10 years. Inflation has taken away a third of its buying power since President Carter signed the last increase in 1977. During that time, more and more heads of families, many of them single women with children, have had to accept jobs at $3.35 an hour.

It is an American ideal that anyone can rise from poverty by honest, diligent effort. If the National Government continues to sit idly by as the value of the minimum wage falls, honesty and diligence will offer only the prospect of a lifetime of grease spattered T-shirts. The profiles of the drug dealer and thug will loom ever larger in the minds of our most ambitious children.

It is time to increase the minimum wage.

TIME TO TAKE A LOOK AT FOREIGN OWNERSHIP IN AMERICA

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, foreign countries are buying America at a record pace. They now own Columbia Pictures, CBS Records, Firestone Tire, and American Express. They even own the Pillsbury Doughboy. That is right.

Just this year foreigners have bought up 177 American companies for $41 billion, but Japan is not only interested in buying our companies. They are also now coveting our jobs. Japan has structural engineers, iron workers, laser welders, pipefitters, plumbers, computer mechanics, but we need not worry. We are expanding our job market also.

The U.S. Labor Department has listed one such new job. It is called panty hose crotch closer.

Let me say that again. Officially listed with the Labor Department now is a "panty hose crotch closer." Evidently the Japanese do not have all our jobs, but I am not so sure they want all our jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I think we had better take a look at this foreign ownership in America.

TEACHER SALARIES FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES NEED IMPROVEMENT

(Mr. DARDEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, the recent education summit in Charlottesville has focused renewed public attention on serious problems within our educational system. Most everyone agrees that we must find ways to attract and retain qualified professionals in the teaching force.

The President himself has proposed improved certification and higher pay for teachers, and I agree with him. However, I have discovered a glaring discrepancy in the Federal Government's own salary schedule which indicates a failure to embrace these ideals. In many instances, U.S. Government teachers receive far less compensation than do their counterparts in surrounding areas.

A foreign language specialist in the State Department, for example, is compensated at grade 9 of the civil service salary schedule. This represents an average annual salary of $26,772. In the surrounding counties, public school teachers with similar qualifications receive significantly more—as much as $46,459 in Montgomery County, MD and $45,305 in the Arlington, VA school district.

Civil servants are an easy target for those who claim the Federal work force is too large and costly. However, I believe that those who have chosen to become educators should not be penalized because their salaries are drawn from the U.S. Treasury rather than from local funds. U.S. Government teachers are as qualified and as dedicated as those in local districts. I hope the President will follow his own advice and make the U.S. Government an example for the rest of the Nation by improving teacher salaries for Federal employees.

THE REVLON PRESIDENT

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, 6 years ago I coined the phrase, "the Teflon president," to describe President Reagan's seemingly impervious nature.

In this week's Legal Times, Peter Edelman dubbed President George Herbert Walker Bush "the Revlon president" because although he acknowledges problems, he proposes only cosmetic solutions.

Edelman scored a bullseye. Not a week goes by that President Bush does not make some high-sounding or grandiose pronouncement—the education summit, the war on drugs, and the Mars launch, to name just three.

There is never any plan nor any funding, just the announcement. The Bush presidency is all dressed up and nowhere to go.

THE PUBLIC SUPPORTS INCREASE OF THE MINIMUM WAGE

(Mr. HOAGLAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOAGLAND. Mr. Speaker, if I were to go home tonight and tell my wife, "Dear, I found a grocery store where the prices have not been raised for 9 years," she would ask me to be mentally committed, or if I came home and said, "Dear, I have not gotten a salary increase in my job for 9 years," she would say, "Dear, you better look for another job," or if I came home and said, "My stockbroker put me in stocks 9 years ago that have not increased 1 penny," she would say, "You had better fire your broker."

That is why, ladies and gentlemen, the only fair thing to do is to raise the minimum wage. The public of our Nation agrees with that.

In a Washington Post-ABC poll, 84 percent of Americans support an increase in the minimum wage. My own newspaper in Omaha, the Omaha World Herald, found that 56 percent of my constituents support an increase in the minimum wage, and an additional 10 percent say it should be even higher than the Democrats' proposal last spring.

Mr. Speaker, the fair thing to do, the right thing to do is to increase the minimum wage. I ask all of my colleagues to vote that way this week.

ADMINISTRATION MUST PROVIDE MONDAY-MORNING QUARTERBACKING

(Mr. WISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday as the Panama coup crumbled before CNN's eyes, I was initially sympathetic to the President's response that the United States was not involved, he maintained, because it would be bad policy to intervene in Latin American affairs. There was logic to that.

It now turns that the United States was involved up to our adenoids using U.S. troops to block two major highways. This is the worst of all worlds, to intervene and not be successful. Being branded the heavy-handed Yankee from the North is bad enough, but being the gringo who cannot even intervene competently is worse.

During the last week, some defending the administration's actions in the failed coup attempt in Panama charged critics with Monday-morning quarterbacking. They missed the point.

Tuesday's coup desperately needed some Monday-morning quarterbacking. No quarterback emerged.

The only contact was 3 weeks earlier apparently between coup leaders and the CIA. News reports indicate that when administration officials met Monday, the CIA was not included in the meeting, not in the huddle. What we had was no game plan and no contingency plan, and what we do have is Noriega.

Mr. Speaker, before the next Tuesday coup, the administration must provide some Monday-morning quarterbacking.

CRITICISM OF THE PRESIDENT INCONSISTENT

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to me to hear individuals take the podium here in the House of Representatives and criticize the President of the United States in this day and age for not doing enough to seize a dictator who was self-installed and self-appointed like in Panama. These are the same critics who criticized President Reagan for attempting to do all he could through the Contra people who are citizens of Nicaragua themselves to try to seize and take out of power a self-appointed dictator, self-installed like Ortega.

Mr. Speaker, the inconsistency of the criticism of the President of the United States can only mean one thing: It does not matter what the President of the United States tries to do in foreign policy, there will always be opponents who will criticize that he did not do enough or did too much on purely political basis. It is a very difficult situation for any President to deal with situations like this.

It does not help when the criticism comes no matter what he tries to do.

OKLAHOMA DOES EXIST

(Mr. SYNAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, Toto can no longer get to Kansas from Texas through Oklahoma. If he tries to do so using Rand McNally maps, he will have to find his own way or take the Rand McNally way west through New Mexico and Colorado or east through Louisiana, Arkansas, and Missouri. It is no wonder that this week it was announced that college seniors cannot answer simple geography or history questions. If any effort is made to learn States of the United States through Rand McNally, one can expect to learn that the United States has only 47 States. Oklahoma became a State over 80 years ago, but the editors at Rand McNally have still not learned simple geography. How can we expect our college seniors to know any better?

Columbus may have discovered the Americas in 1492, we in Oklahoma are still waiting for Rand McNally to acknowledge our existence.

A famous Oklahoman, Woody Guthrie, wrote a beautiful ballad that states: "This land is your land, this land is my land, from California to the New York islands." He is probably turning over in his grave to find out that his song did not include the State of Oklahoma.

The only good thing I can say about the deliberate omission is that at least the powers to be at Rand McNally did not make us part of Texas.

RAISE THE MINIMUM WAGE

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, this weekend thousands of people from across the country came to Washington to deliver an urgent and simple message: That every American deserves a decent place to live.

There was another message, too: that we could go a long way toward helping people afford decent housing simply by raising the minimum wage. Right now, a full-time worker earning the minimum wage cannot keep a family of three above the poverty line.

Congress passed a minimum wage increase last June, but this administration vetoed it. This is the same administration that 2 weeks ago insisted on a capital gains tax cut. If we are going to give people with the highest incomes a break, surely we owe those with the lowest incomes one as well.

Working Americans deserve this promise: if you work full time for a living, then you can count on a living wage. That is not too much to ask. For all those who traveled so far to come here this weekend, let us assure them their voices have been heard.

INCREASING THE MINIMUM WAGE

(Mr. TORRICELLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, last week this House lowered capital gains taxes for one-half of 1 percent for the wealthiest Americans, a $25,000 net increase in annual income.

This week more than a million Americans who do the work of this country day in and day out at the lowest legal wages in the country are waiting to hear whether the President has the same concern and compassion for them. For a year the answer to that question has been no. It is neither a kinder nor gentler nation. It says to a million Americans who work in our restaurants, our hotels, and our factories that they must raise their families at poverty wages, and indeed that is of whom I speak, because those who would raise children at a legal wage today do so in poverty.

Mr. President, you answered the needs of your constituents, you answered the needs of the wealthiest Americans. Now see your way for those who work at the minimum wage. For nearly 10 years they have waited for some increase. Give them that increase today for the sake of their children, their spouses, their families. We want them to do the work of America, not to be wards of the state. Give them some decent increase in their wage.

PORTER SUPPORTERS MATCH CUBS, WIN CHAMPIONSHIP

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, each season over 300 teams gather in our Nation's Capital to vie for the Congressional Softball League Championship. Following a 20-game season, the teams are narrowed to 64 for the year-end tournament. And after several weeks of playoffs one team emerges as the victor.

My team, the Porter Supporters hung tough all year. Six months, 10 stitches, 23 games, 1 hurricane, and 3 come-from-behind victories later, the Porter Supporters are the 1989 Robert V. Rota Congressional Softball Tournament Champions, winning the championship game 21 to 10 over Georgia Peach Pits.

Who are the Supporters? They are Coach Mike Myers, Amy Barnes, Robert "Gus" Gustafson, Bill Cadigan, Mary Boehm, Chris Sullivan, David Porter—who happens to be my son—Peter Friedman, Doug Boyd, Rob Bradner, Karen Burch, Kristie Burch, Karen Davis, Lisa Kaeser, Chris Whitney, and Jerri Lohman, and I'm proud of every one of them.

I invite all my colleagues to come to view the beautiful winner's trophy permanently on display in 1501 Longworth. Admission is free.

THE MOST POWERFUL FORCE IN THE WORLD: FREEDOM

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, freedom is busting out all over. Hundreds of thousands of East Germans are fighting to get into West Germany. They want to come in from Poland, and from Czechoslovakia, from the Soviet Union, millions from China, many who already tried expressing their right to freedom, many were killed.

Millions all over the world want what we have. Freedom is contagious. It is addictive once you get the taste of it.

John F. Kennedy said in 1961 that the most powerful force in the world in not the hydrogen bomb, it is not the guided missile, not communism or capitalism, but man's eternal desire to be free.

What we take for granted is their dream, it is their future, and we should thank God every day for what we have. We are truly blessed to live in America.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK

(Mr. WELDON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, this week we celebrate across this Nation Fire Prevention Week, a week we set aside each year to remember those who are there trying to reduce the threat of loss of property and life.

It is certainly tragic that this past weekend we saw 11 senior citizens lose their lives in a nursing home fire in Virginia because of a lack of adequate protection measures as well as inadequate training in that facility.

There will be a series of events this week to allow Members of Congress to address the issue of fire and life safety. Today we conducted the second training effort for the staff members on Capitol Hill on how to respond to emergencies. Never before in the history of this country have we done that. Tomorrow we will take out a special order for 1 hour to highlight the Nation's fire and emergency services, and on Thursday we will be introducing the Fire Service Bill of Rights, an $80 million program that will benefit those 3 million fire and emergency service people across this country using no tax money.

I invite my colleagues to join with me in this special order, and also the press conference at 10:30 on Thursday morning, and staff members and Members of this body to join us on Wednesday evening for a special reception in the Longworth cateteria.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such roll call votes, if postponed, will be taken after debate has concluded on all motions to suspend the rules, but not earlier than 4:30 p.m.

OFFICE OF ENVIRONMENTAL QUALITY REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1113) to authorize appropriations for the Office of Environmental Quality for fiscal years 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993; to ensure consideration of the impact of major Federal actions on the global environment, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1113

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CLARIFICATION OF NATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY.

(a) STATEMENT OF GENERAL ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY.—Section 101(b) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4331(b)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (5) by striking "and" following the semicolon;

(2) in paragraph (6) by striking the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7) provide world leadership in ensuring a healthy and stable global environment.".

(b) ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENTS.—Section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(2)(C)) is amended—

(1) by striking clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(iii) reasonable alternatives to the proposed action that achieve the same or similar public purposes, including alternatives that avoid the adverse impacts described in clause (ii) and alternatives that otherwise mitigate those adverse impacts,"; and

(2) by inserting "and the public" immediately before the second period.

(c) FEDERAL AGENCY ACTION REGARDING GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT.—Section 102(2)(F) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(2)(F)) is amended to read as follows:

"(F) work vigorously to develop and implement policies, plans, and actions designed to support national and international efforts to enhance the quality of the global environment;".

(d) IMPLEMENTATION OF MITIGATION MEASURES.—Title I of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4331 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 106. Environmental mitigation and monitoring measures and other conditions discussed in a detailed statement or other document prepared under section 102(2)(C) and selected by an agency as part of its final decision to undertake an action shall be implemented by the appropriate agency.".

SEC. 2. PRESIDENT'S STRATEGY FOR ENVIRONMENTAL PROGRESS.

Section 201 of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4341) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 201. Not later than January 31 of each year, the President shall transmit to Congress a report which—

"(1) describes the President's strategy for implementing the policy and objectives set forth in section 101 during that year;

"(2) describes areas of new or heightened environmental concern;

"(3) proposes initiatives to strengthen and improve Federal environmental programs;

"(4) sets priorities for national action to protect the environment; and

"(5) analyzes issues associated with the implementation of this Act and the effectiveness of measures specified in detailed statements of Federal agencies under section 102(2)(C) to mitigate the adverse environmental impacts of Federal actions.".

SEC. 3. REGULATORY AUTHORITY.

Section 204 of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4344) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (7);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(9) to promulgate regulations governing the implementation of this Act by all Federal agencies (including independent regulatory commissions) which include provisions for public review and comment on the detailed statements required by section 102(2)(C) and, as appropriate, on other documents prepared pursuant to this Act.".

SEC. 4. REVIEW FUNCTIONS OF COUNCIL.

(a) ISSUANCE OF GUIDELINES FOR AGENCY REVIEW OF CERTAIN ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENTS.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Council on Environmental Quality (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Council") shall issue guidelines under which each Federal agency shall review a statistically significant sample of detailed statements prepared by the agency under section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(a)(C)) in which measures were specified for the mitigation of any adverse impact on the environment that was predicted to occur as a result of agency action.

(b) CONTENT OF GUIDELINES.—Guidelines issued by the Council under subsection (a)—

(1) shall establish the timing and frequency of reviews to be conducted by agencies under the guidelines; and

(2) shall require that Federal agencies examine—

(A) the accuracy of predictions of adverse impact which were included in such statements, including predictions of impacts on fish and wildlife populations and habitats;

(B) the extent to which mitigation measures specified in statements under section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 were implemented; and

(C) the effectiveness of those implemented mitigation measures.

(c) AGENCY REVIEWS.—Each Federal agency shall carry out reviews in accordance with guidelines issued by the Council under this section, and shall promptly submit to the Council the results of those reviews.

(d) SUMMARY OF RESULTS IN ANNUAL REPORT.—The President shall include a summary of the results of the reviews carried out by Federal agencies under this section with the annual report transmitted to the Congress under section 201 of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4341).

SEC. 5. IMPACT OF AGENCY ACTION ON THE ENVIRONMENT OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES JURISDICTION.

(a) ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS BY COUNCIL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Council shall issue regulations under which each Federal agency shall—

(1) ensure the consideration, pursuant to section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(2)(C)), of the significant effects of its major actions on the environment of the global commons outside the jurisdiction of any nation; and

(2) ensure the formal assessment, in a manner that furthers the objectives of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, of the significant effects of its major actions, including extraterritorial actions, on the environment outside the jurisdiction of the United States and its territories and possessions.

(b) CONTENTS OF REGULATIONS.—The regulations issued by the Council under paragraph (1) shall—

(1) be consistent with the national security and foreign policy of the United States; and

(2) include guidance for Federal agencies for assessing the effects (including cumulative effects) of proposed major actions, on—

(A) global climate change;

(B) depletion of the ozone layer;

(C) the loss of biological diversity;

(D) transboundary pollution; and

(E) other matters of international environmental concern.

SEC. 6. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 205 of the Environmental Quality Improvement Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 4374) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(e) $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1989 and 1990.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DAVIS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1113 authorizes funds for the Office of Environmental Quality for fiscal year 1990 and makes a number of clarifying amendments to the National Environmental Policy Act.

The amount of funding authorized is $1 million, only a little above the current level, and barely enough to rate an asterisk in the Federal budget.

The amendments to NEPA were developed on a bipartisan basis; they reflect the testimony and correspondence received from the administration; and they will ensure the effectiveness of NEPA during the third decade of that landmark law.

Since its creation in 1969, CEQ has been a touchstone for determining administration attitudes toward the environment. Throughout the 1970's, under Republican and Democratic administrations alike, it played an important role—coordinating government policy, streamlining NEPA procedures, upholding the integrity of the law.

But for the last 8 years, the council has been virtually moribund, deprived of resources, access, influence, and authority.

The new Chairman of CEQ, Michael Deland, is determined to change that. And his success—or lack thereof—may well determine the environmental legacy of this administration.

CEQ's job is to advise the President on the entire range of environmental issues, but its primary responsibility remains the enforcement of NEPA. That law, now in its 20th year, is without question the most important environmental statute in the world. It has been tried and tested and proven at home and it serves increasingly as a model for nations and international organizations abroad.

Like the Constitution, NEPA may need some improvement from time to time, but it's hard to quarrel with the general idea. All NEPA requires is that Federal agencies think in advance about the environmental effects of the actions they propose to take and that they consider alternatives that avoid or minimize environmental harm.

We are concerned now—as we were when NEPA was enacted—about polluted rivers, dirty air, and unplanned development. But we did not worry then that Earth might someday suffer an even greater loss—the loss of the very features that distinguish it from its interplanetary neighbors: A healthy ozone layer; a proper balance between oxygen and carbon dioxide in the atmosphere; the ability to sustain human life.

That is why the time has come to apply the principles of NEPA not just to our national environment, but to the global environment, as well. H.R. 1113 takes the first steps in that direction.

The bill makes it absolutely, 100 percent crystal clear, that NEPA applies—as I believe it always has applied—to major Federal actions having a significant environmental impact on the atmosphere, the oceans, Antarctica, and other areas that make up what is commonly referred to as the global commons.

Second, it requires CEQ, consistent with the national security and foreign policy of our country, to issue regulations requiring Federal agencies to consider the impact of their actions, including extraterritorial actions, on global climate change, depletion of the ozone layer, the loss of biological diversity, transboundary pollution and other matters of international environmental concern.

That sounds like common sense. But the fact is that Federal agencies currently make long-range decisions about agriculture, forestry, water resources, coastal zone resources, and energy policy with little or no regard for the cumulative impacts of those actions on the global climate.

We seek, as President Bush said recently at the United Nations, to take the lead on international environmental issues. But today, it is we who are the world's largest generator of the emissions that cause global warming. We are the largest user of the CFC's that deplete the ozone layer. We are by far the world's largest consumer of fossil fuels. And yet, a recent survey by CEQ indicated that not one Federal action has been systematically reviewed for its impact on the international environment—as required by NEPA—in this decade.

Leadership must begin at home. H.R. 1113 offers Members the first opportunity this year to go on record in support of action to protect our planet from the poisons that endanger it, and to back up American rhetoric with American action on global environmental issues.

In closing, I want especially to thank the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Fisheries and the Environment, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WELDON, for their help and support in bringing this legislation to the floor.

□ 1230

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1113 which basically provides continuing authority under the Environmental Quality Improvement Act of 1970 for the Office of Environmental Quality, the support staff for the Council on Environmental Quality.

The Council on Environmental Quality was established by the National Environmental Policy Act. Its basic responsibilities involve providing advice to the President and Congress on environmental issues; it assists in coordinating Federal environmental programs which involve more than one agency; and assists in the preparation of the President's annual report to Congress on the environmental quality of the Nation.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee strengthened the legislation as introduced, and I would like to commend Chairman JONES, Congressman STUDDS, and Congressman WELDON for their efforts. I feel the bill as adopted by the committee should be supported and I have no objection to its adoption by this body.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WELDON].

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking today in strong support of H.R. 1113, legislation authorizing appropriations for the Office of Environmental Quality for fiscal years 1989-93. The Council on Environmental Quality [CEQ] provides a vital function: It enables the Federal Government to assess the environmental impact of its programs and to develop measures to mitigate those impacts.

CEQ's main weapon in the defense of environmental quality is the environmental impact statement [EIS]. Through the EIS, all Federal actions are carefully scrutinized, and environmentally damaging policies altered or their damages mitigated. Unfortunately, as occurs with many Federal programs, paper has seemed to replace action. As EIS's have grown in size, their effectiveness has been called into question. Now many feel that EIS's are more cumbersome than valuable, and questions have arisen about the extent of follow through on the mitigation measures they call for.

Through language that I first introduced in 1987, H.R. 1113 would take an important step to strengthen the EIS process. It would require an annual report to be submitted by the President to Congress stipulating the accuracy and effectiveness of Federal EIS's and their recommended mitigation measures. Through such evaluations, the value of EIS's and their proposed mitigation steps would be measured. Necessary changes could then be made in the EIS process to ensure its continued validity.

Environmental impact statements need to be more than simply long-winded justifications of already existing policies. The passage of this legislation is a big step in the right direction, and I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1113.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1113, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: A bill to authorize appropriations for the Office of Environmental Quality for fiscal years 1989 and 1990; to ensure consideration of the impact of major Federal actions on the global environment, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1113, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

NORTH AMERICAN WETLANDS CONSERVATION ACT

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2587) to conserve North American wetland ecosystems and waterfowl and the other migratory birds and fish and wildlife that depend upon such habitats, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2587

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "North American Wetlands Conservation Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the maintenance of healthy populations of migratory birds in North America is dependent on the protection, restoration, and management of wetland ecosystems and other habitats in Canada, as well as in the United States and Mexico;

(2) wetland ecosystems provide essential and significant habitat for fish, shellfish, and other wildlife of commercial, recreational, scientific, and aesthetic values;

(3) almost 35 percent of all rare, threatened, and endangered species of animals are dependent on wetland ecosystems;

(4) wetland ecosystems provide substantial flood and storm control values and can obviate the need for expensive human-made control measures;

(5) wetland ecosystems make a significant contribution to water availability and quality, recharging ground water, filtering surface runoff, and providing waste treatment;

(6) wetland ecosystems provide aquatic areas important for recreational and aesthetic purposes;

(7) more than 50 percent of the original wetlands in the United States alone have been lost;

(8) wetlands destruction, loss of nesting cover, and degradation of migration and wintering habitat have contributed to long-term downward trends in populations of migratory bird species such as pintails, American bitterns, and black ducks;

(9) the migratory bird treaty obligations of the United States with Canada, Mexico, and other countries require protection of wetlands that are used by migratory birds for breeding, wintering, or migration and are needed to achieve and to maintain optimum population levels, distributions, and patterns of migration;

(10) the 1988 amendments to the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act of 1980 require the Secretary of the Interior to identify conservation measures to assure that nongame migratory bird species do not reach the point at which measures of the Endangered Species Act are necessary;

(11) protection of migratory birds and their habitats requires long-term planning and the close cooperation and coordination of management activities by Canada, Mexico, and the United States within the framework of the 1916 and 1936 Migratory Bird Conventions and the Convention on Nature Protection and Wildlife Preservation in the Western Hemisphere;

(12) the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, signed in 1986 by the Minister of Environment for Canada and the Secretary of the Interior for the United States, provides a framework for maintaining and restoring an adequate habitat base to ensure perpetuation of populations of North American waterfowl and other migratory bird species;

(13) a tripartite agreement signed in March 1988 by the Director General for Ecological Conservation of Natural Resources of Mexico, the Director of the Canadian Wildlife Service, and the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service provides for expanded cooperative efforts in Mexico to conserve wetlands for migratory birds;

(14) the long-term conservation of migratory birds and habitat for these species will require the coordinated action of governments, private organizations, landowners, and other citizens; and

(15) the treaty obligations of the United States under the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat requires promotion of conservation and wise use of wetlands.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purposes of this Act are to encourage partnership among public agencies and other interests—

(1) to protect, enhance, restore, and manage an appropriate distribution and diversity of wetland ecosystems and other habitats for migratory birds and other fish and wildlife in North America;

(2) to maintain current or improved distributions of migratory bird populations; and

(3) to sustain an abundance of waterfowl and other migratory birds consistent with the goals of the North American Waterfowl Management Plan and the international obligations contained in the migratory bird treaties, conventions, and other agreements with Canada, Mexico, and other countries.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "Council" means the North American Wetlands Conservation Council established by section 4(a).

(2) The term "Agreement" means the tripartite agreement signed in March 1988 between the Director General for Ecological Conservation of Natural Resources of Mexico, the Director of the Canadian Wildlife Service, and the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

(3) The term "appropriate Committees" means the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the United States House of Representatives.

(4) The term "Migratory Bird Conservation Commission" means the commission established by section 2 of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 715a).

(5) The term "migratory birds" means all wild birds native to North America that are in an unconfined state and that are species protected under the Migratory Bird Treaty Act, including ducks, geese, and swans of the family Anatidae, species listed as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.) , or species defined as non-game under the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. 2901–2912).

(6) The term "Plan" means the North American Waterfowl Management Plan signed by the Minister of the Environment for Canada and the Secretary of the Interior for the United States in May 1986.

(7) The term "Plan Committee" means the North American Waterfowl Management Plan Committee established by the Appendix to the Plan defined in paragraph 6 of this section.

(8) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(9) The term "State" means the State fish and wildlife agency which shall be construed to mean any department, or any division of any department of another name, of a State that is empowered under its laws to exercise the functions ordinarily exercised by a State fish and wildlife agency.

(10) The term "wetlands conservation project" means—

(A) the obtaining of a real property interest in lands or waters including water rights, if the obtaining of such interest is subject to terms and conditions that will ensure that the real property will be administered for the long-term conservation of such lands and waters and the migratory birds and other fish and wildlife dependent thereon; or

(B) the restoration, management, or enhancement of wetland ecosystems and other habitat for migratory birds and other fish and wildlife species if such restoration, management, or enhancement is conducted on lands and waters that are administered for the long-term conservation of such lands and waters and the migratory birds and other fish and wildlife dependent thereon; and

(C) in the case of projects undertaken in Mexico, includes technical training and development of infrastructure necessary for the conservation and management of wetlands and studies on the sustainable use of wetland resources.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF NORTH AMERICAN WETLANDS CONSERVATION COUNCIL.

(a) COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP.—(1) There shall be established a North American Wetlands Conservation Council which shall consist of ten members who may not receive compensation as members of the Council. Of the Council members—

(A) six shall be the members of the United States section of the North American Waterfowl Management Plan Committee as established in the Plan;

(B) one shall be the Secretary of the Board of the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation appointed pursuant to section 3(2)(B) of the National Fish and Wildlife Establishment Act (16 U.S.C. 3702); and

(C) three shall be individuals who shall be appointed by the Secretary and who shall each represent a different nonprofit charitable organization which is actively participating in the carrying out of the wetlands conservation projects under this Act, the Plan, or the Agreement.

(2) The Secretary shall appoint an alternate member of the Council who shall be knowledgeable and experienced in matters relating to fish, wildlife, and wetlands conservation and who shall perform the duties of a Council member appointed under subsection (a)(1)(C) of this section—

(A) until a vacancy referred to in subsection (b)(3) of this section is filled; or

(B) in the absence of such a member from any meeting of the Council.

(b) APPOINTMENT AND TERMS.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the term of office of a member of the Council appointed under subsection (a)(1)(C) of this section is three years.

(2) Of the members first appointed under subsection (a)(1)(C) of this section after the date of enactment of this Act, one shall be appointed for a term of one year, one shall be appointed for a term of two years, and one shall be appointed for a term of three years.

(3) Whenever a vacancy occurs among members of the Council appointed under subsection (a)(1)(C) of this section, the Secretary shall appoint an individual in accordance with that subsection for the remainder of the applicable term.

(c) EX OFFICIO COUNCIL MEMBERS.—The Secretary is authorized and encouraged to include as ex officio nonvoting members of the Council representatives of—

(1) the Federal, Provincial, territorial, or State government agencies of Canada and Mexico which are participating actively in carrying out one or more wetlands conservation projects under this Act, the Plan, or the Agreement;

(2) the Environmental Protection Agency and other appropriate Federal agencies, which are participating actively in carrying out one or more wetlands conservation projects under this Act, the Plan, or the Agreement; and

(3) nonprofit charitable organizations and native American interests, including tribal organizations, which are participating actively in one or more wetlands conservation projects under this Act, the Plan, or the Agreement.

(d) CHAIRMAN.—The Chairman shall be elected by the Council members for a three-year term, except that the first elected chairman may serve a term of less than three years.

(e) QUORUM.—A majority of the membership of the Council shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

(f) MEETINGS.—The Council shall meet at the call of the Chairman at least once a year. Council meetings shall be open to the public. If a Council member appointed under subsection (a)(1)(C) of this section misses three consecutive regularly scheduled meetings, the Secretary may remove that individual in accordance with subsection (b)(3).

(g) COORDINATOR.—The Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service shall designate an employee of the Service—

(1) who shall be educated and experienced in the principles of fish, wildlife, and wetlands conservation;

(2) who shall be responsible, with assistance from the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, for the administration of this Act; and

(3) who shall be compensated with the funds available under section 8(a)(1) for administering this Act.

SEC. 5. APPROVAL OF WETLANDS CONSERVATION PROJECTS.

(a) CONSIDERATION BY THE COUNCIL.—The Council shall recommend wetlands conservation projects to the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission based on consideration of—

(1) the extent to which the wetlands conservation project fulfills the purposes of this Act and the goals of the Plan or the Agreement;

(2) the availability of sufficient non-Federal moneys to carry out any wetlands conservation project and to match Federal contributions in accordance with the requirements of section 8(b) of this Act;

(3) the extent to which any wetlands conservation project represents a partnership among public agencies and private entities;

(4) the consistency of any wetlands conservation project in the United States with the National Wetlands Priority Conservation Plan developed under section 301 of the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act (16 U.S.C. 3921);

(5) the extent to which any wetlands conservation project would aid the conservation of migratory nongame birds, other fish and wildlife, and species that are listed, or candidates to be listed, as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.);

(6) the substantiality of the character and design of the wetlands conservation project; and

(7) the recommendations of any partnerships among public agencies and private entities in Canada, Mexico, or the United States which are participating actively in carrying out one or more wetlands conservation projects under this Act, the Plan, or the Agreement.

(b) RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION COMMISSION.—The Council shall submit to the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission and appropriate Committees by January 1 of each year, a description, including estimated costs, of the wetlands conservation projects which the Council has considered under subsection (a) of this section and which it recommends, in order of priority, that the Commission approve for Federal funding under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)) as amended by this Act.

(c) COUNCIL REPRESENTATION ON COMMISSION.—The Chairman of the Council shall elect one Council member of United States citizenship to serve along with him as ex officio members of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission for the purposes of considering and voting down wetlands conservation projects recommended by the Council.

(d) CONSIDERATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Commission, along with the two members of the Council referred to in subsection (c), is authorized to consider and approve or reject any wetland conservation project recommended by the Council. If the Commission approves any wetland conservation project, Federal funding shall be made available under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)), as amended by this Act. If the Commission rejects any wetland conservation project recommended by the Council, the Commission shall provide the Council and the appropriate Committees with a written statement explaining its rationale for the rejection.

(e) COUNCIL PROCEDURES.—The Council shall establish practices and procedures for the carrying out of its functions under subsections (a) and (b) of this section. The procedures shall include requirements that—

(1) a quorum of the Council must be present before any business may be transacted; and

(2) a recommendation referred to in subsection (b) of this section may be adopted only by the affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of all members present and voting.

SEC. 6. CONDITIONS RELATING TO WETLANDS CONSERVATION PROJECTS.

(A) PROJECTS IN THE UNITED STATES.—(1) Subject to the allocation requirements of section 8(a)(2) and the limitations on Federal contributions under section 8(b) of this Act, the Secretary shall assist in carrying out wetlands conservation projects in the United States, which have been approved by the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission with the Federal funds made available under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)), as amended by this Act.

(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), any lands or waters or interests therein acquired in whole or in part by the Secretary with the Federal funds made available under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)), as amended by this Act, to carry out wetlands conservation projects shall be included in the National Wildlife Refuge System.

(3) In lieu of including in the National Refuge System any lands or waters or interests therein acquired under this Act, the Secretary may, in concurrence with the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, convey without cost to a State, or to another public agency or other entity, any real property interest acquired in whole or in part with the Federal funds made available under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)), as amended by this Act, upon a finding by the Secretary that the real property interests can be better managed if they are not retained in the National Wildlife Refuge System. Any real property interest conveyed pursuant to this paragraph shall be subject to such terms and conditions that will ensure that the interest will be administered for the long-term conservation of such lands and waters and the migratory birds and other fish and wildlife dependent thereon.

(b) PROJECTS IN CANADA OR MEXICO.—Subject to ihe allocation requirements of section 8(a)(1) and the limitations on Federal contributions under section 8(b) of this Act, the Secretary shall grant or otherwise provide the Federal funds made available under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)), as amended by this Act, to public agencies and other entities for the purpose of assisting them in carrying out wetlands conservation projects in Canada or Mexico that have been approved by the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission; Provided, That the grant recipient shall have been identified in the project description accompanying the recommendation from the Council and approved by the Commission. The Secretary may only grant or otherwise provide Federal funds if the grant or provision is subject to terms and conditions that will ensure that any real property interest acquired in whole or in part, or enhanced, managed, or restored with such Federal funds will be administered for the long-term conservation of such lands and waters and the migratory birds and other fish and wildlife dependent thereon. Real property and interests in real property acquired pursuant to this subsection shall not become part of the National Wildlife Refuge System. Acquisitions of real property and interests in real property carried out pursuant to this subsection shall not be subject to any provision of Federal law governing acquisitions of property for inclusion in the National Wildlife Refuge System.

SEC. 7. AMOUNTS AVAILABLE TO CARRY OUT THIS ACT.

(a) AID IN WILDLIFE RESTORATION.—(1) Section 3 of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b), is amended—

(A) by inserting "(a)" before "An amount" in the first sentence thereof; and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest in interest-bearing obligations of the United States such portion of the fund as is not, in the Secretary's judgment, required for meeting a current year's withdrawals. For purposes of such investment, the Secretary of the Treasury may—

"(A) acquire obligations at the issue price and purchase outstanding obligations at the market price; and

"(B) sell obligations held in the fund at the market price.

"(2) The interest on obligations held in the fund—

"(A) shall be credited to the fund;

"(B) constitute the sums available for allocation by the Secretary under section 8 of the North American Wetlands Conservation Act; and

"(C) shall become available for apportionment under this Act at the beginning of Fiscal Year 2006.".

(2) Section 4(a) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669c), is amended by inserting "(excluding interest accruing under section 3(b))" after "revenues" in the first sentence thereof.

(3) The amendments made by this subsection of this Act take effect October 1, 1989.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—In addition to the amounts made available under subsection (a) of this section, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Interior for purposes of allocation under section 8 of this Act not to exceed $15,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993.

(c) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Sums made available under this section shall be available until expended.

SEC. 8. ALLOCATION OF AMOUNTS AVAILABLE TO CARRY OUT THIS ACT.

(a) ALLOCATIONS.—Of the sums available to the Secretary for any fiscal year under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)), as amended by this Act, which can be matched with non-Federal moneys in accordance with the requirements of subsection (b), such amount considered necessary by the Secretary (but not more than 4 percent) is available to defray the costs of administering this Act during such fiscal year. Of the remaining funds—

(1) such percentage of that sum (but at least 40 percent and not more than 70 percent thereof) as is considered appropriate by the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, shall be allocated by the Secretary to carry out approved wetlands conservation projects in Canada and Mexico in accordance with section 6(b) of this Act; and

(2) the remainder of such sum after paragraph (1) is applied shall be allocated by the Secretary to carry out approved wetlands conservation projects in the United States in accordance with section 6 of this Act.

(3) Over a period of five years the average amount allocated to projects in Canada and Mexico pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be at least 50 percent of the total amount allocated pursuant to this subsection.

(b) FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION FOR PROJECTS.—The Federal moneys allocated under section (a) of this section for any fiscal year to carry out approved wetlands conservation projects shall be used for the payment of not to exceed 50 percent of the total United States contribution costs of such projects, or may be used for payment of 100 percent of the costs of such projects located on Federal lands and waters, including the acquisition of inholdings within such lands and waters. The non-Federal share of the United States contribution to the costs of such projects may not be derived from Federal grant programs.

(c) PARTIAL PAYMENTS.—(1) The Secretary may from time to time make payments to carry out approved wetlands conservation projects as such projects progress, but such payments, including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the Federal pro rata share of any such project in conformity with subsection (b) of this section.

(2) The Secretary may enter into agreements to make payments on an initial portion of an approved wetlands conservation project and to agree to make payments on the remaining Federal share of the costs of such project from subsequent allocations if and when they become available. The liability of the United States under such an agreement is contingent upon the continued availability of funds for the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 9. DEPOSIT OF LAW ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDS INTO FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), all amounts received by the United States in the form of fines, penalties, and proceeds of seizures and forfeitures resulting from law enforcement activities of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service shall be deposited into the separate fund provided for by section 401(a) of the Act of June 15, 1935 (commonly referred to as the "Refuge Revenue Sharing Act"; 16 U.S.C. 715s(a)), for use in accordance with that Act.

(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to—

(1) amounts used for paying rewards and costs of temporary care under section 11(d) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1540(d)); and

(2) amounts required by section 11(d) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1540(d)) to be deposited into the cooperative endangered species conservation fund established by section 6(i) of that Act (16 U.S.C. 1535(i)).

SEC. 10. RESTORATION, MANAGEMENT, AND PROTECTION OF WETLANDS AND HABITAT FOR MIGRATORY BIRDS ON FEDERAL LANDS.

The head of each Federal agency responsible for acquiring, managing, or disposing of Federal lands and waters shall, to the extent consistent with the mission of the agency and existing statutory authorities, cooperate with the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service to restore, protect, and enhance the wetland ecosystems and other habitats for migratory birds, fish, and wildlife within those lands and waters. When considering land disposal alternatives, the head of the agency shall give priority to the transfer of real property interests for conservation purposes that would further the purposes of this Act and the goals of the Plan and the Agreement.

SEC. 11. REPORTS TO CONGRESS.

The Secretary shall report to the appropriate Committees of Congress on the implementation of this Act. The report shall include:

(a) A biennial assessment of—

(1) the estimated number of acres of wetlands and habitat for waterfowl and other migratory birds that were restored, protected, or enhanced during such two-year period by Federal, State, and local agencies and other entities in the United States, Canada, and Mexico;

(2) trends in the population size and distribution of North American migratory birds; and

(3) the status of the efforts to establish agreements with nations in the Western Hemisphere pursuant to section 17.

(b) An annual assessment of the status of wetlands conservation projects, including an accounting of expenditures by Federal, State, and other United States entitles, and expenditures by Canadian and Mexican sources to carry out these projects.

SEC. 12. REVISIONS TO THE PLAN.

The Secretary shall, in 1991 and at five-year intervals thereafter, undertake with the appropriate officials of Canada to revise the goals and other elements of the Plan in accordance with the information required under section 11 and with the other provisions of this Act. The Secretary shall invite appropriate officials of Mexico to participate in any revisions of the Plan made pursuant to this section.

SEC. 13. RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER AUTHORITIES.

(a) ACQUISITION OF LANDS AND WATERS.—Nothing in this Act affects, alters, or modifies the Secretary's authorities, responsibilities, obligations, or powers to acquire lands or waters or interests therein under any other statute.

(b) MITIGATION.—The Federal funds made available under this Act and section 3(b) of the Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669b(b)), as amended by this Act, may not be used for fish and wildlife mitigation purposes under the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act (16 U.S.C. 661 et seq.) or the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-662; 100 Stat. 4235).

SEC. 14. ADDITION OF EPA ADMINISTRATOR TO MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION COMMISSION.

Section 2 of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 715a) is amended by striking "the Secretary of Transportation," and inserting in lieu thereof "the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency,".

SEC. 15. LIMITATION ON ASSESSMENTS AGAINST MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION FUND.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, only those personnel and administrative costs directly related to acquisitions of real property shall be levied against the Migratory Bird Conservation Account.

SEC. 16. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO THE MIGRATORY BIRD TREATY ACT.

Section 2 of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act (16 U.S.C. 703) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" after "1936,"; and

(2) by inserting after "1972" the following: "and the convention between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the conservation of migratory birds and their environments concluded November 19, 1976."

SEC. 17. OTHER AGREEMENTS.

(a) The Secretary shall undertake with the appropriate officials of nations in the Western Hemisphere to establish agreements, modeled after the Plan or the Agreement, for the protection of migratory birds identified in section 13(a)(5) of the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act of 1980 (16 U.S.C. 2912(a)). When any such agreements are reached, the Secretary shall make recommendations to the appropriate Committees on legislation necessary to implement the agreements.

(b) Section 13(a) of the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 2912(a)) is amended by striking "and" after "U.S.C. 1531 to 1543);" and striking "necessary." and inserting "necessary; and" and adding at the end the following:

"(5) identify lands and waters in the United States and other nations in the Western Hemisphere whose protection, management, or acquisition will foster the conservation of species, subspecies, and populations of migratory nongame birds, including those identified in paragraph (3)."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DAVIS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 2587 is to authorize funds for conservation projects in accordance with U.S. obligations under the North American Waterfowl Management Plan. Both the bill, and the agreement upon which it is based, rely on cooperation not only between the Federal Governments involved, but among State and provincial governments, conservation groups, sportspeople and private landholders, as well.

The North American Waterfowl Management Plan is the largest and most ambitious international wetlands protection program ever undertaken. Its goal is to virtually double the population of waterfowl on our continent by the year 2000, thereby restoring them to the level of 15 years ago.

To achieve this, the plan calls for the protection, restoration, and enhancement of more than 5.5 million acres of wetlands, at a cost of $1.5 billion over the next decade and a half. We will meet that private tag through a combination of Government appropriations, private contributions, and interest on excise tax receipts from the sale of sporting arms and ammunition.

H.R. 2587 is supported by the administration. It was drafted, in large measure by Mr. DAVIS of Michigan and Mr. CONTE of my own State. And it reflects, as well the hard work of conservation groups around the country such as Ducks Unlimited, the Nature Conservancy, and the International Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies, who will act as partners with the Federal Government in fulfilling the purposes of the act.

In summary, the bill is important environmentally, recreationally, and diplomatically. It is fiscally sound. And it well deserves the support of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2587, a bill that is aimed at rebuilding waterfowl numbers by restoring, protecting, and improving millions of acres of habitat in the United States and Canada.

Earlier this year, I introduced H.R. 2322, along with Chairman JONES, of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, DON YOUNG, PORTER GROSS, ARLAN STANGELAND, and LINDSAY THOMAS, to provide a commitment to make available a portion of the funding that is called for under the North American Waterfowl Management Plan. This agreement between the United States and Canada encourages partnerships among public agencies and private interest groups to protect, enhance, restore, and manage habitats for migratory birds and other fish and wildlife in North America.

Our friends SILVIO CONTE and JOHN DINGELL have also introduced legislation addressing this issue and I appreciate that we have been able to work cooperatively together with them, along with Chairman JONES and Congressman STUDDS to bring to this body a bill that will implement the North American Waterfowl Management Plan.

Mr. Speaker, President Bush earlier this year at the Ducks Unlimited Sixth Annual International Waterfowl Symposium stated his position concerning this issue. Referring to the bills that had been introduced in Congress, the President said:

The basic thrust of the legislation is sound. I look forward to signing a bill to conserve North American wetlands this year.

Mr. Speaker, today, our actions will move us one step closer to putting a bill on the President's desk for him to sign. H.R. 2587 is a good compromise and I ask my colleagues to support the adoption of the bill.

□ 1240

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations, and a strong supporter of this bill.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the North American Wetlands Conservation Act, as amended by the committee and presented to the House here today.

I want to commend Chairman STUDDS, my colleague from Massachusetts, for his leadership and interest in this important environmental legislation. His expeditious consideration of this bill in subcommittee and his work to see it through the full committee bring us several steps closer to seeing this program a reality.

Both he and WALTER JONES, chairman of the full committee, deserve the gratitude and appreciation of sportsmen across the country for their assistance in this effort.

I am also grateful to my good friend BOB DAVIS, the ranking member of the full committee, for his leadership and guidance on this issue. Throughout the process of formulating this legislation, BOB DAVIS has contributed a great deal, and as usual he has played a vital role in moving forward an important environmental program.

Mr. Speaker, the Conte-Davis-Dingell-Jones bill was conceived and driven by two disturbing and related environmental threats: Disappearing wetlands and a dramatic decline in the Nation's waterfowl populations. For me personally, I view it as a tragedy, as a disaster with far-reaching and possibly irreversible consequences.

Working with my good friend JOHN DINGELL, I've seen the devastation first hand as a member of the Migratory Bird Commission for the past 25 years. During that time, the Commission spent $486 million to protect over 2.4 million acres in fee and easement.

Yet, wetland loss during that same period totaled 8.7 million acres. That's an alarming loss of 350,000 acres per year for the lower 48 States.

A similar decline is reflected in North American waterfowl populations.

From a high in 1955, Mr. Speaker, I ask to put the statistics in the RECORD at this point:

TABLE 1.—Duck Breeding Populations in North America, 1955–89, based on areas with comparable annual surveys

[In thousands]

Year	Population
1955	44,691
1956	46,679

The estimated duck breeding populations on the continent decreased by 36 percent. This downward trend in North America's waterfowl population has a direct and significant economic impact, and more importantly, this decline is a readily visable indicator of an environmental crisis extending beyond hunting interests.

To address this serious threat and to arrest the mounting wetland losses, this legislation was introduced to implement the North American Waterfowl Plan, an international cooperative agreement designed to mount a continental effort using all resources available, including the financial support and expertise of the private sector.

Basically, three broad principles form the foundation and justification for this bill.

First, the bill provides the resources necessary to implement the plan, using investment proceeds from the Pittsman-Robinson Fund and authorizing direct Federal appropriations.

Second, the bill provides a coherent and efficient framework for implementing projects under the plan. And I should note here that the approval process in the Conte bill differs somewhat from the Mitchell approach. All projects funded under the plan must be approved by the Migratory Bird Commission, a panel with over 50 years of experience in the business of preserving and restoring wetlands. And the substitute provides that all projects rejected by the Commission be accompanied by a written explanation for that rejection.

Third, this bill provides for State, private, and international input into the process of implementing the plan. Again, the Conte bill was modified slightly to address concerns raised by private and State organizations.

The bill as amended creates an "advisory council", structured similar to the "advisory committee" in the Conte bill. However, two members of that "advisory council" instead of one will sit as voting members of the Migratory Bird Commission for the purpose of considering these projects.

This change recognizes the importance of having direct and active participation by these nonprofit groups and the States in the decisionmaking process, especially since non-Federal resources will account for at least half of each project funded.

Mr. Speaker, the North American Wetlands Conservation Act implements an important environmental program, one designed to arrest the decline in wetlands and the decrease in waterfowl populations. It's also a unique program because the private sector plays such a crucial role in it success.

I urge the House to unanimously approve this measure to give a vote of confidence to these private groups and to send a clear and an encouraging message to our international partners, Canada and Mexico.

Again, I cannot express the gratitude I have in my heart today to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DAVIS] and all, for this bill. I just hope I am around here in the year 2000 to see the effects and the harvest of this bill.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] be here around the year 2000, and I want to salute the gentleman's preeminence in this field.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2587, the North American Wetlands Conservation Act, which was introduced by my good friend and colleague, Congressman SILVIO CONTE, of Massachusetts, and I and cosponsored along with many others who are concerned about the future of our wetland resources.

The primary focus of H.R. 2587 is to deal with the alarming loss of our Nation's wetland resources and the resulting decline in waterfowl populations. Protecting our wetland resources and ensuring our waterfowl populations remain stable and healthy is a goal I have been concerned with for most of the years I have served in Congress. Congress has attempted to protect these invaluable resources by enacting a number of conservation laws, including the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act, the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act, laws improving and enhancing wetland acquisition programs, extending and funding the wetland loan account, and increasing the price of "duck stamps" to create more revenue for land acquisition.

My good friend and colleague, Congressman CONTE, and I have been members of the Migatory Bird Conservation Commission for quite a number of years. The Commission is responsible for approving the acquisition of hundreds of thousands of acres of wetland resources throughout the Nation and is fully aware of the need for the implementation of constructive programs such as the North American Waterfowl Plan and increased funding for the acquisition of these critical natural resources.

Wetlands are vitally important to wildlife, fisheries, and other aquatic resources. They sustain nearly one-third of the Nation's endangered and threatened species. Millions of waterfowl and shorebirds rely on wetlands for wintering and breeding. Commercial fisheries provide key habitat for 60 to 90 percent of U.S. commercial fish harvests. Wetlands also are essential to reducing flood damage, preventing erosion, filtering sediment, and mitigating pollution.

The current statistics relating to wetland loss are alarming. Wetlands, which constitute only 5 percent of the land area of the United States, are estimated to have been reduced by more than 50 percent in the continental United States since the founding of this Nation. These wetlands continue to disappear at a rate of between 300,000 and 450,000 acres each year. In only a 20-year period between 1950 and 1970 about 11 million acres of swamps and marshes were destroyed, for an annual loss averaging 458,000 acres.

People keep asking why duck populations are disappearing. The linkage between the decline in duck breeding populations and the destruction of our Nation's wetlands is clear. In 1956, duck breeding population was greater than 46,600,000. This year, that level is projected to drop to under 29,000,000.

The most recent and extensive wetland losses have taken place in California, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Florida and can be linked to the severe decline of migratory waterfowl, particularly several species of ducks which have declined almost 50 percent from the 1970's.

This massive loss of wetland resources is not just a problem related to the United States. Because migratory waterfowl know no geographic boundaries, our neighbor to the North—Canada—also suffers from the demise of wetland resources and waterfowl populations. This is why the United States and Canada in 1986 signed the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, establishing a comprehensive framework to deal with the problem of wetland destruction. It is this legislation that Congressman CONTE and I believe is the most effective means to implement the goals and principles set forth in that plan.

The bill has several important objectives:

The legislation would utilize investment proceeds from the Pittman-Robinson fund and general revenue to implement the plan.

The bill establishes an advisory committee to screen and evaluate projects and to recommend worthwhile projects to the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission for funding approval. In fact, in addition to its other work in protecting the Nation's wetland resources, the Commission has already acquired millions of acres of wetland resources that are contained in projects envisioned by the North American Waterfowl Plan.

For example, the Commission has already acquired over 19,000 acres in the Edwin B. Forsyth National Wildlife Refuge in New Jersey, 13,000 acres in the Chincoteague and Back Bay National Wildlife Refuges in Virginia, almost 6,000 acres in the Iroquois National Wildlife Refuge in New York, over 62,000 acres in six different refuges in North Carolina, almost 21,000 acres in the Upper Ouachite Refuge in Louisiana, over 38,000 acres in three refuges in California, and over 2 million acres in the North Central Prairie Pothold region.

The Advisory Committee established by H.R. 2587 will assist in the coordination and not the duplication of the Commission's work. Finally, the legislation will help expand the scope of input into wetland preservation from the local, State, and international levels.

H.R. 2587 is a good bill. It is a comprehensive bill. It is legislation worth adoption by the House and Senate.

The Migratory Bird Conservation Commission has had 50 years of experience in evaluating and approving the acquisition of thousands of wetland resources. It is a fine Commission which utilizes expertise from all over the Nation to assist in its work. Congressman CONTE and I have spent many years on the Commission dealing with the problems of wetland acquisition and we believe that the creation of an advisory committee, as contained in H.R. 2587, would serve as a critical adjunct to the Commission. This legislation will put in place a mechanism that will be of great benefit to saving our wetland resources. It is a bill worthy of careful consideration by the House—and I urge its adoption.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the North American Wetlands Conservation Act (H.R. 2587) and to commend my friend and colleague SILVIO CONTE, BOB DAVIS, and JOHN DINGELL for their leadership on this important conservation measure. Pennsylvania's 21st Congressional District contains an estimated 4 percent of all of the wetlands in the Mid-Atlantic States. Therefore, I have first hand knowledge of the need to preserve wetlands and to protect the North American waterfowl who can not survive without wetland habitats.

The mission of the bill, to ensure that the North American Waterfowl Plan has the funding and support necessary to accomplish its original goal, is critically important. We must live up to our treaty obligations with Canada and Mexico in accordance with the waterfowl plan and under the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance. Our adherence to the treaty will help ensure that we protect precious waterfowl habitat which are so dependent on wetland ecosystems in order to survive. The timing and speed with which this bill has been brought before this House is most appropriate. When we pass this legislation today, we will be sending President Bush the valuable support which he needs in his effort to promote his goal of a "no net loss" of wetlands for all of North America.

Mr. Speaker, for the RECORD I would also note that in addition to being a proud supporter of this measure today, it was my intent to become a cosponsor of both bills from which today's measure was crafted. Following the hearings which were held on H.R. 2587 and H.R. 2322 on July 25, 1989, I had requested to be added as a cosponsor to both bills. Unfortunately, due to a clerical oversight, my name was added only to H.R. 2322. Given the importance of this measure in the promotion of wetlands conservation, I feel it is important to record my intentions.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation and congratulate the committee and the sponsors of it.

Mr. Speaker, today we are losing wetland habitat by as much as 400,000 to 500,000 acres per year. Despite sincere efforts at every level of government, we will lose another half million acres of wetlands this year unless Congress and the President take action. H.R. 2587, introduced by Representatives SILVIO CONTE and JOHN DINGELL, would save key North American wetlands habitat which provide breeding and wintering grounds for migratory waterfowl. I support this worthwhile legislation, however, this may not be enough.

We used to think of wetlands as eyesores to be paved over. Now we know they are national treasures. But our governmental structures and policies have not caught up with our knowledge. we need a new and coherent policy that reflects current beliefs. This is why I introduced H.R. 1746, the Wetlands No Net Loss Act of 1989, which would implement President Bush's campaign pledge of "no net loss of wetlands" as a national goal.

President Bush also during his campaign rightly stated that environmental protection is a Federal, State, and local effort. H.R. 1746 approaches the issue of wetlands protection in just such a manner in that it establishes a network of Federal and State agencies and private corporations for the acquisition and preservation of wetlands within our Nation's borders.

Comprehenisve wetlands legislation is desperately needed if we are to preserve these areas for future generations. H.R. 1746 represents just such comprehensive wetlands protection legislation. I commend my colleagues for bringing the North American Wetlands Conservation Act to the floor, but I hope we can also get action on comprehensive wetlands legislation soon.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, everybody thinks that this is a good bill and that its purposes are essential at this time. However, I rise to express some budget concerns regarding H.R. 2587, the North American Wetlands Conservation Act.

This bill creates new budget authority of $1 million in fiscal year 1990 which was not anticipated in the fiscal year 1990 budget resolution. The spending in this bill increases to $9 million by fiscal year 1993. These amounts, although not large, will make it even more difficult to reach increasingly stringent Gramm-Rudman deficit targets in future years.

I also believe that the funding mechanism created by this bill, where unused trust fund balances are invested in government securities and the interest earned can be obligated without appropriation action, sets an undesirable precedent for possible future legislation. The interest earned on the trust fund balances, which can be directly spent and become an outlay of the Federal Government, is paid by Federal interest payments on the public debt.

Unfortunately, our deficit position, and our budget process has set committees scrambling to get around, under and over appropriations restrictions. Our committees, faced with needs they consider compelling, have tried to establish new entitlements, to levy new taxes disguised as fees, to expand uses of current trust funds, and a variety of other devices. The device in this bill, the automatic use of interest on the unused balances of the Pittman-Robertson trust funds, is clever, but a bad precedent.

Our Appropriations Committee has the jurisdictional responsibility to confirm the judgment of authorizing committees. It should retain that responsibility.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, H.R 2587 would implement the North American waterfowl management plan. The United States and Canada signed this agreement to protect and enhance habitat for migratory waterfowl. Waterfowl populations have declined drastically in recent years due primarily to the loss of wetland habitat. Therefore, it is crucial that we move quickly to do all that we can to preserve and enhance North America's wetlands to save our waterfowl and many other wetlands dependent species. This bill, introduced by the Honorable SILVIO CONTE and cosponsored by Mr. DAVIS and myself, is a very important step in the right direction.

This bill would encourage joint venture initiatives between private conservation groups and State and Federal Governments in order to reverse the decline in waterfowl populations. Private groups including Ducks Unlimited, the Nature Conservancy, the Fish and Wildlife Foundation, and the International Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies have already contributed a great deal to this effort, and will continue to be active participants under this bill.

The plan implemented by this bill calls for the protection, restoration and enhancement of more than 5.5 million acres of wetlands in the United States and Canada combined, making this plan the most far-reaching international wetlands protection program undertaken thus far. Only with this kind of a coordinated and comprehensive effort can we hope to save our waterfowl and other species dependent upon wetlands before it is too late.

I am also pleased that the bill would provide additional resources to fulfill our commitment to local jurisdictions where national wildlife refuge lands are located under the Refuge Revenue Sharing Act. These funds alone will not be adequate to solve the growing shortfall problem, but will provide additional resources for the refuge revenue-sharing fund.

I would also like to take this opportunity to commend Mr. CONTE, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. STUDDS for their leadership in working together to develop this excellent bill which had broad bipartisan support in our committee. I urge all of my colleagues of join with me in voting for this measure to save North America's waterfowl and wetlands.

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2587, the North American Wetlands Conservation Act. Like its Senate counterpart, this important bill will help implement the North American waterfowl management plan, and as a result, save millions of acres of wetlands and other critical habitat for waterfowl and wildlife.

H.R. 2587 helps translate the words of the plan into action. It provides the resources and framework for acquiring lands and coordinating conservation efforts to meet the plan's goal. Broadly stated, the binational agreement between Canada and the United States has the goal of protecting and restoring about 5.5 million acres of wetlands and upland habitat to help restore the continent's declining waterfowl population to historic levels. It is an ambitious, but vitally important goal.

As a Minnesotan and avid outdoorsman, I am keenly aware of the need to protect wetlands and migratory waterfowl. The prairie pothole region, so integral to our efforts, provides critical habitat for waterfowl. We must take prudent measures to protect these areas while recognizing private property interests and other national goals.

Mr. Speaker, I understand the President has strongly endorsed the concepts in the House and Senate bills and pledged to help enact a public law in the near future. This is good news. Today's bill is critical to recovering the health of the continent's waterfowl and restoring their populations to earlier levels. It also bodes well for other legislative efforts in the area of wetlands protection generally.

The House Public Works and Transportation Committee is taking a comprehensive look at ways to protect and restore wetlands. H.R. 2587 is one key component in this effort, but we have so much more to do. Along with other committees, we look forward to implementing the President's and the national wetlands policy forum's goal of no net loss of wetlands.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2587 takes a small, but important step in that direction. I congratulate the other sponsors of the bill—particularly Congressmen CONTE and DAVIS—who were so instrumental in its development and encourage all my House colleagues to support it unanimously.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2587, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

DRUG AND ALCOHOL DEPENDENT OFFENDERS TREATMENT ACT OF 1989

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3007) to amend the Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978 to provide additional authorizations for appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3007

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. REAUTHORIZATION.

Section 4(a) of the Contract Services for Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment Act of 1978 is amended—

(1) by inserting "and the 7th paragraph of section 3672 of title 18, United States Code" after "purposes of this Act";

(2) by striking "; and" and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by striking the period at the end and inserting "; $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990; $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991; and $45,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1992.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 3007, which would reauthorize, for fiscal years 1990–92, appropriations for the contract services for Drug Dependent Offenders Act of 1978.

The purpose of the program is to identify and provide treatment and supervisory services to drug dependent Federal probationers, parolees, and persons on supervised release.

We know from studies conducted in the last several years that previously convicted criminals who are still abusing drugs are likely to repeat their criminal activities. We also know that when such persons are identified and receive treatment, they are much less likely to commit crimes.

The Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 contained an amendment developed in our committee which added authority for alcohol treatment to the legislation.

Urinalysis is the primary technique used to allow U.S. probation officers, who administer the program, to determine if a person under supervision has refrained from, continued, or returned to use of illegal drugs.

Depending upon the degree of drug testing and supervision deemed necessary, persons under supervision by reason of criminal conviction and prior drug usage are placed in one of three phases of drug testing and supervision. Clients move from one phase to another based on their record of remaining drug free.

The Administrative Office of U.S. Courts contracts with a laboratory for the urinalysis services needed for the program. Since 1984, more than 1.2 million specimens have been tested.

These tests routinely include testing for seven major categories of drugs—opiates, cocaine, amphetamines, barbituates, phencyclidine, methadone, and benzodiazepines. Twenty-one other drugs can be included as needed. Confirming tests are performed on all specimen which produce a presumptive positive text result.

Treatment services provided through the program include medical, educational, psychological and vocational services, and guidance, training, and vocational services.

These services are provided through a combination of probation staff, contract services, and no-cost community programs.

A recent 2-year study of some 4,000 persons who went through the program indicates that 50 percent completed the program with 12 months of clean tests and without revocation or reported new criminal activity, 40 percent terminated for continued drug use or failure to take part in the program, and only 8 percent terminated for new criminal activity.

The program is currently authorized at $26,000,000 for fiscal year 1989, and is funded at $16,000,000. H.R. 3007 would provide authorizations of $30 million for fiscal year 1990, $40 million for fiscal year 1991, and $45 million for fiscal year 1992.

These increases are needed for a number of reasons.

Drug testing, which constitutes about one-fourth of all program expenditures, is increasing substantially, with more than twice as many tests being conducted this year than there were 4 years ago.

Treatment services are becoming more expensive, especially with the explosion of crack cocaine usage, which is difficult if not impossible to treat on an out-patient basis.

Third, program levels have in the recent past been dictated by budget constraints, rather than by the actual needs in the various Federal court districts for testing and treatment.

Fourth, the addition of alcohol treatment to the program in 1986 has increased its cost.

The Drug Aftercare Program has proven successful, and I urge my colleagues to continue our support for it by approving the funding authorization contained in H.R. 3007.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the efforts of my colleague, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM], who is the ranking Republican on the subcommittee, for his work in reauthorizing this program.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good program. The full committee chairman is very, very supportive of the program, as is the ranking Republican, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I know of no opposition to the program. It has been very successful.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support H.R. 3007, the Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment Act of 1989. This legislation will reauthorize and increase funding for a program that serves as a necessary component of the struggle against drug abuse. Specifically, it authorizes the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to provide drug and alcohol testing and treatment of Federal offenders on probation, parole or supervised release.

It is clear that expansion of this program is necessary. The caseloads of the Federal courts have been increasing significantly for the last several years. The Administrative Office reports that during the 1980's drug related criminal cases have increased by 229 percent. Drug related offenses now account for about 24 percent of the criminal case filings of the district courts and 44 percent of all criminal trials. When you consider that probation officers are being trained in the identification of drug abusers, it is easy to understand why the number of drug dependent offenders in treatment rose from 4,784 on June 30, 1980, to 12,806 on March 31, 1989, an increase of 168 percent. The number of alcohol abusing offenders in treatment totaled 3,441. The number of persons under supervision is conservatively forecast to increase from 77,000 to 83,000 in fiscal year 1990 and 87,000 by fiscal year 1991. The number of persons in substance abuse treatment is expected to increase to 21,000 in fiscal year 1990 and 24,400 in fiscal year 1991.

Mr. Speaker, research studies have shown that the extent of criminality is directly affected by the criminals' drug use. It is therefore necessary in the interests of fighting crime that we have a strong treatment program. The link between crime and drugs makes continuance of the aftercare program essential.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this drug aftercare program is working. A recent 2-year study of nearly 4,000 terminations from the Substance Abuse Treatment Program showed that approximately 50 percent were terminated from treatment without any revocation or reported criminal activity, 39 percent were terminated for continued drug use of failure to attend treatment sessions or for other technical reasons, and only 8 percent were terminated for new criminal activity.

I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for his leadership on this matter.

□ 1300

I think this is a very important aspect for all of us to understand and appreciate.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I, too, support the legislation for the variety of reasons outlined by the chairman of the committee and by the ranking member.

It has two significant elements, in my judgment. First, an overall element that demonstrates that this legislation and other products of our subcommittee, the Subcommittee on Crime of the Committee on the Judiciary, chaired by the gentleman from New Jersey, is on a continuing pathway of improving and innovating and consolidating thoughts, ideas, and processes to fight the war on drugs. This is another peg in that system that we must continue to improve and to generate for the next generation, as it were.

So this can be looked at as one of those continuing efforts and will spur us on to even a more closer look at the drug treatment portion of the war on drugs.

The second part that I just wish to comment again on, pursuant to what has already been said, is that if ever there was a kind of a program that shows statistically that we can do something about recidivism, the repeat offender, the one who did his first dirty deed because of drugs, then this program with its ultimate statistical results can show a slowdown of at least that most feared element of our criminal justice system, the recidivist, who as soon as he gets back out in society will redo the infamous deeds that brought him into trouble in the first place.

We know now through the body of testimony and statistics that we have in drug treatment that the one who became a criminal because of drugs may have a better chance if we treat him correctly and give him treatment will be less likely to be a repeat offender than the ordinary rank and file violent criminal.

So from that standpoint, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to support the legislation and to urge its quick passage.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for taking the time to join us in urging the passage of this legislation.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3007, the Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment Act of 1989. I commend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], the chairman of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime, for his leadership on this issue.

The legislation would reauthorize a Federal program to treat drug and alcohol dependent offenders of $30 million in fiscal year 1990, $40 million in fiscal year 1991 and $45 million in fiscal year 1992. The program provides for periodic drug testing of Federal offenders on parole, and offers various forms of treatment to help substance abusing offenders overcome their dependency.

We cannot allow drug abusing criminals to come in and out of the criminal justice system without an effort to help them break free of drugs. Any parolee who has not overcome his or her substance abuse problem is more than likely to return to a life of crime and drug abuse. Tough measures, including regular drug testing for parolees and treatment and rehabilitative programs for those who have become addicted, are critical elements of an effective and humane criminal justice system. Accordingly, I offer my full support for this important measure.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we consider H.R. 3007, Drug and Alcohol Dependent Offenders Treatment Act of 1989. I am pleased to support this bill which has an important positive effect on the smooth functioning of our criminal justice system. I commend Chairman WILLIAM J. HUGHES, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, Crime Subcommittee, for his work on this bill. Chairman HUGHES is also a valuable member of the House Select Committee on Narcotics, and thus is uniquely situated to combat the link between drugs and crime.

Specifically, H.R. 3007, reauthorizes the Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978, for 3 more fiscal years, 1990–92. The Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978, authorizes the Administrative Office of the United States Courts to provide drug and alcohol testing and treatment for Federal offenders on probation, parole, or supervises release.

The goals of the Substance Abuse Treatment Program are the identification of substance abusing Federal offenders and the provision of a treatment alternative for these offenders. An essential component of the program is that every person being tested for drug dependency under the program is closely monitored by urine surveillance. Urinalysis is an aid to treatment that enables the officer to determine whether a person under supervision has refrained from, continued, or returned to the use of controlled substances.

Mr. Speaker, the need to provide drug abuse treatment services for Federal offenders is apparent when it is remembered that during the 1980's drug related criminal cases has increased by 229 percent. Drug related offenses now account for about 24 percent of criminal case filings of the district courts and 44 percent of all criminal trials.

Statistics show that of the 77,000 persons currently under supervision of the Federal probation system, over 16,000—21 percent—have been identified as substance abusing offenders who are currently undergoing urine surveillance or treatment. The number of drug dependent offenders in treatment rose from 4,784 on June 30, 1980, to 12,806 on March 31, 1989, an increase of 168 percent.

Treatment services are provided by probation staff through available community programs that provide services at no additional cost to the Government and by over 600 treatment programs under contract to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. The contracts are awarded through a competitive process that involves hundreds of treatment facilities throughout the United States.

Mr. Speaker, research studies have shown that the extent of criminality is directly affected by the person's addiction status. A 1983 study of 354 heroin addicts in Baltimore, MD, showed that during a 9-year period these addicts averaged 2,000 crime-days per addict. When using drugs, the crime rate for this group was 4 to 6 times higher than when the group was not using drugs. When not addicted, this group committed 84 percent fewer crimes.

Mr. Speaker, as we provide more money for prison construction to house increasing numbers of inmates guilty of drug crimes, we must provide training for these inmates so that while they are in prison they learn a skill so that when they are released from confinement they can become productive members of society. Providing drug rehabilitation services to prison inmates is an essential part of that process.

I urge all my colleagues to vote for passage of H.R. 3007 so that Federal offenders on probation, parole, or supervised release can receive drug abuse treatment.

Mr. McCOLLUM. I have no more requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3007.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous material on H.R. 3007, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

MAJOR FRAUD ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1989

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 248) to amend title 18 of the United States Code to provide increased penalties for certain major frauds against the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 248

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Major Fraud Act Amendments of 1989".

SEC. 2. REWARD FOR WHISTLEBLOWERS.

(a) AMENDMENT TO TITLE 18.—Section 1031 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) In special circumstances and in his or her sole discretion, the Attorney General is authorized to make payments from funds appropriated to the Department of Justice to persons who furnish information relating to a possible prosecution under this section. The amount of such payment shall not exceed $250,000. Upon application by the Attorney General, the court may order that the Department shall be reimbursed for a payment from a criminal fine imposed under this section.

"(2) An individual is not eligible for such a payment if—

"(A) that individual is an officer or employee of a government agency who furnishes information or renders service in the performance of official duties;

"(B) that individual failed to furnish the information to the individual's employer prior to furnishing it to law enforcement authorities, unless the court determines the individual has justifiable reasons for that failure;

"(C) the furnished information is based upon public disclosure of allegations or transactions in a criminal, civil, or administrative hearing, in a congressional, administrative, or GAO report, hearing, audit or investigation, or from the news media unless the person is the original source of the information. For the purposes of this subsection, 'original source' means an individual who has direct and independent knowledge of the information on which the allegations are based and has voluntarily provided the information to the Government; or

"(D) that individual participated in the violation of this section with respect to which such payment would be made.

"(3) The failure of the Attorney General to authorize a payment shall not be subject to judicial review.".

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to contracts entered into on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 3 of the Major Fraud Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-700) and the amendment made by such section are repealed.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The repeal made by this section shall be deemed to be effective on the date of enactment of Public Law 100-700.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. HUGHES asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support S. 248, the major fraud act amendments of 1989. This bill rectifies two flaws, one substantive and the other technical, in the Major Fraud Act of 1988 (P.L. 100-700), which was passed during the last few days of the 100th Congress. As you may recall, the House version of the Major Fraud Act passed unanimously at both the subcommittee and full committee levels in the Judiciary Committee and passed the House by a vote of 419 to 0.

This bill grew out of hearings by the Subcommittee on Crime and a review of numerous other congressional, Department of Justice and Department of Defense investigations of procurement fraud over the last two decades. These investigations documented successive scandals in spare parts, overhead overcharges, malfunctioning equipment, product substitution and similar fraudulent acts that have been the grist of the never-ending stories of procurement fraud over the last decade.

Unfortunately, the problems persist—while all the details of the recent investigation involving defense consultants called operation ill wind are not yet available, so far 23 individuals and three major corporations have pled guilty to a number of different fraud counts associated with this far-reaching fraud. This is a reminder that we must continue to send strong messages that we will not put up with this kind of activity which costs the U.S. Treasury billions of dollars each year.

We did in fact send such a message last October. The Major Fraud Act of 1988 established a new specific Federal procurement fraud offense involving contracts of $1 million or more. Unfortunately, the bill as finally enacted did not contain a House provision which would have established a new system of rewards of up to $250,000. These rewards would have been paid from the criminal fine to individuals who provide information leading to conviction under this statute. This provision is crucial to prosecutions in procurement fraud cases since one of the major deficiencies we found in past cases was the lack of sufficient information available to the prosecutors on these complex and often secretive transactions.

This year the Senate has already moved to correct this by passing S. 248 on April 5, 1989 by a vote of 82 to 16. S. 248 as it is before the committee today allows the Attorney General at his discretion and in special circumstances to make payments of up to $250,000 for information. The Attorney General may then request the court to reimburse the Department of Justice from criminal fines imposed under the major fraud statute. I believe that this version substantially meets the need we identified last year, and I support this compromise language which was worked out with the Department of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, it is a good bill. It is specifically targeted at major procurement fraud. As I indicated, it does cure one defect in the bill. In fact, it does carry forward what the House did last year in major part, and I want to commend my colleague once again, the ranking Reublican member on the subcommittee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM] for his work with us in the subcommittee, and in the full committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and others, in developing the bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is noncontroversial. It came out of the subcommittee and the full committee unanimously, and I would urge my colleagues to support the measure.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the gentleman from New Jersey and express my support for S. 248, a bill that amends the Major Fraud Act of 1988. As many will recall, last year, under the leadership of the gentleman from New Jersey, BILL HUGHES, Congress established a new offense prohibiting fraud in procurement contracts valuing more than $1 million in goods or services. This offense carries severe penalties both in the way of fines and prison sentences. This fraud act sent a strong message to those who do business with the Federal Government that fraudulent schemes will not be tolerated.

A provision included in the House bill that passed 419 to 0 last year established a reward for those who provided information leading to a successful prosecution of this offense. This provision was dropped by the Senate during its consideration of the Major Fraud Act. Earlier this year, the Senators who were concerned about this reward provision last year, resolved their problems in consultation with the Attorney General, and S. 248 was passed by that body.

I support S. 248 because the language of the reward provision contains sufficient safeguards to discourage misuse by enterprising whistleblowers. Last year several representatives of industry approached me and expressed concerns that a reward provision could undermine the efforts many corporations were undertaking to establish self-governing mechanisms. Through employee education and information hotlines, senior management has attempted to identify fraud before it matures into a criminal offense. I felt strongly that these efforts should be supported by Congress. Therefore, I worked with Mr. HUGHES in subcommittee to establish a requirement that employees notify their employers of the evidence relating to fraud before they approach the Federal Government. I am pleased to report that this condition is also included S. 248.

Mr. Speaker, it must be clear that this legislation is not intended to reward any employee who could have prevented a fraud from occurring if he or she had acted immediately by bringing certain facts to the attention of company officials. Those who allow fraudulent acts to take place in the hope that they will collect rewards will be disappointed because it is the intent of this legislation that such persons not receive a reward. Furthermore, this bill contains other conditions which are designed to discourage irresponsible reward-seekers. It is our intention that the Attorney General carefully decide when a reward is appropriate in the light of the conditions expressed in this bill.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, there are cases where rewards are necessary. Procurement fraud is a major problem as we all know, particularly fraud that involves product substitution. This is the practice of substituting cheaper, inferior quality goods for those which were ordered by the Government. Obviously, this creates a serious risk of injury to military personnel. If rewards will help reduce this criminal conduct, then I fully support them.

I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for his expeditious treatment of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 248.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on S. 248, the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

CHILD NUTRITION AND WIC REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 260) to agree to the Senate amendment to H.R. 24, with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 260

Resolved, That, upon the adoption of this resolution, the bill (H.R. 24), to amend the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 and the National School Lunch Act to revise and extend certain authorities contained in such Acts, and for other purposes, and the same hereby is taken from the Speaker's table to the end that the Senate amendment to the bill be, and the same hereby is, agreed to, with an amendment as follows:

TITLE I—PROGRAMS UNDER THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT AND THE CHILD NUTRITION ACT OF 1966

PART A—PROGRAMS UNDER THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT

SEC. 101. TYPES OF MILK TO BE INCLUDED IN SCHOOL LUNCHES.

(a) ELIMINATION OF DUPLICATE PROVISIONS.—Section 9(a) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1758(a)), as similarly amended first by section 322 of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-500 (100 Stat. 1783-361), later by section 322 of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-591 (100 Stat. 3341-364), and later by section 4202 of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661), is amended to read as if only the latest amendment was enacted.

(b) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Paragraph (2) of section 9(a) of the National School Lunch Act (as amended by subsection (a) of this section) (42 U.S.C. 1758(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Lunches served by schools participating in the school lunch program under this Act shall offer students fluid whole milk and fluid unflavored lowfat milk.".

SEC. 102. EXTENSION OF SUMMER FOOD SERVICE PROGRAM FOR CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 13 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1761) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by amending subparagraph (C) of paragraph (3) to read as follows:

"(C)(i) conduct a regularly scheduled food service for children from areas in which poor economic conditions exist;

"(ii) conduct a regularly scheduled food service primarily for homeless children; or

"(iii) qualify as camps; and";

(B) in paragraph (4)—

(i) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (D);

(ii) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting "; and"; and

(iii) by inserting after subparagraph (E) the following new subparagraph:

"(F) private nonprofit organizations eligible under paragraph (7).";

(C) in paragraph (7)—

(i) by amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), private nonprofit organizations, as defined in subparagraph (B) (other than organizations eligible under paragraph (1)), shall be eligible for the program under the same terms and conditions as other service institutions.";

(ii) in subparagraph (B)—

(I) by amending clause (i) to read as follows:

"(i)(I) serve a total of not more than 2,500 children per day at not more than 5 sites in any urban area, with not more than 300 children being served at any 1 site (or, with a waiver granted by the State under standards developed by the Secretary, not more than 500 children being served at any 1 site); or

"(II) serve a total of not more than 2,500 children per day at not more than 20 sites in any rural area, with not more than 300 children being served at any 1 site (or, with a waiver granted by the State under standards developed by the Secretary, not more than 500 children being served at any 1 site);";

(II) in clause (ii), by inserting "or a school participating in the school lunch program under this Act" after "university)"; and

(III) in clause (v), by inserting "or families" after "children"; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), no private nonprofit organization (other than organizations eligible under paragraph (1)) may participate in the program in an area where a school food authority or a local, municipal, or county government participated in the program before such organization applied to participate until the expiration of the 1-year period beginning on the date that such school food authority or local, municipal, or county government terminated its participation in the program.

"(ii) Clause (i) shall not apply if the appropriate State agency or regional office of the Department of Agriculture (whichever administers the program in the area concerned), after consultation with the school food authority or local, municipal, or county government concerned, determines that such school food authority or local, municipal, or county government would have discontinued its participation in the program regardless of whether a private nonprofit organization was available to participate in the program in such area.";

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, any higher education institution that receives reimbursements under the program for meals and meal supplements served to low-income children under the National Youth Sports Program is eligible to receive reimbursements for not more than 2 meals or 1 meal and 1 meal supplement per day for not more than 30 days for each child participating in a National Youth Sports Program operated by such institution during the months other than May through September. The program under this paragraph shall be administered within the State by the same State agency that administers the program during the months of May through September.

"(B) Children participating in National Youth Sports Programs operated by higher education institutions, and such higher education institutions, shall be eligible to participate in the program under this paragraph without application.

"(C) Higher education institutions shall be reimbursed for meals and meal supplements served under this paragraph—

"(i) in the case of lunches and suppers, at the same rates as the payment rates established for free lunches under section 11; and

"(ii) in the case of breakfasts or meal supplements, at the same rates as the severe need payment rates established for free breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

"(D)(i) Meals for which a higher education institution is reimbursed under this paragraph shall fulfill the minimum nutritional requirements and meal patterns prescribed by the Secretary—

"(I) for meals served under the school lunch program under this Act, in the case of reimbursement for lunches or suppers; and

"(II) for meals served under the school breakfast program under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, in the case of reimbursement for breakfasts.

"(ii) The Secretary may modify the minimum nutritional requirements and meal patterns prescribed by the Secretary for meals served under the school breakfast program under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 for application to meal supplements for which a higher education institution is reimbursed under this paragraph.

"(E) The Secretary shall issue regulations governing the implementation, operation, and monitoring of programs receiving assistance under this paragraph that, to the maximum extent practicable, are comparable to those established for higher education institutions participating in the National Youth Sports Program and receiving reimbursements under the program for the months of May through September.";

(3) in the first sentence of subsection (l)(1), by inserting "(other than private nonprofit organizations eligible under subsection (a)(7))" after "Service institutions";

(4) by redesignating subsection (p) as subsection (r);

(5) by inserting after subsection (o) the following new subsections:

"(p) During the fiscal years 1990 and 1991, the Secretary and the States shall carry out a program to disseminate to potentially eligible private nonprofit organizations information concerning the amendments made by the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989 regarding the eligibility under subsection (a)(7) of private nonprofit organizations for the program established under this section.

"(q)(1) In addition to the normal monitoring of organizations receiving assistance under this section, the Secretary shall establish a system under which the Secretary and the States shall monitor the compliance of private nonprofit organizations with the requirements of this section and with regulations issued to implement this section.

"(2) Application forms or other printed materials provided by the Secretary or the States to persons who intend to apply to participate as private nonprofit organizations shall contain a warning in bold lettering explaining, at a minimum—

"(A) the criminal provisions and penalties established by subsection (o); and

"(B) the procedures for termination of participation in the program as established by regulations.

"(3) The Secretary shall require each State to establish and implement an ongoing training and technical assistance program for private nonprofit organizations that provides information on program requirements, procedures, and accountability. The Secretary shall provide assistance to State agencies regarding the development of such training and technical assistance programs.

"(4) In the fiscal year 1990 and each succeeding fiscal year, the Secretary may reserve for purposes of carrying out paragraphs (1) and (3) of this subsection not more than 1/2 of 1 percent of amounts appropriated for purposes of carrying out this section.

"(5) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'private nonprofit organization' has the meaning given such term in subsection (a)(7)(B).''; and

(6) in subsection (r) (as redesignated by paragraph (4) of this subsection), by striking "For" and all that follows through "1989," and inserting "For the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1977, and each succeeding fiscal year ending before October 1, 1994,".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than February 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue regulations to implement the amendments made by paragraphs (1), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a). Notwithstanding the provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, the Secretary of Agriculture may issue such regulations without providing notice or an opportunity for public comment.

(2) NATIONAL YOUTH SPORTS PROGRAM.—(A) Subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D)(i) of section 13(c)(2) of the National School Lunch Act (as added by subsection (a)(2)(B) of this section) shall be effective as of October 1, 1989.

(B) Not later than February 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall—

(i) issue final regulations to implement subparagraph (D)(ii) of section 13(c)(2) of the National School Lunch Act (as added by subsection (a)(2)(B) of this section); and

(ii) issue final regulations under subparagraph (E) of such section.

(3) EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION.—The amendments made by subsection (a)(6) shall be effective as of October 1, 1989.

SEC. 103. EXTENSION OF COMMODITY DISTRIBUTION PROGRAM.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Subsection (a) of section 14 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1762a) is amended by striking "1989" and inserting "1994".

(b) ELIMINATION OF DUPLICATE PROVISIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 14(g) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1762a(g)), as similarly added first by section 363 of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-500 (100 Stat. 1783-368), later by section 363 of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-591 (100 Stat. 3341-371), and later by section 4403 of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661), and as then amended by section 2 of Public Law 100-356, is amended to read as if only the amendment made by section 4403 of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987, was enacted.

(2) COMPUTATION OF CASH COMPENSATION TO DISTRICTS UNDER PUBLIC LAW 100-356.—(A) Paragraph (3) of section 14(g) of the National School Lunch Act (as amended by paragraph (1) of this subsection) (42 U.S.C. 1762a(g)) is amended—

(i) by adding at the end of subparagraph (A) the following new sentences: "The Secretary, in computing losses sustained by any school district under the preceding sentence, shall base such computation on the actual amount of assistance received by such school district under this Act for the school year ending June 30, 1982, including—

"(i) the value of assistance in the form of commodities provided in addition to those provided pursuant to section 6(e) of this Act; and

"(ii) the value of assistance provided in the form of either cash or commodity letters of credit.

The Secretary may provide cash compensation under this subparagraph only to eligible school districts that submit applications for such compensation not later than May 1, 1988."; and

(ii) in subparagraph (B), by striking "$50,000" and inserting "such sums as may be necessary".

(B) The amendments made by subparagraph (A) shall take effect as if such amendments had been effective on June 28, 1988.

(c) COMPUTATION OF CASH COMPENSATION TO DISTRICTS.—Section 14(g)(3)(A) of the National School Lunch Act (as amended by subsection (b) of this section) (42 U.S.C. 1762a(g)(3)(A)) is amended by striking the second sentence and all that follows and inserting the following: "The Secretary, in computing losses sustained by any school district under the preceding sentence, shall base such computation on the difference between the value of bonus commodity assistance received by such school district under this Act for the school year ending June 30, 1983, and the value of bonus commodities received by such school district under this Act for the school year ending June 30, 1982. For the purposes of this subparagraph—

"(i) the term 'bonus commodities' means commodities provided in addition to commodities provided pursuant to section 6(e); and

"(ii) the term 'bonus commodity assistance' means assistance, in the form of bonus commodities, cash, or commodity letters of credit, provided in addition to assistance provided pursuant to section 6(e).

The Secretary may provide cash compensation under this subparagraph only to eligible school districts that submit applications for such compensation not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989. The Secretary shall, during the 45-day period beginning on October 1, 1990, complete action on any claim submitted under this subparagraph.".

SEC. 104. REPEAL OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL.

Section 15 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1763) is repealed.

SEC. 105. CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM.

(a) AMENDMENT TO HEADING.—The heading for section 17 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1766) is amended to read as follows:

"CHILD AND ADULT CARE FOOD PROGRAM".

(b) OTHER AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 17.—Section 17 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1766) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (C) of subsection (f)(3)—

(A) in the first sentence, by inserting before the period the following: "and expansion funds to finance the administrative expenses for such institutions to expand into low-income or rural areas";

(B) in the second sentence, by inserting "and expansion funds" after "start-up funds";

(C) in the third sentence, by inserting "and expansion funds" after "Start-up funds";

(D) in the fourth sentence, by inserting "and expansion funds" after "start-up funds";

(E) in the fifth sentence, by inserting "and expansion funds" after "start-up funds"; and

(F) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "Institutions that have received start-up funds may also apply at a later date for expansion funds.";

(2) in subsection (l)—

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "(l)"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The Secretary shall conduct demonstration projects to test innovative approaches to remove or reduce barriers to participation in the program established under this section regarding family or group day care homes that operate in low-income areas or that primarily serve low-income children. As part of such demonstration projects, the Secretary may provide grants to, or otherwise modify administrative reimbursement rates for, family or group day care home sponsoring organizations.

"(3) The Secretary and the States shall provide training and technical assistance to assist family and group day care home sponsoring organizations in reaching low-income children.";

(3) in subsection (p)—

(A) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following: "Lunches served by each such institution for which reimbursement is claimed under this section shall provide, on the average, approximately ⅓ of the daily recommended dietary allowance established by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences. Such institutions shall make reasonable efforts to serve meals that meet the special dietary requirements of participants, including efforts to serve foods in forms palatable to participants."; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6) The Governor of any State may designate to administer the program under this subsection a State agency other than the agency that administers the child care food program under this section."; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(q)(1) From amounts appropriated or otherwise made available for purposes of carrying out this section, the Secretary shall carry out 2 statewide demonstration projects under which private for-profit organizations providing nonresidential day care services shall qualify as institutions for the purposes of this section. An organization may participate in a demonstration project described in the preceding sentence if—

"(A) at least 25 percent of the children served by such organization meet the income eligibility criteria established under section 9(b) for free or reduced price meals; and

"(B) as a result of the participation of the organization in the project—

"(i) the nutritional content or quality of meals and snacks served to children under the care of such organization will be improved; or

"(ii) fees charged by such organization for the care of the children described in subparagraph (A) will be lowered.

"(2) Under each such project, the Secretary shall examine—

"(A) the budgetary impact of the change in eligibility being tested;

"(B) the extent to which, as a result of such change, additional low-income children can be reached; and

"(C) which outreach methods are most effective.

"(3) The Secretary shall choose to conduct demonstration projects under this subsection—

"(A) 1 State that—

"(i) has a history of participation of for-profit organizations in the child care food program;

"(ii) allocates a significant proportion of the amounts it receives for child care under title XX of the Social Security Act in a manner that allows low-income parents to choose the type of child care their children will receive;

"(iii) has other funding mechanisms that support parental choice for child care;

"(iv) has a large, State-regulated for-profit child care industry that serves low-income children; and

"(v) has large sponsors of family or group day care homes that have a history of recruiting and sponsoring for-profit child care centers in the child care food program; and

"(B) 1 State in which—

"(i) the majority of children for whom child care arrangements are made are being cared for in center-based child care facilities;

"(ii) for-profit child care centers and preschools are located throughout the State and serve both rural and urban populations;

"(iii) at least 1/3 of the licensed child care centers and preschools operate as for-profit facilities;

"(iv) all licensed facilities are subject to identical nutritional requirements for food service that are similar to those required under the child care food program; and

"(v) less than 1 percent of child care centers participating in the child care food program receive assistance under title XX of the Social Security Act.

"(4) Such project shall—

"(A) commence not earlier than May 1, 1990, and not later than June 30, 1990; and

"(B) terminate on September 30, 1992.".

(c) FAMILY OR GROUP DAY CARE HOME DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 503(e) of the Hunger Prevention Act of 1988 (42 U.S.C. 1766 note) is amended by striking "not later than 12 months after the date on which the project was fully initiated" and inserting "September 30, 1990".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall be effective as of October 1, 1989. The Secretary of Agriculture shall reimburse day care institutions and family or group day care sponsoring organizations participating in the demonstration project authorized under section 503(a) of the Hunger Prevention Act of 1988 (42 U.S.C. 1766 note) as if this Act was enacted before such date.

(d) IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) EXPANSION; DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall implement the amendments made by subsections (b)(1) and (b)(2) not later than July 1, 1990.

(2) DIETARY REQUIREMENTS FOR ADULT DAY CARE FOOD PROGRAM.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations to implement the amendments made by subsection (b)(3).

SEC. 106. MEAL SUPPLEMENTS FOR CHILDREN IN AFTERSCHOOL CARE.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 17 the following new section:

"SEC. 17A. MEAL SUPPLEMENTS FOR CHILDREN IN AFTERSCHOOL CARE.

"(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—

"(1) GRANTS TO STATES.—The Secretary shall carry out a program to assist States through grants-in-aid and other means to provide meal supplements to children in afterschool care in eligible elementary and secondary schools.

"(2) ELIGIBLE SCHOOLS.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'eligible elementary and secondary schools' means schools that—

"(A) operate school lunch programs under this Act;

"(B) sponsor afterschool care programs; and

"(C) are participating in the child care food program under section 17 on May 15, 1989.

"(b) ELIGIBLE CHILDREN.—Reimbursement may be provided under this section only for supplements served to children—

"(1) who are not more than 12 years of age; or

"(2) in the case of children of migrant workers or children with handicaps, who are not more than 15 years of age.

"(c) REIMBURSEMENT.—For the purposes of this section, the national average payment rate for supplements shall be equal to those established under section 17(c)(3) (as adjusted pursuant to section 11(a)(3)).

"(d) CONTENTS OF SUPPLEMENTS.—The requirements that apply to the content of meal supplements served under child care food programs operated with assistance under this Act shall apply to the content of meal supplements served under programs operated with assistance under this section.".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations to implement section 17A of the National School Lunch Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section).

SEC. 107. PILOT PROJECTS.

Section 18 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1769) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) of subsection (e)—

(A) by striking "for the duration beginning July 1, 1987, and ending December 31, 1990" and inserting "beginning July 1, 1987, and ending September 30, 1992"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The Secretary, directly or through contract, shall administer the project under this subsection."; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall conduct demonstration projects designed to provide food service throughout the year to homeless children under the age of 6 in emergency shelters.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall enter into agreements with private nonprofit organizations to participate in the projects under this subsection.

"(B) The Secretary shall establish eligibility requirements for private nonprofit organizations that desire to participate in the projects under this subsection. Such requirements shall include the following:

"(i) Each such organization shall operate not more than 5 food service sites under the project and shall serve not more than 300 homeless children at each such site.

"(ii) Each site operated by each such organization shall meet applicable State and local health, safety, and sanitation standards.

"(3)(A) Projects under this subsection shall use the same meal patterns and shall receive reimbursement payments for meals and supplements at the same rates provided to child care centers participating in the child care food program under section 17 for free meals and supplements.

"(B) Homeless children under the age of 6 in emergency shelters shall be considered eligible for free meals without application.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'emergency shelter' has the meaning given such term in section 321(2) of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act.

"(5)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall expend to carry out this subsection from amounts appropriated for purposes of carrying out this Act not less than $50,000 in the fiscal year 1990 and not less than $350,000 in each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994, in addition to any amounts made available under section 7(a)(5)(B)(i)(I) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966. Any amounts expended under the preceding sentence shall be used solely to provide grants on an annual basis to private nonprofit organizations for the conduct of projects under this subsection.

"(B) The Secretary may expend less than the amount required under subparagraph (A) if there is an insufficient number of suitable applicants.

"(6) At least 1 project under this subsection shall commence operations not later than September 30, 1990, and all such projects shall cease to operate not later than September 30, 1994.".

SEC. 108. REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK.

Section 19 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1769a) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out functions under this Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, the Secretary shall, to the maximum extent possible, reduce the paperwork required of State and local educational agencies, schools, and other agencies participating in nutrition programs assisted under such Acts in connection with such participation.

"(b) CONSULTATION; PUBLIC COMMENT.—In carrying out the requirements of subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

"(1) consult with State and local administrators of programs assisted under this Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966;

"(2) convene at least 1 meeting of the administrators described in paragraph (1) not later than the expiration of the 10-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989; and

"(3) obtain suggestions from members of the public with respect to reduction of paperwork.

"(c) REPORT.—Before the expiration of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989, the Secretary shall report to the Congress concerning the extent to which a reduction has occurred in the amount of paperwork described in subsection (a). Such report shall be developed in consultation with the administrators described in subsection (b)(1).".

SEC. 109. TRAINING, TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE, AND FOOD SERVICE MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE.

The National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 21. TRAINING, TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE, AND FOOD SERVICE MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE.

"(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary—

"(1) from amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (e)(1), shall conduct training activities and provide technical assistance to improve the skills of individuals employed in—

"(A) food service programs carried out with assistance under this Act;

"(B) school breakfast programs carried out with assistance under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; and

"(C) as appropriate, other federally assisted feeding programs; and

"(2) from amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (e)(2), is authorized to establish and maintain a food service management institute.

"(b) MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS.—The activities conducted and assistance provided as required by subsection (a)(1) shall at least include activities and assistance with respect to—

"(1) menu planning;

"(2) implementation of regulations and appropriate guidelines; and

"(3) compliance with program requirements and accountability for program operations.

"(c) DUTIES OF FOOD SERVICE MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any food service management institute established as authorized by subsection (a)(2) shall carry out activities to improve the general operation and quality of—

"(A) food service programs assisted under this Act;

"(B) school breakfast programs assisted under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; and

"(C) as appropriate, other federally assisted feeding programs.

"(2) REQUIRED ACTIVITIES.—Activities carried out under paragraph (1) shall include—

"(A) conducting research necessary to assist schools and other organizations that participate in such programs in providing high quality, nutritious, cost-effective meal service to the children served;

"(B) providing training and technical assistance with respect to—

"(i) efficient use of physical resources;

"(ii) financial management;

"(iii) efficient use of computers;

"(iv) procurement;

"(v) sanitation;

"(vi) safety;

"(vii) food handling;

"(viii) meal planning and related nutrition activities; and

"(ix) other appropriate activities;

"(C) establishing a national network of trained professionals to present training programs and workshops for food service personnel;

"(D) developing training materials for use in the programs and workshops described in subparagraph (C); and

"(E) acting as a clearinghouse for research, studies, and findings concerning all aspects of the operation of food service programs, including activities carried out with assistance provided under section 19 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

"(d) COORDINATION.—The Secretary shall coordinate activities carried out and assistance provided as required by subsection (b) with activities carried out by any food service management institute established as authorized by subsection (a)(2).

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated—

"(1) $3,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990, $2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1991, and $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1992, 1993, and 1994 for purposes of carrying out subsection (a)(1); and

"(2) $1,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990 and $4,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994 for purposes of carrying out subsection (a)(2).".

SEC. 110. COMPLIANCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The National School Lunch Act (as amended by section 109 of this Act) (42 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 22. COMPLIANCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY.

"(a) UNIFIED ACCOUNTABILITY SYSTEM.—There shall be a unified system prescribed and administered by the Secretary for ensuring that local food service authorities that participate in the school lunch program under this Act comply with the provisions of this Act. Such system shall be established through the publication of regulations and the provision of an opportunity for public comment, consistent with the provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code.

"(b) FUNCTIONS OF SYSTEM.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Under the system described in subsection (a), each State educational agency shall—

"(A) require that local food service authorities comply with the provisions of this Act; and

"(B) ensure such compliance through reasonable audits and supervisory assistance reviews.

"(2) MINIMIZATION OF ADDITIONAL DUTIES.—Each State educational agency shall coordinate the compliance and accountability activities described in paragraph (1) in a manner that minimizes the imposition of additional duties on local food service authorities.

"(c) ROLE OF SECRETARY.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall—

"(1) assist the State educational agency in the monitoring of programs conducted by local food service authorities; and

"(2) through management evaluations, review the compliance of the State educational agency and the local school food service authorities with regulations issued under this Act.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out the compliance and accountability activities referred to in subsection (c) $3,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations to implement section 22 of the National School Lunch Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section).

SEC. 111. INFORMATION ON INCOME ELIGIBILITY.

The National School Lunch Act (as amended by sections 109 and 110 of this Act) (42 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 23. INFORMATION ON INCOME ELIGIBILITY.

"(a) INFORMATION TO BE PROVIDED.—In the case of each program established under this Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, the Secretary shall provide to each appropriate State agency—

"(1) information concerning what types of income are counted in determining the eligibility of children to receive free or reduced price meals under the program in which such State, State agency, local agency, or other entity is participating, particularly with respect to how net self-employment income is determined for family day care providers participating in the child care food program (including the treatment of reimbursements provided under this section); and

"(2) information concerning the consideration of applications for free or reduced price meals from households in which the head of the household is less than 21 years old.

"(b) TIME FOR PROVISION OF INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall provide the information required by subsection (a) before the expiration of the 60-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989 and shall as necessary provide revisions of such information.

"(c) FORM SIMPLIFICATION.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary shall—

"(1) review the model application forms for programs under this Act and programs under the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; and

"(2) simplify the format and instructions for such forms so that the forms are easily understandable by the individuals who must complete them.".

SEC. 112. NUTRITION GUIDANCE FOR CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS.

The National School Lunch Act (as amended by sections 109, 110, and 111 of this Act) (42 U.S.C. 1751 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 24. NUTRITION GUIDANCE FOR CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS.

"(a) NUTRITION GUIDANCE PUBLICATION.—

"(1) DEVELOPMENT.—The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall jointly develop and approve a publication to be entitled 'Nutrition Guidance for Child Nutrition Programs' (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'publication'). The Secretary shall develop the publication as required by the preceding sentence before the expiration of the 2-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989.

"(2) TIME FOR DISTRIBUTION.—Before the expiration of the 6-month period beginning on the date that the development of the publication is completed, the Secretary shall distribute the publication to school food service authorities and institutions and organizations participating in covered programs.

"(b) REVISION OF MENU PLANNING GUIDES.—The Secretary shall, as necessary, revise the menu planning guides for each covered program to include recommendations for the implementation of nutrition guidance described in the publication.

"(c) APPLICATION OF NUTRITION GUIDANCE TO MEAL PROGRAMS.—In carrying out any covered program, school food authorities and other organizations and institutions participating in such program shall apply the nutrition guidance described in the publication when preparing meals and meal supplements served under such program.

"(d) IMPLEMENTATION.—In carrying out covered programs, the Secretary shall ensure that meals and meal supplements served under such programs are consistent with the nutrition guidance described in the publication.

"(e) REVISION OF PUBLICATION.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Health and Human Services may jointly update and approve the publication as warranted by scientific evidence.

"(f) COVERED PROGRAMS.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'covered program' includes—

"(1) the school lunch program under this Act;

"(2) the summer food service program for children under section 13;

"(3) the child care food program under section 17; and

"(4) the school breakfast program under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.".

PART B—PROGRAMS UNDER THE CHILD NUTRITION ACT OF 1966

SEC. 121. EXPANSION OF SCHOOL BREAKFAST PROGRAM.

Section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1733) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence of subsection (a), by inserting before the period the following: "and to carry out the provisions of subsection (g)";

(2) in subsection (f)—

(A) by inserting before the subsection the following new heading:

"EXPANSION OF PROGRAM";

(B) by inserting "(1)" after "(f)";

(C) by striking the last sentence; and

(D) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Each State educational agency shall—

"(i) provide information to school boards and public officials concerning the benefits and availability of the school breakfast program; and

"(ii) select each year, for additional informational efforts concerning the program, schools in the State—

"(I) in which a substantial portion of school enrollment consists of children from low-income families; and

"(II) that do not participate in the school breakfast program.

"(B) Not later than October 1, 1993, the Secretary shall report to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate concerning the efforts of the Secretary and the States to increase the participation of schools in the program."; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"STARTUP COSTS

"(g)(1) The Secretary shall make payments, totalling not less than $3,000,000 in the fiscal year 1990 and $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994, on a competitive basis to State educational agencies in a substantial number of States for distribution to eligible schools to assist such schools with nonrecurring expenses incurred in initiating a school breakfast program under this section. Payments received under this subsection shall be in addition to payments to which State agencies are entitled under subsection (b).

"(2)(A) In making payments under this subsection in any fiscal year, the Secretary shall provide a preference to State educational agencies that—

"(i) submit to the Secretary a plan to expand school breakfast programs conducted in the State, including a description of—

"(I) the manner in which the agency will provide technical assistance and funding to schools in the State to expand such programs;

"(II) a State law that requires the expansion of such programs during such year; or

"(III) significant public or private resources that have been assembled to carry out the expansion of such programs during such year; or

"(ii) either—

"(I) do not have a breakfast program available to a large number of low-income children in the State; or

"(II) serve a low percentage of free and reduced price breakfasts under the school breakfast program when the number of such breakfasts is measured as a percentage of the number of free and reduced price lunches served in such State under the school lunch program carried out under the National School Lunch Act.

"(B) The Secretary shall act in a timely manner to recover and reallocate to other States any amounts provided to a State educational agency under this subsection that are not used by such agency within a reasonable period.

"(C) The Secretary shall allow States to apply on an annual basis for assistance under this subsection.

"(3) Each State agency, in allocating funds within the State, shall give preference for assistance under this subsection to eligible schools that demonstrate the greatest need for a breakfast program.

"(4) Expenditures of funds from State and local sources for the maintenance of the breakfast program shall not be diminished as a result of payments received under this subsection.

"(5) As used in this subsection, the term 'eligible school' means a school—

"(A) attended by children a significant percentage of whom are members of low-income families; and

"(B) that agrees to operate the breakfast program established with such assistance for a period of not less than 3 years.

"(6) Not later than December 31, 1993, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate concerning the efforts of the Secretary and the States to increase the participation of schools in the program.".

SEC. 122. STATE ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 7 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1776) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) in paragraph (3), by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "If an agency in the State other than the State educational agency administers such program, the State shall ensure that an amount equal to no less than the funds due the State under this paragraph is provided to such agency for costs incurred by such agency in administering the program, except as provided in paragraph (5).";

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (5) and (6) as paragraphs (6) and (7), respectively;

(C) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) Not more than 25 percent of the amounts made available to each State under this section for the fiscal year 1991 and 20 percent of the amounts made available to each State under this section for the fiscal year 1992 and for each succeeding fiscal year may remain available for obligation or expenditure in the fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year for which such amounts were appropriated.

"(B)(i) In the fiscal year 1991 and each succeeding fiscal year, any amounts appropriated that are not obligated or expended during such fiscal year and are not carried over for the succeeding fiscal year under subparagraph (A) shall be returned to the Secretary. From any amounts returned to the Secretary under the preceding sentence, the Secretary shall—

"(I) first allocate, for the purpose of providing grants on an annual basis to private nonprofit organizations participating in projects under section 18(f) of the National School Lunch Act, not less than $3,000,000 in the fiscal year 1992 and not less than $4,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 1993 and 1994; and

"(II) then allocate, for purposes of administrative costs, any remaining amounts among States that demonstrate a need for such amounts."

"(ii) In any fiscal year in which amounts returned to the Secretary under the first sentence of clause (i) are insufficient to provide the complete allocation described in clause (i)(I), all of such amounts shall be allocated for the purpose described in clause (i)(I)."; and

(D) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(8) In the fiscal year 1991 and each succeeding fiscal year, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, each State shall ensure that the State agency administering the distribution of commodities under programs authorized under this Act and under the National School Lunch Act is provided, from funds made available to the State under this subsection, an appropriate amount of funds for administrative costs incurred in distributing such commodities. In developing such regulations, the Secretary may consider the value of commodities provided to the State under this Act and under the National School Lunch Act.";

(2) in subsection (g), by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", and that agree to participate fully in any studies authorized by the Secretary"; and

(3) in subsection (h), by striking "For" and all that follows through "1989," and inserting "For the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1977, and each succeeding fiscal year ending before October 1, 1994,".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—The amendment made by subsection (a)(1)(A) shall be effective as of October 1, 1989.

SEC. 123. ADDITIONAL ACTIVITIES AND REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1786) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(17) 'Competitive bidding' means a procurement process under which the State agency selects the single source offering the lowest price, as determined by the submission of sealed bids, for the product for which bids are sought.";

(2) in subsection (d), by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall establish income eligibility standards to be used in conjunction with the nutritional risk criteria in determining eligibility of individuals for participation in the program. Any individual at nutritional risk shall be eligible for the program under this section only if such individual—

"(i) is a member of a family with an income that is less than the maximum income limit prescribed under section 9(b) of the National School Lunch Act for free and reduced price meals;

"(ii)(I) receives food stamps under the Food Stamp Act of 1977; or

"(II) is a member of a family that receives assistance under the program for aid to families with dependent children established under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act; or

"(iii)(I) receives medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act; or

"(II) is a member of a family in which a pregnant woman or an infant receives such assistance.

"(B) For the purpose of determining income eligibility under this section, any State agency may choose to exclude from income any basic allowance for quarters received by military service personnel residing off military installations.";

(3) in subsection (e)—

(A) by striking the last 3 sentences of paragraph (1);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3);

(C) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary shall prescribe standards to ensure that adequate nutrition education services and breastfeeding promotion and support are provided. The State agency shall provide training to persons providing nutrition education under this section. Nutrition education and breastfeeding promotion and support shall be evaluated annually by each State agency, and such evaluation shall include the views of participants concerning the effectiveness of the nutrition education and breastfeeding promotion and support they have received."; and

(D) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(3) The State agency shall—

"(A) ensure that written information concerning food stamps, the program for aid to families with dependent children under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and the child support enforcement program under part D of title IV of the Social Security Act is provided on at least 1 occasion to each adult participant in and each applicant for the program;

"(B) provide each local agency with materials showing the maximum income limits, according to family size, applicable to pregnant women, infants, and children up to age 5 under the medical assistance program established under title XIX of the Social Security Act (in this section referred to as the 'medicaid program'); and

"(C) provide to individuals applying for the program under this section, or reapplying at the end of their certification period, written information about the medicaid program and referral to such program or to agencies authorized to determine presumptive eligibility for such program, if such individuals are not participating in such program and appear to have family income below the applicable maximum income limits for such program.

"(4) The State agency shall ensure that each local agency shall maintain and make available for distribution a list of local resources for substance abuse counseling and treatment.";

(4) in subsection (f)—

(A) in subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1)—

(i) in clause (iii)—

(I) by inserting "local programs for breastfeeding promotion," after "immunization programs,"; and

(II) by inserting "and treatment" after "alcohol and drug abuse counseling";

(ii) by amending clause (vii) to read as follows:

"(vii) a plan to provide program benefits under this section to eligible individuals most in need of the benefits and to provide eligible individuals not participating in the program with information on the program, the eligibility criteria for the program, and how to apply for the program, with emphasis on reaching and enrolling eligible women in the early months of pregnancy, including provisions to reach and enroll eligible migrants;";

(iii) by redesignating clauses (viii) and (ix) as clauses (xii) and (xiii), respectively; and

(iv) by inserting after clause (vii) the following new clauses:

"(viii) a plan to provide program benefits under this section to unserved infants and children under the care of foster parents, protective services, or child welfare authorities, including infants exposed to drugs perinatally;

"(ix) if the State agency chooses to provide program benefits under this section to some or all eligible individuals who are incarcerated in prisons or juvenile detention facilities that do not receive Federal assistance under any program specifically established to assist pregnant women regarding their nutrition and health needs, a plan for the provision of such benefits to, and to meet the special nutrition education needs of, such individuals, which may include—

"(I) providing supplemental foods to such individuals that are different from those provided to other participants in the program under this section;

"(II) providing such foods to such individuals in a different manner than to other participants in the program under this section in order to meet the special needs of such individuals; and

"(III) the development of nutrition education materials appropriate for the special needs of such individuals;

"(x) a plan to improve access to the program for participants and prospective applicants who are employed, or who reside in rural areas, by addressing their special needs through the adoption or revision of procedures and practices to minimize the time participants and applicants must spend away from work and the distances that participants and applicants must travel, including appointment scheduling, adjustment of clinic hours, clinic locations, or mailing of multiple vouchers;

"(xi) a plan to provide nutrition education and promote breastfeeding;";

(B) by adding at the end of paragraph (8) the following new subparagraph:

"(D) Each local agency operating the program within a hospital and each local agency operating the program that has a cooperative arrangement with a hospital shall—

"(i) advise potentially eligible individuals that receive inpatient or outpatient prenatal, maternity, or postpartum services, or accompany a child under the age of 5 who receives well-child services, of the availability of program benefits; and

"(ii) to the extent feasible, provide an opportunity for individuals who may be eligible to be certified within the hospital for participation in such program.";

(C) in paragraph (9)—

(i) by inserting "(A)" after "(9)"; and

(ii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Any State agency that must suspend or terminate benefits to any participant during the participant's certification period due to a shortage of funds for the program shall first issue a notice to such participant. Such notice shall include, in addition to other information required by the Secretary, the categories of participants whose benefits are being suspended or terminated due to such shortage.";

(D) in subparagraph (A) of paragraph (14), by inserting ", breastfeeding promotion," after "nutrition education";

(E) in paragraph (17), by inserting before the period the following: "and to accommodate the special needs and problems of individuals who are incarcerated in prisons or juvenile detention facilities"; and

(F) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(18)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a State agency may implement income eligibility guidelines under this section at the time the State implements income eligibility guidelines under the medicaid program.

"(B) Income eligibility guidelines under this section shall be implemented not later than July 1 of each year.

"(19) Each local agency participating in the program under this section shall provide information about other potential sources of food assistance in the local area to individuals who apply in person to participate in the program under this section, but who cannot be served because the program is operating at capacity in the local area.

"(20) The State agency shall adopt policies that—

"(A) require each local agency to attempt to contact each pregnant woman who misses an appointment to apply for participation in the program under this section, in order to reschedule the appointment, unless the phone number and the address of the woman are unavailable to such local agency; and

"(B) in the case of local agencies that do not routinely schedule appointments for individuals seeking to apply or be recertified for participation in the program under this section, require each such local agency to schedule appointments for each employed individual seeking to apply or be recertified for participation in such program so as to minimize the time each such individual is absent from the workplace due to such application or request for recertification.";

(5) in subsection (g)—

(A) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $2,158,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994. As authorized by section 3 of the National School Lunch Act, appropriations to carry out the provisions of this section may be made not more than 1 year in advance of the beginning of the fiscal year in which the funds will become available for disbursement to the States, and shall remain available for the purposes for which appropriated until expended.";

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively;

(C) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraphs:

"(2)(A) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless enacted in express limitation of this subparagraph, the Secretary—

"(i) in the case of legislation providing funds through the end of a fiscal year, shall issue—

"(I) an initial allocation of funds provided by the enactment of such legislation not later than the expiration of the 15-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of such legislation; and

"(II) subsequent allocations of funds provided by the enactment of such legislation not later than the beginning of each of the second, third, and fourth quarters of the fiscal year; and

"(ii) in the case of legislation providing funds for a period that ends prior to the end of a fiscal year, shall issue an initial allocation of funds provided by the enactment of such legislation not later than the expiration of the 10-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of such legislation.

"(B) In any fiscal year—

"(i) unused amounts from a prior fiscal year that are identified by the end of the first quarter of the fiscal year shall be recovered and reallocated not later than the beginning of the second quarter of the fiscal year; and

"(ii) unused amounts from a prior fiscal year that are identified after the end of the first quarter of the fiscal year shall be recovered and reallocated on a timely basis.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, unless enacted in express limitation of this paragraph—

"(A) the allocation of funds required by paragraph (2)(A)(i)(I) shall include not less than ⅓ of the amounts appropriated by the legislation described in such paragraph;

"(B) the allocations of funds required by paragraph (2)(A)(i)(II) to be made not later than the beginning of the second and third quarters of the fiscal year shall each include not less than ¼ of the amounts appropriated by the legislation described in such paragraph; and

"(C) in the case of the enactment of legislation providing appropriations for a period of not more than 4 months, the allocation of funds required by paragraph (2)(A)(ii) shall include all amounts appropriated by such legislation except amounts reserved by the Secretary for purposes of carrying out paragraph (5).";

(D) in paragraph (5) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B) of this paragraph), by striking "$3,000,000" and inserting "$5,000,000"; and

(E) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(6) Upon the completion of the 1990 decennial census, the Secretary, in coordination with the Secretary of Commerce, shall make available an estimate, by State and county (or equivalent political subdivision) of the number of women, infants, and children who are members of families that have incomes below the maximum income limit for participation in the program under this section.";

(6) by amending subsection (h) to read as follows:

"(h)(1)(A) Each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make available, from amounts appropriated for such fiscal year under subsection (g)(1) and amounts remaining from amounts appropriated under such subsection for the preceding fiscal year, an amount sufficient to guarantee a national average per participant grant to be allocated among State agencies for costs incurred by State and local agencies for nutrition services and administration for such year.

"(B)(i) The amount of the national average per participant grant for nutrition services and administration for any fiscal year shall be an amount equal to the amount of the national average per participant grant for nutrition services and administration issued for the fiscal year 1987, as adjusted.

"(ii) Such adjustment, for any fiscal year, shall be made by revising the national average per participant grant for nutrition services and administration for the fiscal year 1987 to reflect the percentage change between—

"(I) the value of the index for State and local government purchases, using the implicit price deflator, as published by the Bureau of Economic Analysis of the Department of Commerce, for the 12-month period ending June 30, 1986; and

"(II) the best estimate that is available as of the start of the fiscal year of the value of such index for the 12-month period ending June 30 of the previous fiscal year.

"(C) In any fiscal year, amounts remaining from amounts appropriated for such fiscal year under subsection (g)(1) and from amounts appropriated under such section for the preceding fiscal year, after carrying out subparagraph (A), shall be made available for food benefits under this section, except to the extent that such amounts are needed to carry out the purposes of subsections (g)(4) and (g)(5).

"(2)(A) For each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1994, the Secretary shall allocate to each State agency from the amount described in paragraph (1)(A) an amount for costs of nutrition services and administration on the basis of a formula prescribed by the Secretary. Such formula shall—

"(i) be designed to take into account—

"(I) the varying needs of each State;

"(II) the number of individuals participating in each State; and

"(III) other factors which serve to promote the proper, efficient, and effective administration of the program under this section;

"(ii) provide for each State agency—

"(I) an estimate of the number of participants for the fiscal year involved; and

"(II) a per participant grant for nutrition services and administration for such year; and

"(iii) provide for a minimum grant amount for State agencies.

"(B)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii) and subparagraph (C), in any fiscal year, the total amount allocated to a State agency for costs of nutrition services and administration under the formula prescribed by the Secretary under subparagraph (A) shall constitute the State agency's operational level for such costs for such year even if the number of participants in the program at such agency is lower than the estimate provided under subparagraph (A)(ii)(I).

"(ii) If a State agency's per participant expenditure for nutrition services and administration is more than 15 percent higher than its per participant grant for nutrition services and administration without good cause, the Secretary may reduce such State agency's operational level for costs of nutrition services and administration.

"(C) In any fiscal year, the Secretary may reallocate amounts provided to State agencies under subparagraph (A) for such fiscal year. When reallocating amounts under the preceding sentence, the Secretary may provide additional amounts to, or recover amounts from, any State agency.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), in each fiscal year, each State agency shall expend—

"(i) for nutrition education activities and breastfeeding promotion and support activities, an aggregate amount that is not less than the sum of—

"(I) ⅙ of the amounts expended by the State for costs of nutrition services and administration; and

"(II) an amount equal to a proportionate share of $8,000,000, with each State's share determined on the basis of the number of pregnant women and breastfeeding women in the program in the State as a percentage of the number of pregnant women and breastfeeding women in the program in all States; and

"(ii) for breastfeeding promotion and support activities an amount that is not less than the amount determined for such State under clause (i)(II).

"(B) The Secretary may authorize a State agency to expend an amount less than the amount described in subparagraph (A)(ii) for purposes of breastfeeding promotion and support activities if—

"(i) the State agency so requests; and

"(ii) the request is accompanied by documentation that other funds will be used to conduct nutrition education activities at a level commensurate with the level at which such activities would be conducted if the amount described in subparagraph (A)(ii) were expended for such activities.

"(C) The Secretary may authorize a State agency to expend for purposes of nutrition education an amount that is less than the difference between the aggregate amount described in subparagraph (A) and the amount expended by the State for breastfeeding promotion and support programs if—

"(i) the State agency so requests; and

"(ii) the request is accompanied by documentation that other funds will be used to conduct such activities.

"(D) The Secretary shall limit to a minimal level any documentation required under this paragraph.

"(4) The Secretary shall—

"(A) in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, develop a definition of breastfeeding for the purposes of the program under this section;

"(B) authorize the purchase of breastfeeding aids by State and local agencies as an allowable expense under nutrition services and administration;

"(C) require each State agency to designate an agency staff member to coordinate breastfeeding promotion efforts identified in the State plan of operation and administration; and

"(D) require the State agency to provide training on the promotion and management of breastfeeding to staff members of local agencies who are responsible for counseling participants in the program under this section concerning breastfeeding.

"(5)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), in any fiscal year that a State agency achieves, through use of acceptable measures, participation that exceeds the participation level estimated for such State agency under paragraph (2)(A)(ii)(I), such State agency may convert amounts allocated for food benefits for such fiscal year for costs of nutrition services and administration to the extent that such conversion is necessary—

"(i) to cover allowable expenditures in such fiscal year; and

"(ii) to ensure that the State agency maintains the level established for the per participant grant for nutrition services and administration for such fiscal year.

"(B) If a State agency increases its participation level through measures that are not in the nutritional interests of participants or not otherwise allowable (such as reducing the quantities of foods provided for reasons not related to nutritional need), the Secretary may refuse to allow the State agency to convert amounts allocated for food benefits to defray costs of nutrition services and administration.

"(C) For the purposes of this paragraph, the term 'acceptable measures' includes use of cost containment measures, curtailment of vendor abuse, and breastfeeding promotion activities.

"(6) In each fiscal year, each State agency shall provide, from the amounts allocated to such agency for such year for costs of nutrition services and administration, an amount to each local agency for its costs of nutrition services and administration. The amount to be provided to each local agency under the preceding sentence shall be determined under allocation standards developed by the State agency in cooperation with the several local agencies, taking into account factors deemed appropriate to further proper, efficient, and effective administration of the program, such as—

"(A) local agency staffing needs;

"(B) density of population;

"(C) number of individuals served; and

"(D) availability of administrative support from other sources.

"(7) The State agency may provide in advance to any local agency any amounts for nutrition services and administration deemed necessary for successful commencement or significant expansion of program operations during a reasonable period following approval of—

"(A) a new local agency;

"(B) a new cost containment measure; or

"(C) a significant change in an existing cost containment measure.

"(8)(A) No State may receive its allocation under this subsection unless on or before August 30, 1989 (or a subsequent date established by the Secretary for any State) such State has—

"(i) examined the feasibility of implementing cost containment measures with respect to procurement of infant formula, and, where practicable, other foods necessary to carry out the program under this section; and

"(ii) initiated action to implement such measures unless the State demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary, that such measures would not lower costs or would interfere with the delivery of formula or foods to participants in the program.

"(B)(i) Except as provided in subparagraphs (C), (D), and (E)(iii), in carrying out subparagraph (A), any State that provides for the purchase of foods under the program at retail grocery stores shall, with respect to the procurement of infant formula, use—

"(I) a competitive bidding system; or

"(II) any other cost containment measure that yields savings equal to or greater than savings generated by a competitive bidding system when such savings are determined by comparing the amounts of savings that would be provided over the full term of contracts offered in response to a single invitation to submit both competitive bids and bids for other cost containment systems for the sale of infant formula.

"(ii) In determining whether a cost containment measure other than competitive bidding yields equal or greater savings, the State, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, may take into account other cost factors (in addition to rebate levels and procedures for adjusting rebate levels when wholesale price levels rise), such as—

"(I) the number of infants who would not be expected to receive the contract brand of infant formula under a competitive bidding system;

"(II) the number of cans of infant formula for which no rebate would be provided under another rebate system; and

"(III) differences in administrative costs relating to the implementation of the various cost containment systems (such as costs of converting a computer system for the purpose of operating a cost containment system and costs of preparing participants for conversion to a new or alternate cost containment system).

"(C) In the case of any State that has a contract in effect on the date of the enactment of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989, subparagraph (B) shall not apply to the program operated by such State under this section until the term of such contract, as such term is specified by the contract as in effect on such date, expires. In the case of any State that has more than 1 such contract in effect on the date of the enactment of such Act, subparagraph (B) shall not apply until the term of the contract with the latest expiration date, as such term is specified by such contract as in effect on the date of the enactment of such Act, expires.

"(D)(i) The Secretary shall waive the requirement of subparagraph (B) in the case of any State that demonstrates to the Secretary that—

"(I) compliance with subparagraph (B) would be inconsistent with efficient or effective operation of the program operated by such State under this section; or

"(II) the amount by which the savings yielded by an alternative cost containment system would be less than the savings yielded by a competitive bidding system is sufficiently minimal that the difference is not significant.

"(ii) The Secretary shall prescribe criteria under which a waiver may be granted pursuant to clause (i).

"(iii) The Secretary shall provide information at 6-month intervals to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate on waivers that have been granted under clause (i).

"(E)(i) The Secretary shall provide technical assistance to small Indian State agencies carrying out this paragraph in order to assist such agencies to achieve the maximum cost containment savings feasible.

"(ii) The Secretary shall also provide technical assistance, on request, to State agencies that do not have large caseloads and that desire to consider a cost containment system that covers more than 1 State agency.

"(iii) The Secretary may waive the requirement of subparagraph (B) in the case of any Indian State agency that has not more than 1,000 participants.

"(F) No State may enter into a cost containment contract (in this subparagraph referred to as the "original contract") that prescribes conditions that would void, reduce the savings under, or otherwise limit the original contract if the State solicited or secured bids for, or entered into, a subsequent cost containment contract to take effect after the expiration of the original contract.

"(G) Not later than the expiration of the 120-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989, the Secretary shall prescribe regulations to carry out this paragraph. Such regulations shall address issues involved in comparing savings from different cost containment measures, as provided under subparagraph (B).

"(9) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'cost containment measure' means a competitive bidding, rebate, direct distribution, or home delivery system implemented by a State agency as described in its approved plan of operation and administration.";

(7) in subsection (i)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "funds provided in accordance with this section" and inserting "amounts made available for food benefits under subsection (h)(1)(C)";

(B) in subparagraph (D) of paragraph (3)—

(i) by striking "approved cost-savings strategies as identified in subsection (h)(5)(A)" and inserting "cost containment measures as defined in subsection (h)(9)"; and

(ii) by striking "at the discretion of the Secretary, up to 5 percent" and inserting "not more than 3 percent"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7) In addition to any amounts expended under paragraph (3)(A)(i), any State agency using cost containment measures as defined in subsection (h)(9) may temporarily use amounts made available to such agency for the first quarter of a fiscal year to defray expenses for costs incurred during the final quarter of the preceding fiscal year. In any fiscal year, any State agency that uses amounts made available for a succeeding fiscal year under the authority of the preceding sentence shall restore or reimburse such amounts when such agency receives payment as a result of its cost containment measures for such expenses.";

(8) in subsection (j), by striking "each year" and inserting "every other year";

(9) in subsection (k)(1)—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking "twenty-three" and inserting "24"; and

(B) in the second sentence, by inserting after "the Secretary;" the following: "1 member shall be an expert in the promotion of breast feeding;"; and

(10) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(o)(1) Subject to the availability of funds appropriated for the purpose of carrying out this subsection, the Secretary is authorized to establish a demonstration program for the establishment of clinics for participants in the program under this section at community colleges that offer nursing education programs. In determining the location of clinics under this subsection, the Secretary shall consider—

"(A) the location of the community college under consideration;

"(B) its accessibility to individuals eligible to participate in the special supplemental food program under this section; and

"(C) its willingness to operate the clinic during nontraditional hours.

"(2) The Secretary shall, from funds appropriated for the purpose of carrying out this subsection—

"(A) evaluate any demonstration program carried out under paragraph (1); and

"(B) submit to the Congress a report containing the results of such evaluation.

"(3) There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this subsection $1,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

"(p)(1) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to State agencies for the purpose of improving and updating information and data systems used for purposes of carrying out programs under this section.

"(2) Any State that desires to receive a grant under this subsection shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, and containing or accompanied by such information, as the Secretary may reasonably require. Grants shall be awarded based on the need demonstrated by States in their applications.

"(3) There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this subsection $2,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994.".

(b) REVIEW OF PRIORITY SYSTEM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—During the fiscal years 1990 and 1991, the Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct a review of the relationship between the nutritional risk criteria established under section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 and the priority system used under the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children carried out under such section (hereafter in this section referred to as the "program"), especially as it affects pregnant women. In conducting such review, the Secretary of Agriculture shall—

(A) consult with the directors of State and local agencies that operate the program and with other individuals with expertise in the field of nutrition;

(B) take into consideration the preventive nature of the program; and

(C) examine the risks to individuals eligible for participation in the program, particularly pregnant women, from conditions such as homelessness, mental illness, and conditions that pose barriers to receipt of prenatal care, that may be associated with an increased probability of adverse pregnancy outcome or other adverse effects on health.

(2) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall report to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate concerning the results of the review conducted as required by paragraph (1). Under the preceding sentence, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to such committees—

(A) a preliminary report not later than October 1, 1990; and

(B) a final report not later than July 1, 1991.

(c) REPORT ON WIC FOOD PACKAGE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall review the appropriateness of foods eligible for purchase under the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children carried out under section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

(2) FACTORS.—In conducting such review, the Secretary of Agriculture shall take into consideration such factors as—

(A) how effectively protein, calcium, and iron are provided to participants;

(B) nutrient density of foods; and

(C) the extent to which nutrients, for which program participants are most vulnerable to deficiencies, such as iron, thiamine, riboflavin, vitamin A, and zinc, are effectively provided to participants.

(3) REPORTS.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall provide to the Congress—

(A) a preliminary report on such review no later than June 30, 1991; and

(B) a final report on such review no later than June 30, 1992.

(d) REPORT ON COSTS FOR NUTRITION SERVICES AND ADMINISTRATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall review the effect on costs for nutrition services and administration incurred by State and local agencies of this section, section 213, and the amendments made by such sections (including the effect of both increases and decreases in requirements imposed on such agencies).

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress a report on the results of the review conducted under this subsection.

(e) PAPERWORK REDUCTION.—In implementing and monitoring compliance with the provisions of the amendments made by this section (other than the amendment made by subsection (a)(2) to section 17(d)(2) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1786(d)(2)), the Secretary of Agriculture shall not impose any new requirement on a State or local agency that would require the State or local agency to place additional paperwork or documentation in a case file maintained by a local agency.

(f) IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) BREASTFEEDING PROMOTION; NUTRITION EDUCATION; OUTREACH.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations to implement the amendments made by subsections (a)(2), (a)(3), and (a)(4).

(2) EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION; ALLOCATIONS.—The amendments made by subsections (a)(5), (a)(6), and (a)(7) shall be effective as of October 1, 1989.

SEC. 124. NUTRITION EDUCATION AND TRAINING.

Section 19 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1788) is amended—

(1) in subsection (d)—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) by amending subparagraph (B) to read as follows: "(B) training school food service personnel in the principles and practices of food service management, in cooperation with materials developed at any food service management institute established as authorized by section 21(a)(2) of the National School Lunch Act, and"; and

(ii) in subparagraph (C), by striking "schools and child care institutions" and inserting "schools, child care institutions, and institutions offering summer food service programs under section 13 of the National School Lunch Act";

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking "the National Advisory Council on Child Nutrition;"; and

(C) in the first sentence of paragraph (4), by inserting before the period the following: ", in coordination with the activities authorized under section 21 of the National School Lunch Act";

(2) in subparagraph (C) of subsection (h)(3), by striking "the National Advisory Council on Child Nutrition,";

(3) by amending paragraph (2) of subsection (i) to read as follows:

"(2)(A) There is authorized to be appropriated for grants to each State for the conduct of nutrition education and information programs—

"(i) $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1990;

"(ii) $15,000,000 for the fiscal year 1991;

"(iii) $20,000,000 for the fiscal year 1992; and

"(iv) $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1993 and 1994.

"(B)(i)(I) Subject to clause (ii), grants to each State from the amounts appropriated under subparagraph (A) shall be based on a rate of 50 cents for each child enrolled in schools or institutions within such State.

"(II) If the amount appropriated for any fiscal year is insufficient to pay the amount to which each State is entitled under subclause (I), the amount of each grant shall be ratably reduced. If additional funds become available for making such payments, such amounts shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

"(ii) No State shall receive an amount that is less than—

"(I) $50,000, in any fiscal year in which the amount appropriated for purposes of this section is less than $10,000,000;

"(II) $62,500, in any fiscal year in which the amount appropriated for purposes of this section is $10,000,000 or more but is less than $15,000,000;

"(III) $68,750, in any fiscal year in which the amount appropriated for purposes of this section is $15,000,000 or more but is less than $20,000,000; and

"(IV) $75,000 in any fiscal year in which the amount appropriated for purposes of this section is $20,000,000 or more."; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) The Secretary shall assess the nutrition information and education program carried out under this section to determine what nutrition education needs are for children participating under the National School Lunch Act in the school lunch program, the summer food service program, and the child care food program.

"(2) The assessment required by paragraph (1) shall be completed not later than October 1, 1990.".

PART C—CROSS-PROGRAM PROVISIONS

SEC. 131. DETERMINATION OF TOTAL COMMODITY ASSISTANCE FOR THE SCHOOL LUNCH AND CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAMS.

(a) SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM.—Section 6(e) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1755(e)) is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1)(A) The national average value of donated foods, or cash payments in lieu thereof, shall be 11 cents, adjusted on July 1, 1982, and each July 1 thereafter to reflect changes in the Price Index for Food Used in Schools and Institutions. The Index shall be computed using 5 major food components in the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Producer Price Index (cereal and bakery products, meats, poultry and fish, dairy products, processed fruits and vegetables, and fats and oils). Each component shall be weighed using the same relative weight as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"(B) The value of food assistance for each meal shall be adjusted each July 1 by the annual percentage change in a 3-month average value of the Price Index for Foods Used in Schools and Institutions for March, April, and May each year. Such adjustment shall be computed to the nearest 1/4 cent.

"(C) For each school year, the total commodity assistance or cash in lieu thereof available to a State for the school lunch program shall be calculated by multiplying the number of lunches served in the preceding school year by the rate established by subparagraph (B). After the end of each school year, the Secretary shall reconcile the number of lunches served by schools in each State with the number of lunches served by schools in each State during the preceding school year and increase or reduce subsequent commodity assistance or cash in lieu thereof provided to each State based on such reconciliation.

"(D) Among those commodities delivered under this section, the Secretary shall give special emphasis to high protein foods, meat, and meat alternates (which may include domestic seafood commodities and their products).

"(E) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, not less than 75 percent of the assistance provided under this subsection shall be in the form of donated foods for the school lunch program."; and

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking "Each State agency" and inserting "To the maximum extent feasible, each State agency".

(b) CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM.—Paragraph (1) of section 17(h) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1766(h)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1)(A) The Secretary shall donate agricultural commodities produced in the United States for use in institutions participating in the child care food program under this section.

"(B) The value of the commodities donated under subparagraph (A) (or cash in lieu of commodities) to each State for each school year shall be, at a minimum, the amount obtained by multiplying the number of lunches and suppers served in participating institutions in that State during the preceding school year by the rate for commodities or cash in lieu of commodities established under section 6(e) for the school year concerned.

"(C) After the end of each school year, the Secretary shall—

"(i) reconcile the number of lunches and suppers served in participating institutions in each State during such school year with the number of lunches and suppers served by participating institutions in each State during the preceding school year; and

"(ii) based on such reconciliation, increase or reduce subsequent commodity assistance or cash in lieu of commodities provided to each State.

"(D) Any State receiving assistance under this section for institutions participating in the child care food program may, upon application to the Secretary, receive cash in lieu of some or all of the commodities to which it would otherwise be entitled under this subsection. In determining whether to request cash in lieu of commodities, the State shall base its decision on the preferences of individual participating institutions within the State, unless this proves impracticable due to the small number of institutions preferring donated commodities.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall become effective on July 1, 1989.

TITLE II—PAPERWORK REDUCTION AMENDMENTS

PART A—REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK UNDER THE NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT

SEC. 201. PERMANENCY OF STATE-LOCAL AGREEMENTS FOR CARRYING OUT THE SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM.

Section 8 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1757) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentences: "The agreements described in the preceding sentence shall be permanent agreements that may be amended as necessary. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to limit the ability of the State educational agency to suspend or terminate any such agreement in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

SEC. 202. INCOME DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) ELIMINATION OF DUPLICATE PROVISIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 9(b) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1758(b)), as similarly amended first by section 323 of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-500 (100 Stat. 1783-361), later by section 323 of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-591 (100 Stat. 3341-364), and later by section 4203 of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661), and as then amended by section 1 of Public Law 100-356, is amended to read as if only the amendment made by section 4203 of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986 was enacted.

(2) FREE LUNCH PROGRAM ELIGIBILITY UNDER PUBLIC LAW 100-356.—(A) Section 9(b)(1)(A) of the National School Lunch Act (as amended by paragraph (1) of this subsection) (42 U.S.C. 1758(b)(1)(A)) is amended—

(i) in the second sentence, by striking "For the school years ending June 30, 1982, and June 30, 1983, the" and inserting "The"; and

(ii) by striking the third sentence.

(B) The amendments made by subparagraph (A) shall take effect as if such amendments had been effective on June 28, 1988.

(b) INCOME DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENTS.—Section 9 of the National School Lunch Act (as amended by subsection (a) of this section) (42 U.S.C. 1758) is amended—

(1) by amending subparagraph (C) of subsection (b)(2) to read as follows:

"(C)(i) Except as provided in clause (ii), each eligibility determination shall be made on the basis of a complete application executed by an adult member of the household. The Secretary, State, or local food authority may verify any data contained in such application. A local school food authority shall undertake such verification of information contained in any such application as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe and, in accordance with such regulations, shall make appropriate changes in the eligibility determination with respect to such application on the basis of such verification.

"(ii) Subject to clause (iii), any school food authority may certify any child as eligible for free or reduced price lunches or breakfasts, without further application, by directly communicating with the appropriate State or local agency to obtain documentation of such child's status as a member of—

"(I) a household that is receiving food stamps under the Food Stamp Act of 1977; or

"(II) a family that is receiving assistance under the program for aid to families with dependent children under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(iii) School food service authorities shall only use information obtained under clause (ii) for the purpose of determining eligibility for participation in programs under this Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.";

(2) in subsection (d)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "numbers of all adult" and all that follows and inserting the following: "number of the parent or guardian who is the primary wage earner responsible for the care of the child for whom the application is made, or that of another appropriate adult member of the child's household, as determined by the Secretary. The Secretary shall require that social security account numbers of all adult members of the household be provided if verification of the data contained in the application is sought under subsection (b)(2)(C).";

(B) in paragraph (2)—

(i) by amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) appropriate documentation relating to the income of such household (as prescribed by the Secretary) has been provided to the appropriate local school food authority so that such authority may calculate the total income of such household;";

(ii) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting "; or"; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) documentation has been provided to the appropriate local school food authority showing that the family is receiving assistance under the program for aid to families with dependent children under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.".

(c) IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations to implement the amendments made by subsection (b).

SEC. 203. REPORTS TO STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

Paragraph (1) of section 11(e) of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1759a(e)) is amended by striking "Each school" and all that follows through "State educational agency" and inserting the following: "The Secretary, when appropriate, may request each school participating in the school lunch program under this Act to report monthly to the State educational agency".

SEC. 204. 2-YEAR APPLICATIONS UNDER CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Subsection (d) of section 17 of the National School Lunch Act (42 U.S.C. 1766) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively;

(2) by inserting "(1)" after "(d)"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall develop a policy that allows institutions providing child care that participate in the program under this section, at the option of the State agency, to reapply for assistance under this section at 2-year intervals.

"(B) Each State agency that exercises the option authorized by subparagraph (A) shall confirm on an annual basis that each such institution is in compliance with the licensing or approval provisions of subsection (a)(1).".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary shall issue final regulations to implement the amendments made by subsection (a).

SEC. 205. PILOT PROJECTS FOR ALTERNATIVE COUNTING METHODS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Section 18 of the National School Lunch Act (as amended by section 107(2) of this Act) (42 U.S.C. 1769) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g)(1)(A) The Secretary shall carry out a pilot program for purposes of identifying alternatives to—

"(i) daily counting by category of meals provided by school lunch programs under this Act; and

"(ii) annual applications for eligibility to receive free meals or reduced price meals.

"(B) For the purposes of carrying out the pilot program under this paragraph, the Secretary may waive requirements of this Act relating to counting of meals provided by school lunch programs and applications for eligibility.

"(C) For the purposes of carrying out the pilot program under this paragraph, the Secretary shall solicit proposals from State educational agencies and local educational agencies for the alternatives described in subparagraph (A).

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall carry out a pilot program under which a limited number of schools participating in the special assistance program under section 11(a)(1) that have in attendance children at least 80 percent of whom are eligible for free lunches or reduced price lunches shall submit applications for a 3-year period.

"(B) Each school participating in the pilot program under this paragraph shall have the option of determining the number of free meals, reduced price meals, and paid meals provided daily under the school lunch program operated by such school by applying percentages determined under subparagraph (C) to the daily total student meal count.

"(C) The percentages determined under this subparagraph shall be established on the basis of the master roster of students enrolled in the school concerned, which—

"(i) shall include a notation as to the eligibility status of each student with respect to the school lunch program; and

"(ii) shall be updated not later than September 30 of each year.

"(3)(A) The Secretary shall carry out a pilot program under which a limited number of schools participating in the special assistance program under section 11(a)(1) that have universal free school lunch programs shall have the option of determining the number of free meals, reduced price meals, and paid meals provided daily under the school lunch program operated by such school by applying percentages determined under subparagraph (B) to the daily total student meal count.

"(B) The percentages determined under this subparagraph shall be established on the basis of the master roster of students enrolled in the school concerned, which—

"(i) shall include a notation as to the eligibility status of each student with respect to the school lunch program; and

"(ii) shall be updated not later than September 30 of each year.

"(C) For the purposes of this paragraph, a universal free school lunch program is a program under which the school operating the program elects to serve all children in that school free lunches under the school lunch program during any period of 3 successive years and pays, from sources other than Federal funds, for the costs of serving such lunches which are in excess of the value of assistance receiving under this Act with respect to the number of lunches served during that period.

"(4) In addition to the pilot projects described in this subsection, the Secretary may conduct other pilot projects to test alternative counting and claiming procedures.

"(5) Each pilot program carried out under this subsection shall be evaluated by the Secretary after it has been in operation for 3 years.".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations to implement section 18(g) of the National School Lunch Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section).

PART B—REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK UNDER THE CHILD NUTRITION ACT OF 1966

SEC. 211. STATE-LOCAL AGREEMENTS FOR CARRYING OUT THE SPECIAL MILK PROGRAM.

(a) ELIMINATION OF DUPLICATE PROVISION.—Section 3(a) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1772(a)), as similarly amended first by section 329 of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-591 (100 Stat. 3341-365) and later by section 4209 of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661), is amended to read as if only the later amendment was enacted.

(b) STATE-LOCAL AGREEMENTS.—Subsection (a) of section 3 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (as amended by subsection (a) of this section) (42 U.S.C. 1772) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(10) The State educational agency shall disburse funds paid to the State during any fiscal year for purposes of carrying out the program under this section in accordance with such agreements approved by the Secretary as may be entered into by such State agency and the schools in the State. The agreements described in the preceding sentence shall be permanent agreements that may be amended as necessary. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to limit the ability of the State educational agency to suspend or terminate any such agreement in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

SEC. 212. PERMANENCY OF STATE-LOCAL AGREEMENTS FOR CARRYING OUT THE SCHOOL BREAKFAST PROGRAM.

(a) ELIMINATION OF DUPLICATE PROVISION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 4(b) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1773(b)), as similarly amended first by section 330(a) of the School Lunch and Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in Public Law 99-591 (100 Stat. 3341-366) and later by section 4210(a) of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987 (Public Law 99-661), and as then amended by section 210 of the Hunger Prevention Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-435) is amended to read as if only the amendment made by section 4210(a) of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1986, as contained in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987, was enacted.

(2) IMPROVEMENT OF SCHOOL BREAKFAST PROGRAM UNDER HUNGER PREVENTION ACT.—(A) The first sentence of section 4(b)(3) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1773(b)(3)) is amended by striking "3 cents" and inserting "6 cents".

(B) The amendments made by subparagraph (A) shall take effect as if such amendments had been effective on July 1, 1989.

(b) STATE-LOCAL AGREEMENTS.—Subparagraph (A) of section 4(b)(1) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (as amended by subsection (a) of this section) (42 U.S.C. 1773(b)(1)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating clauses (i) and (ii) as subclauses (I) and (II);

(2) by inserting "(i)" after "(A)"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(ii) The agreements described in clause (i)(I) shall be permanent agreements that may be amended as necessary. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to limit the ability of the State educational agency to suspend or terminate any such agreement in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

SEC. 213. PAPERWORK REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS UNDER THE SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (as amended by section 123 of this Act) (42 U.S.C. 1786) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (e) the following new paragraph:

"(5) Each local agency may use a master file to document and monitor the provision of nutrition education services (other than the initial provision of such services) to individuals that are required, under standards prescribed by the Secretary, to be included by the agency in group nutrition education classes."; and

(2) in subsection (f)—

(A) in paragraph (7)—

(i) by inserting "(A)" after "(7)"; and

(ii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) State agencies may provide for the delivery of vouchers to any participant who is not scheduled for nutrition education counseling or a recertification interview through means, such as mailing, that do not require the participant to travel to the local agency to obtain vouchers. The State agency shall describe any plans for issuance of vouchers by mail in its plan submitted under paragraph (1). The Secretary may disapprove a State plan with respect to the issuance of vouchers by mail in any specified jurisdiction or part of a jurisdiction within a State only if the Secretary finds that such issuance would pose a significant threat to the integrity of the program under this section in such jurisdiction or part of a jurisdiction."; and

(B) by adding after paragraph (20) (as added by section 123(a)(3)(F) of this Act) the following new paragraph:

"(21) Each State agency shall conduct monitoring reviews of each local agency at least biennially.".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue final regulations to implement the amendments made by subsection (a).

SEC. 214. UPDATING OF PLANS FOR NUTRITION EDUCATION AND TRAINING.

Paragraph (3) of section 19(h) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (as amended by section 124 of this Act) (42 U.S.C. 1788(h)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Each plan developed as required by this section shall be updated on an annual basis.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me today in support of H.R. 24, the child nutrition and WIC reauthorization of 1989. H.R. 24 is a bipartisan, bicameral bill that generally improves the day-to-day operations of programs authorized under the National School Lunch and Child Nutrition Acts.

The House of Representatives approved the committee-reported version of this legislation on July 31. Soon thereafter, the Senate passed its version of H.R. 24, which was nearly identical to the House legislation. Because the differences between the two bills were so minimal, the House and Senate were able to quickly reach agreement on the version of the bill that is before us today.

If we approve the amendment before us today, the other body will likewise approve it and send it to the President. Therefore, we will avoid a conference committee on the minor differences between the House and Senate bills.

This legislation:

Expands the Summer Food Service Program to permit private nonprofit organizations to sponsor the program;

Expands the School Breakfast Program to include startup funds;

Requires State WIC agencies to utilize a cost containment system that yields the most savings, thereby making additional funds available to serve more of the eligible population;

Permits automatic WIC eligibility for individuals at nutritional risk who receive benefits from AFDC, food stamps, or Medicaid;

Requires the Secretary of Agriculture to develop a unified system of audits and reviews for the National School Lunch Programs;

Allows schools to certify children as eligible for free meals, without further application, by obtaining pertinent information directly from local food stamp or AFDC offices; and Reduces the amount of paperwork that schools and other participating organizations and institutions must complete in order to comply with program requirements.

H.R. 24 also extends through 1994 five expiring programs, the largest of which are the WIC and Summer Food Service Programs.

In addition, I would like to thank Chairman DE LA GARZA and Mr. EMERSON, and their staffs for their cooperation in resolving the Cash-CLOC issue. Under H.R. 24, the cash in lieu of commodities and commodity letter of credit pilot projects will continue through September 30, 1992, and participating Cash/CLOC school districts that sustained losses due to a change in USDA methodology will receive reimbursements.

Since we propose to avoid a conference committee on this legislation, I would like to ask permission to insert in the RECORD a detailed statement of explanation which we and our colleagues in the other body have agreed upon. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for final passage of H.R. 24.

NATIONAL SCHOOL LUNCH ACT

TYPES OF MILK INCLUDED IN SCHOOL LUNCH

The Committee action requires that fluid whole milk and unflavored lowfat milk be offered as a component of lunches served through the National School Lunch Program. School food authorities are not limited to offering these forms of milk but may continue to offer flavored and other forms of milk that provide maximum choice to meet student preferences.

SUMMER FOOD SERVICE PROGRAMS FOR CHILDREN

H.R. 24 permits private nonprofit organizations to sponsor the Summer Food Service Program in areas where public sponsors are not operating the program. Under the legislation, such sponsors may serve no more than a total of 2,500 children with no more than 300 children at one site (or 500 children with a waiver from the Secretary). In urban areas, a private nonprofit sponsor may operate a total of five sites; in rural areas, such sponsors may operate no more than 20 sites. The Committee intends that the Department continue to use the definition of "rural area" that is currently utilized in the Summer Food Service Program.

The Hunger Prevention Act of 1988 (P.L. 100-435) authorized the Secretary to institute Statewide demonstration projects in five States in which private nonprofit organizations would participate in the Summer Food Service Program. These demonstration projects have now been completed. USDA has apprised the Committee of its preliminary findings regarding the 1989 summer feeding demonstration activities.

The Committee is concerned that USDA's preliminary findings indicate that all of the requirements of the Summer Food Service Program were not fully met by a number of the private nonprofit organizations that participated in this summer's demonstration projects. Accordingly, the Committee will review the Department's final evaluation and any recommendations contained therein and may wish to make further modifications in the terms under which private nonprofit organizations may participate in the program.

The Committee believes that USDA and the State agencies should devote additional resources to monitoring all phases of future summer feeding program activities to ensure that local participants are fully apprised of and in compliance with all program requirements. Accordingly, H.R. 24 reserves one-half of one percent of Summer Food funds for the Secretary to develop and implement a State and federal monitoring system of private-nonprofit organizations.

The legislation also requires that there be a one-year period between when a public agency stops sponsoring a program in an area and when a private nonprofit agency can start meal service to children in that area. This provision does not apply if it can be determined, after consultation with the public agency involved that such agency discontinued participation for reasons other than that a private nonprofit organization was available to sponsor the program in that area.

The Committee also anticipates requesting the General Accounting Office to monitor future summer feeding activities conducted by private nonprofit organizations.

H.R. 24 includes a provision that requires the Secretary and State agencies to disseminate information in fiscal years 1990 and 1991 to private nonprofit organizations that are potentially eligible to participate as Summer Food sponsors. The Committee intends that a reasonable effort be made to provide information to private nonprofit organizations on the new provision in the Summer Food Program. The Committee does not intend for USDA to issue regulations that would unduly increase the administrative requirements of State agencies.

EXTENSION OF COMMODITY DISTRIBUTION PROGRAM

H.R. 24 extends the Commodity Distribution Program through fiscal year 1994. It also extends, for an additional year, the time period when school districts participating in a Cash/CLOC pilot project can make claims for losses they sustained in the 1982-1983 school year because of changes in the methodology of the pilot project. The bill also makes technical corrections to the language governing how losses are to be computed. These technical corrections are not in any way intended to change the method by which losses are to be computed or to affect the amounts school districts are eligible to claim and receive.

CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM

H.R. 24 has renamed the section in the National School Lunch Act that authorizes the Child Care Food Program and the Adult Care Food Program as the "Child and Adult Care Food Programs". The Committee believes that this title is a more appropriate designation of the section since the two programs serve very different populations. The Committee intends that the Child Care Food Program and the Adult Care Food Program, respectively, shall continue to be referred to as such.

H.R. 24 requires that the lunches served under the Adult Care Food Program meet one-third of the recommended daily allowance for adults as established by the National Academy of Sciences and allows the Governor of a State to designate a State agency, other than the one administering the Child Care Food Program, to operate the Adult Care Food Program.

The Committee is concerned about the frequency of monitoring of school-sponsored after-school care programs participating in the Child Care Food Program. Under current regulations, these after-school care programs are monitored six times a year. Because most of these programs operate only nine months of the year, the monitoring visits take place at nearly monthly intervals. The Committee believes that participating school-sponsored care programs should only be subject to monitoring three times a year and directs the Secretary to remedy this situation through the regulatory process.

HOMELESS CHILDREN

Homeless children living in temporary shelters often have limited access to an adequate and healthy diet. The Federal child nutrition programs, while designed to help meet the nutritional needs of poor children, do not in fact reach many children in homeless shelters. This is especially true for children under the age of 6. Shelters do not meet the eligibility requirements of the year-round child nutrition programs. While the Summer Food Service Program for children can partially meet the need during the summer months, these children are deprived of assistance the rest of the year.

The estimates of the number of homeless children vary but it appears that they number in the thousands. The lack of an adequate diet can make these children vulnerable to disease and illness. Young children are most at risk, since school-children can at least secure meals through school food programs.

Accordingly, this legislation mandates that the Secretary institute demonstration projects to provide year-round food service to homeless children under age 6 in emergency shelters. Under the demonstration projects, the Secretary shall enter into agreements with private non-profit organizations to conduct the project at shelters. The Secretary would be authorized to set the criteria for eligible non-profit organizations, except that no such organization could apply to operate the demonstration project at more than five sites, to serve more than 300 children at one site, or to operate a site that did not meet applicable State and local health, safety, and sanitation standards. We should note that we do not expect the criteria for eligible organizations to be set so rigidly that few such organizations would qualify. We expect the project to be carried out and the funds provided by this legislation to be fully expended for this purpose.

The demonstration projects would begin during the latter part of fiscal year 1990 and continue through September 30, 1994, at which time they would expire. The Secretary shall use $50,000 for the project in fiscal year 1990 and the sum of $350,000 in each fiscal year from 1991 through 1994. Also, for fiscal years 1992-94, additional funds may be made available for the demonstration projects by the recapture of unspent State Administrative Expenses dollars. Funds provided for the demonstration projects are to be used to carry out the projects at the nonprofit organization sites selected, and are not to be diverted for evaluation costs the Secretary may incur. The Secretary already receives an appropriation of several million dollars a year for studies and evaluations of child nutrition programs, and any evaluation costs should come from that source.

Under the demonstration, children shall be eligible to receive the same meals as may be provided under the Child Care Food Program, and at the same reimbursement rates. All children served in the projects would be deemed eligible to receive free meals without the collection of free and reduced-price meal applications, as is the practice in the Summer Food Service Program.

The purpose of the proposed demonstration projects is to determine the best means of providing food assistance to homeless preschool children in shelters. It is specifically designed to extend meal services year round to homeless children under the age of 6, to develop appropriate meal patterns for these children, and to determine the best method of food service delivery. What is needed is the flexibility in the demonstration project to utilize appropriate parts of various existing Federal child nutrition assistance programs to test the most effective way to deliver meals to homeless children in shelters.

These demonstration projects should in no way affect the participation of private nonprofit organizations serving homeless children in the Summer Food Service Program.

NATIONAL YOUTH SPORTS PROGRAM

H.R. 24 authorizes Federal reimbursements for meals and/or meal supplements served to low income children participating in the National Youth Sports Programs (NYSP) operated by colleges and universities during the academic year. Under this provision, colleges and universities that operate NYSP during the summer months and receive reimbursement under the Summer Food Service Program are automatically eligible to receive additional reimbursements if they operate NYSP that offer meal service during the academic year.

As is generally the case for the Summer Program, reimbursements under the academic year program are limited to two meals or one meal and a meal supplement per day for each child served, and there is no individual income test required for participating children. However, the total number of days for which reimbursements may be provided during the academic year is limited to 30, and reimbursement rates differ from those provided under the Summer Program. Lunches or suppers served under the academic year program will be reimbursed at the same rates as free lunches offered under the National School Lunch Program, and must meet the nutritional and meal pattern requirements of the School Lunch Program. Breakfasts and meal supplements served under the new program will be reimbursed at the severe need rate provided for free breakfasts under the School Breakfast Program. Breakfasts served during the normal breakfast period must meet the nutritional and meal pattern requirements of the School Breakfast Program. If served outside the normal breakfast time as meal supplements, the Secretary may require that such supplements meet the same nutritional and meal pattern requirements as those required for the School Breakfast Program, or may establish separate nutritional requirements and patterns for meal supplements.

To limit the amount of disruption in meal service and operations that might be caused by switching from the Summer Food Service Program to this new academic year program, the same State agency administering the NYSP Summer Food Program will administer the academic year NYSP. Additionally, no separate application to the State agency for participation in the academic year NYSP is required in cases where a college or university participates in the Summer Food Service Program. Moreover, the new provision specifies that requirements for implementing, operating and monitoring the academic year program be comparable to those required for colleges and universities participating in the Summer Food Service Program.

FAMILY OR GROUP DAY CARE HOME DEMONSTRATION

H.R. 24 extends through September 30, 1990, the one-State demonstration project that permits family and group day care homes to receive Federal reimbursement for one additional meal or snack per day for each child in care for more than eight hours.

FOR-PROFIT CHILD CENTERS

H.R. 24 requires the Secretary to conduct statewide demonstration programs that permit private, for-profit day care organizations to participate in the Child Care Food Programs if no less than 25 percent of the children in their care have incomes at or below 185 percent of the poverty level. Under current law, for-profit child care centers are eligible to participate in the Child Care Food Program if the proprietary center receives compensation for at least 25 percent of enrolled children through Title XX of the Social Security Act. The purpose of the pilot is to examine the budgetary impact of the change in eligibility that is being tested; to examine the extent to which additional low-income children can be reached; and to determine which outreach methods are most effective.

MEAL SUPPLEMENTS FOR AFTER SCHOOL CARE

H.R. 24 permits schools that have after-school care programs and are offering a snack through the Child Care Food Program as of May 15, 1989, to instead offer the snack through the National School Lunch Program. This provision was included in order to alleviate the paperwork burden that is generated by participation in the two programs.

CASH/CLOC

H.R. 24 extends the Cash/CLOC pilot programs through September 30, 1992. During the consideration of the extension of the authority to continue existing Cash and CLOC site operations, concerns were raised that the procedures governing the Cash and CLOC sites' operations may not respond adequately to USDA's mandate to support American agriculture markets and prices.

Therefore, the Committee encourages the Secretary to review current procedures and make modifications that may be appropriate to assist the Department in meeting its mandate to support domestic agricultural markets. The Secretary may wish to review the kinds of foods that can be purchased and the timing of purchases.

The Committee does not envision the pilot sites being overburdened with new complex procedures or rules or modifications that negate the major benefits that the school food service directors operating Cash and CLOC programs believe are offered by these alternative programs. These sites recognize the commodity program fulfills a dual purpose and are willing to cooperate with USDA in utilizing commodity letter of credit purchasing power in a manner that parallels USDA's commodity purchase activities. The Committee expects USDA to include representatives from school districts now operating Cash and CLOC programs in the development of any modifications USDA deems appropriate.

PAPERWORK REDUCTION

The legislation requires the Secretary to reduce the level of paperwork involved in administering programs under the National School Lunch and Child Nutrition Acts. Under this provision, the Secretary must convene at least one meeting of State and local administrators of the programs to solicit ideas for reducing paperwork; publish a notice in the Federal Register inviting others to suggest ideas for reducing paperwork; and report back to Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this Act on the extent to which the level of paperwork has been reduced. The report shall reflect the paperwork reduction that has been achieved beyond the provisions contained in H.R. 24.

TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND FOOD SERVICE MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE

The Committee believes that an essential part of the Secretary's administration of the child nutrition programs is to provide adequate training and technical assistance to State and local administrators of the child nutrition programs. It is through such activities that State agencies and local schools can meet the compliance and accountability demands of the programs. Under H.R. 24, the Secretary is authorized, at a minimum, to conduct training and technical assistance regarding menu planning, implementation of regulations and guidelines, and compliance with program requirements.

The Committee fully expects, that, for each year in which funds are appropriated for this purpose, the Secretary will conduct such training and technical assistance. It is important that such training, which may be contracted out by the Secretary or handled by the USDA regional office staff, be conducted at regional locations so as to provide convenient access by State and local school food service personnel.

H.R. 24 authorizes a Food Service Management Institute, to be established by the Secretary. The Institute is authorized to conduct research and training activities designed to improve the operation and quality of child nutrition programs. The Institute will provide assistance to schools and school food service personnel in developing cost effective methods to deliver nutritious meals to students. The Institute will be a national center for the research and development of effective and efficient management principles. The Institute will also provide education and training assistance to food service managers and personnel and engage in research to improve the efficiency of food service deliverers. Additionally, the Institute will serve as a clearinghouse for information retrieval and dissemination.

Emphasis should be placed on the collection of primary data of specific practitioners and related personnel, and the development of training materials and resources. The Committee anticipates that a national network of trained professionals throughout the United States will be established to present training programs and workshops utilizing training materials developed by the Institute.

Initially the target population will be individuals responsible for training school food service practitioners at the State, district and local levels. This population will be utilized to enhance the quality of currently available training programs while new programs are being developed by the Institute. Much of the research on and activities regarding the Lunch Program are easily transferable to other child nutrition programs, especially the School Breakfast Program. As the Institute's expertise in the Lunch and Breakfast Programs grows, the Committee believes that the Institute's activities will contribute to improving the quality of other feeding programs such as the Child Care Food Program, the Summer Food Service Program and the Elderly Feeding Program.

COMPLIANCE AND ACCOUNTABILITY

The Committee has included language in H.R. 24 outlining a "unified system prescribed and administered by the Secretary for ensuring that local food service authorities . . . comply with the provisions of this Act." The Committee requires States to coordinate all compliance and accountability activities so that the burden on schools is minimized. H.R. 24 requires the Secretary, when establishing this system, to do so through the publication of regulations, thereby allowing for public comment.

The role of the Secretary shall be to assist the States in monitoring schools and to monitor the compliance of States and local food service authorities through USDA's management evaluations. The Secretary and the State shall work cooperatively in monitoring the compliance of local food service authorities. The Committee intends for the Secretary to target management evaluations primarily on local food service authorities where there has been demonstrated significant noncompliance with program requirements. The Committee expects the Secretary to conduct management evaluations based on standards established through federal regulatory procedures which allow for public comment and to ensure that all current standards in use have been made available for public comment.

INFORMATION ON INCOME ELIGIBILITY

H.R. 24 requires the Secretary to provide information to States concerning the types of income counted in determining eligibility for free or reduced price meals, particularly with respect to how reimbursements provided under the Child Care Food Program to family day care providers are counted. Also, information must be provided concerning the consideration of applications for free or reduced price meals from households in which the head of household is less than 21 years of age. It is the intent of the Committee that information on any changes to the prototype application or letters to the parents be provided to the State agency prior to two months before the end of the preceding school year.

NUTRITION GUIDANCE FOR CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS

H.R. 24 requires the Secretaries of Agriculture and Health and Human Services to develop a publication entitled "Nutrition Guidance for Child Nutrition Programs". The Committee believes that this publication should give schools, institutions and organizations participating in the National School Lunch, Breakfast, Child Care Food and Summer Food Programs basic guidance on preparing meals that are nutritionally appropriate for children. The Committee strongly emphasizes that the Secretaries develop the publication within the two year deadline that is provided in H.R. 24.

H.R. 24 requires the Secretary to revise the menu planning guides as necessary to reflect the Nutrition Guidance. The Committee, however, strongly encourages USDA to reprint the menu planning guides. We have heard from State and local programs administrators who have informed us that there is a shortage of the current menu planning guides.

The Committee intends that the Nutrition Guidance publication be distributed to child care centers and family and group day care homes through the Child Care Food Program sponsors or State agencies.

CHILD NUTRITION ACT OF 1966

EXPANSION OF SCHOOL BREAKFAST

H.R. 24 provides funds for the initiation of School Breakfast Programs. The expansion funds will be provided to States on a competitive basis. The Secretary shall give preference in the grant awards process to states that (1) submit to the Secretary a plan to expand school breakfast programs conducted in the State, including a description of the manner in which the agency will provide technical assistance and funding to schools in the State to expand such programs or a description of State laws that require the expansion of such program during such year; (2) do not have a breakfast program available to large number of low-income children in the State or serve a low percentage of free and reduced price breakfasts under the school breakfast program when the number of such breakfasts is measured as a percentage of the number of free and reduced price lunches served in such State under the school lunch program carried out under the National School Lunch Act; or (3) have assembled significant public or private resources to expand the school breakfast program within the State in such year.

H.R. 24 requires State education agencies to provide information to school boards and public officials concerning the benefits and availability of the school breakfast program. The Committee believes that this information effort should be primary directed at school boards and to appropriate public officials. In addition, each State educational agency shall select each year, for additional information efforts, schools in the State that do not participate in the breakfast program and in which a substantial portion of school enrollment consists of children from low-income families.

In addition to the regular entitlement for meal reimbursements in the Breakfast Program, the Committee has created a new mandatory spending program for the expansion of breakfast programs in fiscal year 1990.

STATE ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

H.R. 24 limits the amount of State Administrative Expenses (SAE) funds that a State may carry over to 25% of the FY 1991 funds and 20% of the funds in each subsequent year. Any SAE funds that are returned to the Secretary shall be dedicated to the Homeless Children Demonstration Program authorized in H.R. 24. Any funds remaining after allocating to the Homeless Children Demonstration shall be reallocated among States that demonstrate need for additional administrative funds.

The legislative also requires that State agencies other than the State education agency that administer any of the programs eligible for SAE funds receive the amount made available to the State for administrative of such programs.

H.R. 24 also requires States to ensure that an appropriate amount of SAE funds received by the State are provided to State agencies administering the distribution of commodities to child nutrition programs. With any allocation of funds under this provision, the Committee would expect State commodity distribution agencies that currently levy fees on local school food authorities for the provision of commodities to reduce the amount of or eliminate such fees whenever possible.

In ensuring, through the regulatory process, the adequacy of funds for the administrative costs of distributing commodities, the Secretary shall consider the effect on the State educational agencies of the shifting of funds from the current discretionary or nondiscretionary SAE allocations to States under the National School Lunch or Child Nutrition Acts. Additional funds required for the distribution of commodities may however be allocated from SAE funds voluntarily released by State agencies.

20 PERCENT COMMODITY REFUSAL

The Committee has retained the provision in current law that allows schools participating in the school lunch program to refuse up to 20 percent of the value or commodities that they are entitled to receive each year, and if other commodities are available to the State, to receive commodities in lieu of the commodities that were refused. Although most school food service authorities do not opt to exercise this option, it has been retained to provide flexibility to those schools that may not be able to utilize certain commodities that may be offered. The Committee is aware of the fact that USDA is in the process of implementing the extensive reforms mandated by the Commodity Distribution Reform Act and WIC Amendments of 1987. At such time as all of the changes authorized under this Act are fully implemented, the Committee intends to reconsider the need for the 20% refusal option.

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN

Program eligibility

H.R. 24 includes an amendment requiring that an individual at nutritional risk who receives benefits from Food Stamps, AFDC or Medicaid or who is a member of a family in which a pregnant women or infant receives Medicaid benefits be deemed automatically to meet the WIC income test.

COUNTABLE INCOME

H.R. 24 permits State agencies to not count basic allowance for quarters received by military service personnel residing off military installations as income for the purpose of determining income eligibility for WIC.

STATE AGENCY REQUIREMENTS

State agenices are required to ensure that written information is provided to adult participants and applicants regarding AFDC, Food Stamps, and the child support enforcement program under the Social Security Act. A WIC agency could satisfy this requirement by providing a fact sheet that contains basic information about these programs and the addresses and phone numbers of local offices where low income families can apply. The agency would not be required to provide this information more than once to any individual participant or applicant. The agency must make certain that all current and future applicants and participants receive this information. It is not intended that WIC agencies will have to document in each WIC participant's or applicant's file that the fact sheet was handed out, as this would unnecessarily increase paperwork burdens.

Local agencies must refer to the Medicaid Program WIC participants and applicants who appear to meet the appropriate income criteria. State agencies must provide local agencies with the information necessary to conduct such referrals, including the Medicaid income guidelines and the appropriate agency where the participant or applicant could apply for Medicaid. It is not intended that USDA require WIC agencies to document in each WIC participant's or applicant's file whether a Medicaid referral was made.

STATE PLAN AND OTHER REQUIREMENTS

The legislation contains a series of new provisions designed to inform potentially eligible pregnant women about WIC, to make every effort to keep pregnant women enrolled through follow up calls and clinic hours that are convenient to working participants, and to provide applicants who cannot be certified for WIC with information about other food assistance programs. WIC agencies must maintain and make available to clients information on local resources for sustance abuse counseling and treatment.

Research on the medical impact of the WIC Program demonstrates that WIC has its greatest effects on pregnancy outcomes when a pregnant woman begins receiving WIC benefits at least six months before she gives birth. It is therefore important that pregnant women enroll in WIC as early in pregnancy as possible.

Accordingly, the legislation provides that if a pregnant woman not enrolled in WIC schedules an initial appointment to apply for the program, but then misses the appointment, the local WIC agency shall contact her to reschedule the appointment. The legislation does not envision local agencies having to undertake elaborate efforts—a brief phone conversation or the mailing of a post card would suffice. Also, the provision does not contemplate that an effort be made to locate a pregnant women if the local agency does not have her phone number or address. However, such agency should get her phone number (and/or the address) when a pregnant woman makes an appointment. This should become a routine part of making appointments for pregnant women, it if is not already.

Breastfeeding promotion materials and instruction must be in a language that the participant can understand. It is the intent of the Committee that State agencies need not expend public funds on the production of these materials in cases where private agencies have donated a sufficient supply of materials which include correct, complete and up-to-date information. It is also the intent of the Committee that any printed information provided to participants reflect, where possible, the reading level of the participants.

WIC FOR INCARCERATED WOMEN

Recent studies have found that women in prison and their babies comprise a population at risk for poor prenatal outcome. Because some penal healthcare systems do not meet what are nationally accepted as minimal standards in maternal and child health care, children born to mothers in prison, especially to those with alcohol and drug abuse problems, often have severe and chronic health problems which often require very specialized and expensive treatment.

The provisions adopted by the Committee would permit states, at their option, to expand WIC coverage to pregnant women and their infants in State and local prisons and juvenile detention facilities. States are permitted to adopt methods for the delivery of services and to change the form and/or distribution of WIC food packages to meet the needs of incarcerated women and the needs of the state agency administering the program related to these institutions.

While the Committee expects that States may target selected facilities to serve, and will tailor the administration of the program accordingly, it is the intent of the Committee that the educational and nutrition components of WIC program be maintained.

Should future legislation comprehensively address the health and nutrition needs of incarcerated women, it is expected that correctional facilities participating in such a program would be ineligible to utilize this WIC provision.

WIC AUTHORIZATION

H.R. 24 reauthorizes the WIC Program through fiscal year 1994 with an FY 1990 authorization level of $2,158,000,000. The legislation also authorizes the Appropriations Committees to appropriate funds for WIC one year in advance of the fiscal year for which the funds are to be distributed. Forward funding would greatly assist State and local WIC agencies in administering the program because they would know exactly how much money they are going to receive and could plan accordingly.

PROGRAM EVALUATION/TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

H.R. 24 increases from $3 million to $5 million the maximum amount of funds available to the Secretary for evaluating program performance, making biennial reports on program characteristics to Congress, providing training and technical assistance to improve state agency administrative systems, and administering pilot projects.

TECHNICAL/ADMINISTRATIVE AMENDMENTS

H.R. 24 contains many provisions that are designed to improve both the Federal and State administration of the program. For example, the Secretary is required under H.R. 24 to issue first quarter letters-of-credit within 15 days of the enactment of appropriations legislation. Also, the bill requires the Secretary to issue an initial allocation of funds to States that covers no less than one-third of the State's fiscal year allocation. This provision is needed because many States are facing cash-flow problems due to the implementation of cost-containment measures.

The bill provides an annual inflation adjustment for the amount of Federal funds that will be available each year for the costs of nutrition services and administration. It does this by establishing a national average per participant grant amount for nutrition services and administration, and annually revising this amount to respond to changes in the implicit price index for State and local government services, published by the Bureau of Economic Analysis of the Department of Commerce. The bill requires the USDA to use the best data that is available on this index when computing the inflation adjustment.

The Commerce Department provides an advance estimate of price changes in a quarter within one month of the end of a quarter; a preliminary estimate within 2 months of the quarter's end and a final estimate within 3 months of the quarter's end. Additionally, the Commerce Department revises its final estimates each July for the previous three year period. In calling for use of the best estimate available, the Committee assumes that USDA will use the most recently available (final) estimates for the last quarter, and the most accurate (final or revised final estimates) for the preceding measurement period.

The 20 percent/80 percent split between nutrition services/administration and food is no longer viable. The use of infant formula cost containment measures makes it imperative to redesign the nutrition services/administration cost provisions in WIC.

State agencies are permitted under H.R. 24 to advance any amount of funding for nutrition services and administration to local agencies for significant expansion of program operations, as well as for commencement of program operations.

COST CONTAINMENT

The legislation requires State WIC agencies to institute the infant formula cost containment system that yields the most savings. The goal of the provision is to increase cost containment savings and to serve substantial numbers of additional low income pregnant women, infants, and children who are eligible for WIC but are currently left out of the program due to funding limitations.

The provision has two components. The first component essentially codifies, in the authorizing statute, and makes permanent, the language included in the fiscal year 1989 Agriculture Appropriations bill. The language requires States to implement a cost containment system for purchasing WIC infant formula unless a State demonstrates that such measures would not lower costs or would interfere with the delivery of WIC foods to participants.

The second component requires States to use the form of cost containment that saves the most money. The provision requires a State distributing WIC foods through retail stores either to use a competitive bidding system (under which a State uses a sealed bid process to select the single company offering the lowest price as the primary distributor of WIC infant formula in the State) or to use another cost containment system that is found, after the State secures bids under both systems, through a single bid invitation, and compares these bids, to yield equal or greater savings. Over the past year and a half, first Florida and then a number of other States have issued in RFP or invitation to bid seeking bids under two different cost containment systems, compared the bids they received, and selected the cost containment system producing the most savings.

In comparing savings under different cost containment systems, States would have to compare rebate levels for the full term of the contract (including procedures for adjusting rebate levels when wholesale prices rise during the contract term). In addition, a State could, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, take other factors into account. These other factors include: the proportion of infants who, based on the experience of other States, would not reasonably be expected to use contract brand formula under a competitive bidding system; the amount of formula for which no rebate would be provided under an open market system (because one or more companies declined to provide rebates on their products); and differences in administrative costs relating to initiating a cost containment system (such as the cost of converting a computer system for the purpose of operating a cost containment system and costs of preparing participants for conversion to a new or alternate cost containment system).

The Secretary should issue regulations that cover issues involved in comparing savings from different cost containment systems. In developing the regulations, the Secretary would be expected to examine the most up-to-date information available on the actual experiences, with regard to these cost factors, of States that have implemented various forms of cost containment. This should provide information on the levels of costs that can reasonably be expected to be incurred.

The provision would not interfere with cost containment contracts in effect on the date of enactment. In a State that has a contract in effect on the date of enactment of this legislation, the provision would take effect when the current contract term expires and the contract comes up for renewal, extension, or negotiation. It should be noted that in such a circumstance, the date of expiration of the contract term would be the expiration date specified in the contract at the time of enactment of this legislation.

The provision also stipulates that if a State has more than one contract in effect on the date of enactment, and the contracts expire on different dates, the provision would take effect on the latest date that a contract expires. A State would be allowed to extend a contract with an earlier expiration date for the period up until the date of expiration of the contract with the latest expiration date.

The provision affects States in which WIC foods are purchased at retail stores. If a State uses retail stores to deliver WIC foods in one part of the State and another delivery system is used in another part of the State, the provision applies only in the part of the State with a retail system.

The provision also includes a waiver procedure. The Secretary is required to waive the requirement that a State use the cost containment system generating the largest savings if a State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that compliance with this requirement would interfere with efficient or effective operation of the program or would have such a minimal effect that the difference in savings would not be significant. The Secretary shall prescribe the terms and criteria under which a waiver could be granted.

The Committee notes that the provision for granting waivers when compliance with the cost containment requirements "would be inconsistent with efficient or effective operation of the program" is to be used only in circumstances in which the Secretary finds that there is strong evidence that the program, and the needy population it serves, would be harmed by compliance with this provision. It is not intended that the waiver authority be used to weaken or dilute the cost containment provisions to this bill, which Members of Congress have worked hard to design.

Some 20 States currently use competitive bidding in their WIC programs, and these States have not experienced problems that interfere with efficient and effective program operation. Instead, efficiency and effectiveness have been enhanced through reduced prices for infant formula and resulting expansion of the program to more eligible women, infants and children. The legislation includes a waiver authority so that if a new circumstance should arise in the future under which compliance with these requirements would actually have an adverse effect on the program in a State, the Secretary would be able to grant an exception.

One other issue regarding waivers merits some mention. One or two States that have not yet instituted a cost containment system may be ready to sign contracts before the regulations for the new cost containment provisions are issued. If such circumstance should occur, it would seem reasonable for the Secretary to grant a waiver, but only for a limited period of time (such as up to one year) so that a State can institute some cost containment measures in the interim.

The legislation also provides that the Secretary shall provide information to Congress at six month intervals on waivers that have been granted. For these purposes, a letter would suffice; a formal report is not necessary.

This provision contains several other features as well. First, it requires that the Secretary provide technical assistance to certain Indian State agencies to assist these agencies in achieving the maximum cost containment savings feasible. In addition, it authorizes the Secretary to exempt certain Indian agencies from the requirement to institute the cost containment system that would yield the greatest savings if the Secretary finds that compliance with the requirement would not be feasible for these agencies. If the Secretary issues such an exemption, certain Indian agencies would be exempt from further cost containment activities other than the implementation of the feasibility plans they have already submitted under the fiscal year 1989 Agriculture Appropriations Act.

The provision also requires the Secretary to provide technical assistance, on request, to States that desire to consider a cost containment system covering more than one State WIC agency. Recently, Maryland, Delaware, and the District of Columbia instituted a joint cost containment system and achieved savings greater than those they would have been likely to achieve if each of these States acted independently.

Finally, the provision requires that a State agency may not enter into a contract under which an infant formula company could cancel the contract, reduce rebate levels, or otherwise reduce savings before the scheduled expiration of contract in retaliation for the State soliciting or securing bids or signing a contract for another cost containment system for the period after the current contract expires. This provision will enable (and will require) States to reject any pressures to include provisions in contracts allowing companies to cancel or reduce rebates prematurely.

Regulations implementing these provisions shall be promulgated no later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this legislation. Prompt promulgation and implementation of the regulations is essential, since several States have contracts that expire next spring.

The Committee does not intend to preclude States from converting nutrition services/administrative funds to food benefit funds.

CENSUS INFORMATION

H.R. 24 requires the Secretary, in coordination with the Secretary of Commerce, to make available an estimate of the number of women, infants, and children by State and county (or equivalent political subdivision) who are income eligible for WIC. This estimate should be made upon the completion of the 1990 decennial census.

BREASTFEEDING PROMOTION

The legislation requires that States spend at least their proportionate share of $8 million on breasfeeding promotion activities. H.R. 24 requires the State agency to provide training on breastfeeding promotion to staff of local agencies. The Committee wants to make clear that does not mean that the State must provide such training to every staff person of each local agency.

Health experts world-wide acknowledge breastfeeding is the optimal way to feed and nurture infants and should be practiced whenever possible. The immunological benefits of breastfeeding are not available through breast-milk substitutes. However, due to numerous nutritional, psychological, cultural and other barriers to breastfeeding, WIC women breastfeed at rates much lower than more affluent American women. Studies funded through the U.S. Departments of Agriculture and Health and Human Services have found when thoughtful, coordinated breastfeeding promotion and support programs are implemented to address these barriers, more women choose to breastfeed and to breastfeed longer. Successful programs include prenatal counseling and group discussions addressing individual concerns and lack of knowledge, early postpartum hospital, clinic, and phone support, positive peer influence, coordination with other Federal maternal and child health programs and community health care providers, and designation of breastfeeding promotion coordinator.

In carrying out the breastfeeding promotion activities, States are to provide clients with information based on the most up-to-date medical findings on the effect of alcohol, illicit drugs, prescription drugs, nicotine, over-the-counter drugs and other items they may consume on the health of their child. Information on how infants react when a breastfeeding mother consumes such substances is changing on a frequent basis. Materials and information provided to mothers should contain the most recent information available from the medical community and reflect a consensus among experts in the field. We believe the updating of pertinent information will assure infants receive the maximum benefit possible from breastfeeding.

In documenting funding spent on breastfeeding promotion, it is the intention of the Committee that States may include any funding used to purchase materials or breastfeeding equipment. The State can also include State expended funds used to train staff in breastfeeding promotion and counseling. Part of the State's funding may include documentation on the time that nutrition counselors or medical professionals spend counseling WIC participants on breastfeeding. It is not the intention of the Committee to require States to hire specialists to promote breastfeeding if trained staff and medical professionals are available and currently promoting and counseling on breastfeeding.

DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM IN COMMUNITY COLLEGES

H.R. 24 authorizes $1 million for the Secretary to carry out demonstration programs in community colleges that offer nursing education programs and operate clinics that are accessible to WIC eligible persons in nontraditional hours.

UPDATING CENSUS DATA

The Committee believes that the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, should investigate the use of systems to update census data more frequently than every 10 years for use in allocating WIC funds. Updated census data would ensure that States are receiving the correct amount of funds to adequately serve their populations.

INFORMATION AND DATA SYSTEMS

H.R. 24 authorizes $2 million for the Secretary to make grants to State agencies to improve and update the information and data systems that they use in carrying out WIC programs.

REPORT ON MIGRANT PARTICIPATION

H.R. 24 requires that the Secretary submit a report on interstate migrant participation in the WIC program every other October 1. Current law requires that the report be submitted annually.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON MATERNAL, INFANT, AND FETAL DEVELOPMENT

H.R. 24 increases the membership on this advisory council in order to include a person who is an expert in the promotion of breastfeeding.

REVIEW OF PRIORITY SYSTEM

H.R. 24 requires the Secretary to conduct a review of the relationship between nutritional risk criteria and the priority system used to enroll WIC program participants.

REPORT ON WIC FOOD PACKAGES

H.R. 24 directs USDA to report on the appropriateness of foods eligible for purchase in the WIC Program. In particular, the Department will address how well the statutory objectives of providing foods that are rich in protein, calcium and iron are achieved, since those are foods of particular importance to the target population. The Department will also address nutrient density in its review of the appropriateness of WIC foods in providing nutrients for which the target population is most vulnerable to deficiencies. We note that iron, Vitamin A and zinc are nutrients that the target population tends to consume at levels well below the Recommended Dietary Allowance.

There is concern that the Department look beyond the nutrient composition of foods. Bioavailability of such nutrients should be considered. For example, testimony delivered to the Senate Committee on Agriculture indicates that bioavailability may greatly influence the effectiveness of various options for addressing the iron needs of the WIC population. The need for foods rich in heme iron needs to be considered and addressed. The Department should examine whether iron consumed in the present WIC food packages has poor bioavailability unless ingested at the same time as certain other foods which will enhance iron absorption. The assumption that these foods are consumed simultaneously so that bioavailability is enhanced requires empirical support and investigation.

REPORT ON COST OF ADMINISTRATION AND NUTRITION SERVICES

H.R. 24 requires the Secretary to review the effects of the WIC requirements in this Act upon State and local agency costs for administration and nutrition services.

RESTRICTIONS ON ADDED PAPERWORK FOR CASEWORK FILES

H.R. 24 specifies that except in the case of the provisions providing automatic income eligibility for persons who receive food stamps, AFDC or Medicaid, the Secretary is not to impose any new requirement on State and local agencies to place additional paperwork in, or otherwise additionally document, a case file maintained by an agency.

HEMATOLOGICAL TESTING

The Committee expects the Secretary, in coordination with the Secretary of Health and Human Services and interested national medical organizations, to determine when hematological testing of infants is appropriate and at what intervals such testing should be required for purposes of the WIC program.

CERTIFICATION PERIODS

The Committee expects the Secretary, within one year after the date of enactment, to report to the House Education and Labor Committee and the Senate Agriculture Committee on the actions that have been taken to ensure that regulations governing certification periods for participants provide a consistent method for determining when the certification period will expire. The Committee also expects the Secretary to issue any regulations necessary to achieve this goal within one year after enactment.

NUTRITION EDUCATION AND TRAINING

H.R. 24 reauthorizes the Nutrition Education and Training Program through 1994 and authorizes the following amounts for program funding: $10 million in FY 1990; $15 million in FY 1991; $20 million in FY 1992; and $25 million in FY 1993 and 1994. The legislation also increases the amount of the minimum grant to a State when the actual appropriation increases.

PAPERWORK REDUCTION

H.R. 24 contains a series of provisions that are aimed at reducing the level of paperwork involved in administering programs under the National School Lunch and Child Nutrition Acts. The Committee believes that program accountability is very important and should not be compromised; however, it appears that the level of paperwork involved can be considerably reduced. The Committee expects the Secretary to consider carefully the paperwork burdens that new requirements may create and to consider whether some existing paperwork requirements may be eased.

SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS

This legislation requires schools and child care centers to collect the Social Security number of only that parent or guardian responsible for the child who is the principal wage earner or of another appropriate person as designated by the Secretary, instead of all adult household members, on the initial application for free or reduced price meals. The Committee is concerned that accountability be maintained in the National School Lunch Program while avoiding excessive administrative burdens for schools that are encouraging legitimate participation in the program. In order to avoid the unnecessary administrative burdens, the requirement for collection of the Social Security number of a parent or guardian shall not be construed as requiring schools to determine whether the individual providing the number is the child's parent or guardian.

Concerns have been expressed that the use of Social Security numbers for student participation in the program may have deterred the participation of otherwise eligible children. The record has shown that while useful, Social Security numbers may be of limited utility in detecting abuse in the National School Lunch Program. While regulations provide some flexibility in providing meals to students whose applications are not complete, school officials are often reluctant to provide such flexibility for fear of an audit exception.

The importance of nutrition for learning is firmly established. It is not the intent of the Committee to allow the required use of Social Security numbers to prevent otherwise qualifying students from participating in child nutrition programs. The Committee urges the Secretary to routinely notify participating schools of the policy regarding Social Security numbers on applications. In particular, schools should be made aware that if an applicant states that he or she does not have a Social Security number, that the statement shall suffice in lieu of providing such number. The Committee also requests that the Secretary ensure through the regulatory process that these problems of deterring participation by otherwise eligible students are resolved.

DIRECT CERTIFICATION OF ELIGIBILITY

Schools that can obtain information directly from local Food Stamp of AFDC offices regarding which children are from families that participate in these programs will have the authority to certify these children as eligible for a free meal without further application. Schools shall use the information obtained from the Food Stamp or AFDC office only for the purpose of determining a child's eligibility for a free meal under the National School Lunch or Breakfast Program. The information could be used for no other purpose.

It is the Committee's intent that the Secretary develop regulations on this provision requiring school officials to notify parents of their child's eligibility for a free meal, and give the parents the opportunity to determine whether or not their child should partake of the free meal(s) for which he or she is eligible. This requirement should pose the least burden on the school by requiring that a letter be sent to parents asking them to inform the school if they do not want their child to receive a free lunch. If the school does not hear from the parents within a certain number of days, specified by the Secretary, it is assumed that the parent has given consent for the child to receive a free meal.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 24, the Child Nutrition and WIC Amendments of 1989.

This is an important piece of legislation, one which will assist in feeding our Nation's school children, as well as mothers and children covered by WIC and other child nutrition programs.

In addition to extending through fiscal year 1994 the Summer Feeding, Nutrition Education and Training, and WIC Programs together with the commodity distribution and State administrative expense authorities, we have made many important program improvements which will assist in providing meals to needy children who would otherwise not be served. I would like to highlight just a few of the major provisions contained in H.R. 24.

We have often heard from school food personnel how hard it is to deal with a situation where they know a child is eligible for a free or reduced-price lunch, yet they cannot provide him or her with a meal because the parents did not fill out an application or the application was filled out improperly. We address this situation in several ways.

First, we permit schools to certify such children as eligible for free or reduced-price meals by obtaining pertinent eligibility information from personnel who administer the AFDC or Food Stamps Programs.

Second, we address the situation where a student is ineligible because the application does not contain the Social Security numbers of all adult members of the family. We amend current law to only require the number of the parent or guardian who is the primary wage earner responsible for the care of the child for whom the application is made. All Social Security numbers will still be required if the application is chosen for verification.

Moreover, we direct the USDA to simplify the application form so individuals with limited literacy skills can fill out the forms, thereby enabling their child to receive free or reduced-price meals. Often a parent does not fill out their child's application for a free or reduced price lunch or returns the form to the school containing errors because he or she doesn't understand the purpose of the application or cannot read the instructions.

All of these changes should go a long way in assisting school food personnel help feed needy children.

Another important provision in H.R. 24 requires a unified system of audits. During hearings before the Education and Labor Committee, we heard testimony about the burdensome number of audits imposed on school food service personnel. While we want to insure local school food service authorities are complying with the law, we don't want to burden them with audits to the extent that they have little time left to take care of their most important job—meeting the nutritional needs of children. It is the intent of this legislation to reduce the number of audits, while, at the same time, provide the Department with the ability to monitor programs through management evaluations of the State educational agencies and local school food authorities.

We have also included startup funds for schools that wish to initiate a School Breakfast Program. This is a particularly important provision since we know that children who eat breakfast do better in school. Funds under this section of the bill will be provided to States on a competitive basis. However, in order to target the money to reach the neediest students, we have set a list of priorities which includes States with a large number of low-income children who do not currently have access to a Breakfast Program and States which can show that they are currently using public and private resources to expand the Breakfast Program.

Another important provision in H.R. 24 once again permits nonprofit organizations to participate in the Summer Feeding Program in areas in which public sponsors are not operating a program. As you may recall, we eliminated nonprofit entities as Summer Food Program sponsors in 1981 because of blatant program abuses. While we are apprehensive about permitting nonprofits to again sponsor the Summer Feeding Program, we are concerned when we hear that some areas cannot find acceptable sponsors and children are not eating during the summer months when the School Lunch and Breakfast Programs do not operate.

We have, therefore, decided to again permit nonprofit sponsors to participate and included a variety of restrictions which we feel will prevent the earlier problems from reoccurring. For instance, we have provided that nonprofit sponsors can serve no more than a total of 2,500 children and no more than 300 children at one site. We have also limited such sponsors to operating 5 sites in an urban area and no more than 20 sites in rural areas.

We have required the USDA to develop a system under which the Secretary and State agencies can monitor the compliance of private nonprofit sponsors with the requirements for operating a Summer Food Program. We have reserved one-half of 1 percent of Summer Food Program funds to be used by the Secretary for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker, we have also made some important changes in one of the most successful Federal nutrition programs, WIC, and have raised the authorization level to $2,158,000,000 for fiscal year 1990. Such sums are authorized for fiscal years 1991–94.

During reauthorization hearings witnesses described situations which limited the access of individuals to the WIC Program. We share the concerns expressed by witnesses and have instructed the State agencies to adopt policies which enhance the ability of potential and current WIC clients to receive services through the WIC Program—including the implementation of flexible clinic hours for working clients and followup calls to women who miss their initial appointment to apply for program participation.

Excessive paperwork can also limit access to WIC by tying up personnel and potential clients with unlimited forms to fill out in order to determine whether or not a client is eligible to receive WIC benefits. To reduce paperwork for WIC personnel and redtape for potential beneficiaries, H.R. 24 requires that an individual who: First, already receives benefits through the Food Stamp, AFDC, or Medicaid Programs; or second, is a member of a family in which the pregnant woman or infant receives Medicaid benefits, automatically meets the WIC income test. This step alone should provide WIC personnel with additional time to address the needs of their clients.

H.R. 24 also includes a cost containment provision which should enable us to serve additional women, infants, and children. Infant formula has been a major cost to the WIC Program. Many States have entered into exclusive agreements with formula companies which provide them with rebates which they use to serve additional beneficiaries. This bill not only makes permanent a provision in the 1989 Agriculture appropriations bill which requires States to implement a cost containment system for purchasing WIC infant formula, it requires them to institute the system which provides the greatest savings. With increased savings, additional individuals who are eligible for, but are not now receiving WIC benefits, can be served.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 24 also addresses the unfair situation in the WIC Program where you have two military families with similar incomes and one qualifies for WIC benefits and one does not. This problem exists because a housing allowance is considered as income for purposes of determining eligibility and the value of free, on-base housing is not.

To begin with, it is a shame that our military families even qualify for WIC. But they do and we believe we have to treat them equally when they have similar incomes. Therefore, this legislation provides States with the option of disregarding the housing allowance for those families who are not fortunate enough to have on-base housing and who otherwise would qualify for WIC benefits.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the extension of the Cash-CLOC pilot program through September 30, 1992. The Cash-CLOC demonstration project began with the 1981–82 school year, the result of a provision in the 1981 Agriculture appropriation bill requiring USDA to implement a demonstration project to test the feasibility of replacing donated commodities with commodity letters of credit [CLOC] or cash payments. This concept is not entirely new. Kansas has been receiving cash in lieu of donated commodities for many years. In addition to cash payments in lieu of commodities, Kansas also receives bonus commodities. This allays concerns that, if we do not have all of these commodity distribution programs, somehow or other the current system for disposing of surplus agricultural commodities will be jeopardized, and then we will not be able to distribute these commodities. Kansas does very, very well. Kansas receives cash in lieu of commodities plus bonus commodities.

So we are going to extend the present cash and commodity letter of credit alternatives to commodities and I am very pleased that we are doing so.

In the case of CLOC, it is the best of all words. It not only helps us distribute our surplus commodities, but lets us remove them at the local level. Moreover, it also permits the Department of Agriculture to determine exactly what commodities can be purchased locally, and in what time frame they must be purchased. So it is the best of all worlds.

I am also pleased that we are doing this because we get another benefit. We get competition. I was a school administrator at a time when there was no competition with commodity distribution. Many involved with commodity distribution became arrogant and insensitive to local program needs; we had the most unsatisfactory and inefficient distribution program you would ever want to witness. They have cleaned up their act considerably, and I think it is partially due, maybe to a great extent, to the fact that they got a little competition from the Cash-CLOC alternative programs. Competition always encourages you to do a little bit better, and they are doing better.

So I am pleased that we are going to continue those alternative programs. I am sure it will mean that our children will be receiving better food. It will also mean that we will be able to sell more foods in the commercial market and will not end up having them as surplus commodities.

It blows my mind when I hear some of the lobbyists here trying to preserve the status quo of the commodity distribution business when, if they would only use a little common sense, they would realize they probably would not have the surplus if we did things differently.

For instance, who in the world is going to go home and tell their parent that they had this magnificent, wonderful beef, beef that had been frozen for a long time, had been shipped all over the country, finally came back, got thawed, got sent out to be reprocessed, and then the cooks tried to make something decent out of it. That is pretty difficult to do. So those kids do not run home and say, "Hey, buy some beef, Mom, because it was so good at school." Children do when schools buy foods locally, and when they do not they have all the problems associated with commodity distribution.

Those schools participating in the pilot programs have testified to the many benefits of the Cash/CLOC alternatives including: First, fewer storage problems and reduced transportation costs; second, increased ability to prepare a larger variety of meals which are more acceptable to students and result in less plate waste; third, timely access to commodities; fourth, availability of commodities in a usable form; fifth, reduced labor costs; sixth, lower school lunch prices for participating students; and seventh, to local farmers.

So I think Cash and CLOC is a good program. It is a program that merits continued monitoring, but also extension so that we can provide the best, most nutritious meals possible for our schoolchildren.

Mr. Speaker, these are but a few of the major provisions incorporated in H.R. 24. This is a good, bipartisan bill and deserves the full support of Members on both sides of the aisle.

□ 1320

Mr. SPEAKER, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT], who had a lot to do with some of the parts of the program dealing particularly with WIC.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 24 and the agreements that have been reached with the Senate. I want to call to the attention of the House four major changes that the House committee and subsequently the agreement with the Senate amendments have made in the underlying WIC authorization law.

These four amendments and other similar less major amendments are designed to empower mothers to increasingly control decisions over their own lives.

For too long, too many programs which provide Federal benefits provide as a condition of receiving that Federal benefit disempowerment provisions. Dispowerment in the Government agrees to provide benefits to beneficiaries so long as beneficiaries agree to give up choices that they make for their own lives.

WIC, the Womens, Infants and Children Program, is generally regarded as one of the best, one of the most productive, and one of the most useful Federal programs for low-income mothers. Yet even with WIC benefits, items have nevertheless crept into WIC law, both at the State and Federal level, which have disempowered mothers, particularly working mothers, from making choices on their own.

I want to call to the attention of the House specific changes that were made in underlying WIC statute which will be implemented over the course of authorization. First, we provided an automatic eligibility that will require that an individual at nutritional risk who receives benefits from food stamps, AFDC, or Medicaid, or who is a member in which a pregnant woman or an infant receiving Medicaid benefits be deemed automatically to meet the WIC income test.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, we with this new empowerment amendment on the income test will determine that if a recipient is otherwise eligible for WIC and can prove their eligibility under the income standards for AFDC, food stamps, or Medicaid, that beneficiary will not be required to go into an additional income verification and income test under WIC. This will simplify the process rather substantially.

Second, we would require that a State provide in their State plan a plan to improve the access to WIC for participants and prospective applicants who are employed or who reside in rural areas by addressing specific and special ways of delivering services while minimizing time away from the job.

Those specific changes in State plans would include changes in appointment scheduling, changes in adjustment of clinic hours, adjustment of clinic locations, and mailing of multiple vouchers.

It would be our expectation that during the course of this authorization, that every clinic in the country would be at the very least hold itself open during nontraditional working hours for employed WIC recipients, who thus will not be required to take time off from their job in order to show up at the WIC office and become eligible for WIC benefits.

Third, we required that WIC set up in each local agency a plan, to the extent that is feasibile, a cooperative arrangement with their area hospitals so that hospitals would be able to advise potentially eligible individuals that receive inpatient or outpatient services related to the birth or care of their child, the availability of WIC services.

So that those individuals may in fact be certified within the hospital for the participation in WIC while they are in the hospital.

Fourth, we provided that State agencies will provide for the delivery of vouchers to any participant who is not scheduled for nutrition education counseling, the delivery of mailing those vouchers as opposed to the present system which oftentimes requires a WIC recipient to travel to the WIC office to simply pick up the vouchers.

Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the open mind with which the sponsors of this legislation, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and the ranking Republican, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] have approached these empowerment amendments in the WIC program, and I very much appreciate their persistence in negotiations with the Senate to keep these major amendments in the WIC bill.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I want to again congratulate my chairman who again carried the big stick and spoke softly and brought us to this point on this very excellent program.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 24, the Senate amendments to the Child Nutrition Act. I believe it is a measure of Chairman HAWKINS' effective leadership that so many of the recommendations made in the hearings process were incorporated into H.R. 24. I would like to congratulate Chairman HAWKINS and Congressman GOODLING for coming to bipartisan agreement on so many issues during the reauthorization process. I would like to express my satisfaction over the way in which the House was able to work effectively with the Senate to craft a measure we could all support.

I am especially pleased that H.R. 24 contains several provisions that I was actively involved in with Chairman HAWKINS and Mr. GOODLING. H.R. 24 expands the summer food section by allowing some private nonprofit groups back into this important program.

As we well know, the Summer Food Program is designed to provide the same nutritious meals to children as the School Lunch Program does during the school year. As a result of fraud and abuse in the program by private nonprofit sponsors during the late 1970's, these sponsors were cut from the Summer Food Program in 1981. As a result, many poor children no longer received the benefits of summer feeding programs. Our provisions allow certain private nonprofit sponsors, with specific protections, back into the program to serve these poor children.

H.R. 24 allows private nonprofit sponsors to serve no more than a total of 2,500 children with no more than 300 children at 1 site, or 500 children with a waiver from the Secretary. In urban areas, a private nonprofit sponsor may operate a total of 5 sites; in rural areas, such sponsors may operate no more than 20 sites. In order to ensure that private nonprofit sponsors are apprised of an compliance with program requirements, H.R. 24 reserves one-half of 1 percent of summer food funds for the Secretary to develop and implement a State and Federal monitoring system of private nonprofit organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 24.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989. In sum, it is a significant example of good fiscal and public policy; or how we can prepare our Nation's children for America's future.

At the outset, I want to thank the ranking Member and the ranking minority member for their efforts. In my opinion, what the House has before it is a fine conference bill, and a bill quite similar to the one we passed in July. When fully implemented this reauthorization will ensure that this Nation's most fragile Americans have the benefit of a well balanced meal.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, I want to address a provision included under section 101 which pertains to the types of milk offered to children under our school lunch programs. While I think it is important to provide children with a choice, I am expecially pleased that one of these choices will be whole milk. Children have diverse dietary needs depending on activity levels, and the inclusion of whole milk is one way to ensure that these needs are met.

Clearly, the child nutrition and WIC reauthorization is good policy. Not only will food service deliverers be better able to fulfill their vocation, but childrens needs everywhere will be better met; and America will be better able to continue to expect greatness from future generations. Thank you.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 24, the Child Nutrition and WIC Amendments of 1989.

In a country as wealthy as ours, it is a disgrace that we permit over 3 million children to live in poverty. It is a disgrace that we permit children to be homeless. And it is a disgrace that every day, thousands of children go hungry because we have not seen fit to provide them with proper nourishment to ensure their health and well-being.

Although this bill will not correct all the problems facing poor children, new provisions will ensure that there will be fewer hungry children in this country. One such provision permits schools to certify children as eligible for free meals, without further application, by obtaining pertinent information directly from local food stamp and AFDC offices.

More children, including low-income and homeless children and children living in rural areas, will be able to participate in the School Breakfast, Lunch, and Summer Food Programs.

The link between good nutrition and the ability to learn has been well documented. The Meyers study of low-income schoolchildren in Lawrence, MA, found that consumption of a school breakfast by low-income children was associated with significant improvements in academic performance, tardiness rates, and a trend toward improvement in absenteeism. Yet today, less than a third of the 94,000 schools that have a lunch program offer breakfast at school.

I am pleased that this legislation expands the School Breakfast Program to include startup funds. This program provides the opportunity to educate students about nutrition and healthy eating habits. School food authorities from around the country have indicated that the lack of Federal startup funds is one of the principal barriers to the initiation of a local School Breakfast Program.

Our purpose in providing startup funds is to encourage local school food authorities to initiate federally subsidized school breakfast programs in public and nonpublic schools currently not participating in the program and where breakfast is not offered to students. The School Breakfast Program has a proven track record, and I am pleased that more children will benefit from it.

The Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants, and Children [WIC] is one of the Federal Government's most cost-effective programs. The program's success in reducing low birth weight and premature births saves lives and saves money that, without WIC, would have to be spent on costly remedial care. In addition, WIC's ability to prevent nutrition-related health and developmental problems in infants and children is widely recognized.

I am especially pleased that the new WIC amendments target previously unserved populations, such as drug-exposed infants and children in the child welfare system, and permit States, at their option, to serve women in State and local juvenile and adult correctional facilities.

The lack of adequate nutrition and health care of incarcerated women, especially those who are pregnant, is well-documented. It is estimated that approximately 10 percent of the 31,000 women presently incarcerated are pregnant. Many of the women and infants who will be served by this provision are the same people that President Bush is attempting to reach through his national drug control strategy.

Women who are incarcerated, particularly for drug-related violations, have a multiplicity of serious problems which must be addressed while in prison. For those women who are pregnant, adequate nutrition is a serious problem for themselves and their babies, many of whom otherwise risk being born with severe medical complications resulting from severe medical complications resulting from malnutrition. Proper nutrition through the WIC Program would be an essential component of the drug rehabilitation program of these women. For their children, WIC would be a critical ingredient in their safe development.

It should be noted that the provision which permits States to serve incarcerated women is voluntary, not mandatory, upon the States. States have flexibility in determining which facilities they wish to serve, and in tailoring the delivery of services and the form and distribution of the food packages to meet both the requirements of the WIC Program and the administrative needs of the States.

This legislation improves the coordination of WIC with AFDC, food stamps, and Medicaid, which will result in the increased participation of eligible women and children.

This provision will ease the administrative burden on staff at local WIC agencies; save time for applicants; remove a potential barrier to program participation; and will result in an increase of referrals from WIC to other health and social services programs as WIC staff ask applicants about participation in other programs as part of the application process.

The problems of substance abuse are increasingly affecting populations of pregnant women, infants, and young children. It is estimated that there may be nearly 400,000 drug-exposed babies born this year who will be much more likely than nonexposed infants to be born prematurely, have low birthweight and exhibit a range of psychological and developmental problems. A recent survey by the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families of hospitals in more than a dozen metropolitan areas further revealed that the number of drug-exposed births had more than tripled since 1985, with several areas reporting drug-exposure of one in six newborns. Many of the women and infants most affected by the growing substance abuse crisis are among the low-income and nutritionally at-risk populations.

Recognizing the impact of the drug epidemic on women and children, the bill contains provisions which strengthen the information sharing and coordination between WIC and alcohol and drug abuse counseling and treatment programs. This bill also requires States to improve outreach and coordination between WIC and children's services agencies so that the needs of income eligible, nutritionally at-risk infants and children in foster care, protective services and child welfare can be met.

I am especially pleased that the final bill includes provisions to strengthen infant formula cost containment systems in the WIC Program. Having initiated the work on these provisions several months ago, I am gratified to see their inclusion in the final legislative package.

These provisions are among the important parts of this bill. They are designed to produce millions of dollars in new savings, so that thousands of more eligible women, infants, and children may be served.

The provisions require that all States use either competitive bidding to select a single infant formula company to provide formula for the WIC Program or use the system initially developed by the State of Florida under which a single invitation to bid is issued requesting bids under both a competitive bidding system and an alternative cost-containment system—and the system yielding the greatest savings is selected.

The provisions stipulate that if the Florida model is used, the comparison of the savings yielded by the various cost containment approaches should include more than a simple comparison of initial rebate offers. First, the provision stipulates that anticipated rebate levels over the full term of the contract be compared, including anticipated changes in rebate levels as wholesale prices rise over the course of the contract. This is important, because some current contracts provide for rebate levels to rise 1 full cent for each cent that wholesale prices increase, while other contracts do not. In the past, infant formula prices have risen about every 9 months.

In addition, the comparison of the savings that differing cost containment systems would generate may also include several other factors: The proportion of WIC infant formula that is reasonably expected to be noncontract brand under a competitive bidding system; the proportion of WIC infant formula for which no rebate is anticipated—because one or more companies decline to provide rebates under an open market or other multiprovider system; the costs of converting a computer system in order to initiate or switch to a new cost containment system; and the costs of preparing participants for initiation of our conversion to a new cost containment system. I would note that the administrative costs that can be included in these savings comparisons are costs in implementing a cost containment system, not ongoing costs in operating such a system. While there may be differences in administrative costs in initiating a cost containment system or converting to a different system, there should not be significant differences in ongoing operating costs once a system has been implemented.

The Secretary is to issue regulations to govern these savings comparisons. Let me be very clear that we do not intend for a State simply to be able to claim that an unrealistically high percentage of WIC infants would receive noncontract brand formula under a competitive bidding system. The Secretary is expected to examine the latest data on the proportion of infants receiving noncontract brand formula in States operating competitive bidding systems and to issue regulations, based on these data, that reflect the proportion of WIC infant formula that can reasonably be expected to be noncontract brand.

I am pleased that over time, the proportion of infant formula that is noncontract brand in competitive bidding systems has dropped. When Florida established the first savings comparison of the type envisioned in this legislation, it assumed that seven percent of infant formula would be noncontract brand, and not too long after that, Arkansas assumed 10 percent. Fortunately, experience has shown that the actual percentages of infant formula that are noncontract brand are much lower. I understand that in most competitive bidding States, less than 4 percent of the WIC infant is now noncontract brand.

The provisions of the legislation also include a waiver clause. The final legislation states that the Secretary shall grant a waiver under certain conditions. We should be clear about the Secretary's role. A waiver is to be granted when a State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that compliance would interfere with efficient or effective program operations or would provide a savings differential so minimal as to be inconsequential.

Furthermore, the waiver clause is not to be interpreted loosely or to be used to weaken the cost containment provisions of this legislation. To date, about 20 States have instituted competitive bidding and it has enhanced efficient and effective program operation in these States. Virtually all claims made in the past against competitive bidding have proven unfounded in these States by their actual experience in operating competitive bidding systems. We do not intend to see the old arguments recycled and used as the basis for a waiver.

To the contrary, the test for a waiver is that the Secretary would need to have convincing evidence that a State's WIC Program and its recipients would actually be adversely affected.

We intend to monitor very closely the Secretary's handling of the waiver provision. This is a classic example of a case where careful congressional oversight is in order.

The Secretary should also consider the health benefits of WIC when developing rules to implement the de minimis aspect of the waiver clause. The multiyear evaluation of WIC's health impacts conducted for USDA and released in 1986 found that WIC led to a reduction in late fetal deaths. A new study by the National Bureau of Economic Research finds WIC to be one the most cost-effective of all known ways to reduce infant mortality.

A difference in cost containment savings that resulted in several hundred fewer women, infants, and children being served in a State would not seem to be minimal or insignificant. Additional cases of low birthweight, anemia, or even infant death could be the consequence.

I would like to commend all those Members and staff who have worked hard on this provision. This is an example of government at its best, working to achieve maximum efficiency and to make the soundest use of the taxpayers' dollars in a noble cause.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation. I have worked closely with Chairman HAWKINS and other members of the committee on many aspects of this measure. This includes significant changes being made in the routine use of Social Security numbers to determine eligibility for the School Lunch and Child Care Food Programs.

Current law requires the collection of Social Security numbers for every adult household member before a child can be determined as eligible for a school lunch.

In practice, this requirement does little to stop fraud, but it does create a bureaucratic maze of paperwork; 44.1 percent—almost half—of all hours that schools spend making mandated reports to the Federal Government are a result of the School Lunch Program. And worse, the Department of Agriculture reports that this Mount Everest of numbers is little used. This is administrative overkill.

Unneeded paperwork is bad enough. But worse, this maze of reporting is keeping hungry kids from poor families from getting a school lunch.

Worst of all, recent reports remind us yet again that hungry kids don't learn. Even while the President's education summit calls for increasing academic achievement, this mountain of paperwork is undercutting the academic achievement of economically disadvanaged children in our schools. Provisions in this legislation eliminate the bureaucratic maze in order to improve education.

This measure requires the collection of the Social Security number for the primary wage earner responsible for the care of the child. It retains the ability of the Department to collect the Social Security numbers of all adults in the household when possible fraud is being investigated.

The Congressional Hispanic Caucus, the Congressional Black Caucus, the American Association of School Administrators and many other organizations have written to House and Senate Members urging adoption of the House language on this point. I am including these letters for the RECORD.

This bill makes major improvements in the School Lunch Program. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

CONGRESSIONAL HISPANIC CAUCUS
Washington, DC, September 12, 1989.

Hon. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS,
Chairman, House Committee on Education and Labor, Rayburn House Office Building, Inside Mail.

DEAR CHAIRMAN HAWKINS: During the conference negotiations on the National School Lunch Act, H.R. 24 and S. 1484, you will be considering a technical but very important amendment for Hispanic children nationwide.

The House version includes an amendment which would require that only the adult head of household provide their social security number in order for the children to participate in the school lunch program. The Senate version, however, requires this information from all the household adults. As Chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, I support the House version.

Mr. Chairman, by only requesting one of the adults to provide their social security number the intent to prevent and detect possible abuses would still be provided. To request that all adults provide this information would not only overburden the program with paperwork but would potentially deter some families from participating. For poor Hispanic children, this requirement can have additional adverse reaction as we consider the link between poor nutrition and scholastic achievement.

I hope to count on your leadership to assure that the School Lunch Program is administered in an efficient and in the most equitable manner possible.

Sincerely,

JAIME B. FUSTER,
Chairman, Congressional Hispanic Caucus.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 13, 1989.

Hon. AUGUSTUS HAWKINS,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR GUS: I am writing on behalf of the Congressional Black Caucus to express our support of the House amendment to H.R. 24, the National School Lunch Act, which would relax certain reporting requirements.

Currently, the law requires that the social security numbers of all adult household members be provided before a child is eligible for the school lunch program. While this information was thought to be necessary to prevent or detect abuse, the Department of Agriculture says that much of this information goes unused. In light of this, it seems unfair that qualified children, not able to provide this information, are denied access to such a vital program. Also, the Department of Education estimates that almost 50% of all hours committed to Federal reporting requirements are spent on the school lunch program and other related child nutrition programs.

For these reasons we support the amendment to H.R. 24, which would require only the adult applying for the school lunch program on behalf of the child to provide a social security number. The amendment also allows schools to waive this requirement for otherwise eligible children who cannot provide this information on a case by case basis. These amendments would greatly simplify the application process, thus encouraging more eligible families to apply.

Sincerely,

RONALD V. DELLUMS,
Member of Congress.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF LA RAZA,
Washington, DC, September 6, 1989.

Hon. PATRICK LEAHY,
Chairman, Senate Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry Committee, Senate Russell Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: I am writing on behalf of the National Council of La Raza, one of the largest Hispanic organizations to solicit your support for the House of Representatives' position in the National School Lunch Act, H.R. 24.

Current law requires collection of social security numbers as a method for preventing and detecting abuse. We concur with the House language which provides alternatives to the exclusive use of social security numbers, for the following reasons:

Approximately 44.1% of all hours that schools spend making reports to the federal government are due to school lunch and related child nutrition programs;

Current law mandates documentation of social security numbers for all adult household members. According to the House language, schools often do not accept incompleted applications. Hence, this stipulation denies meals to otherwise qualified students; and Hispanic children in particular are affected by changes in the school lunch program. Approximately 40% of all Hispanic children are poor, and many adult household members may not have social security numbers, for a variety of reasons.

Chairman Leahy, I urge you to support a more equitable and efficient school lunch program by endorsing the House language as found in H.R. 24.

Sincerely,

RAUL YZAGUIRRE,
President.

NATIONAL PUERTO RICAN COALITION, INC.,
Washington, DC, September 5, 1989.

Hon. TOM HARKIN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HARKIN: Soon Senate and House Conferees will meet to discuss H.R. 24, a bill to amend the Child Nutrition Act and National School Lunch Act.

The National Puerto Rican Coalition strongly urges you to recede to the House's modification concerning eligibility for the School Lunch program. This measure requires a child applying for the school Lunch program to provide the Social Security number of the head of his or her household. The present practice and the recently passed S. 1484 require the Social Security numbers of all members of a child's household.

The Senate-backed provision discourages the participation of some of America's most needy students in the school lunch program. The impact on the Hispanic community in particular is clear. For numerous reasons, ranging from simple illiteracy to fear of losing housing because there are family members who are not included on a rental lease, members of a child's household may be reluctant to provide their Social Security numbers. This denies children access to nutritional programs they are otherwise eligible for.

This requirement is also an unnecessary burden on the schools. It is estimated that 44 percent of all hours that schools spend making reports to the federal government are due to school lunch and child nutrition programs.

The relationship between good nutrition and academic performance is well established. Hungry students are often tired and inattentive. It is wrong to deny meals to otherwise qualified students and to undercut achievement in America's schools.

Once again, we urge you to support the House's position on this School Lunch issue when it comes up for consideration in conference.

Sincerely,

LOUIS NUÑEZ.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF SCHOOL ADMINISTRATORS,
Arlington, VA, September 7, 1989.

Hon. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ,
House of Representatives, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE MARTINEZ: The American Association of School Administrators, representing over 18,000 local school superintendents and other school officials, urges you to support the House language regarding the use of Social Security numbers in school lunch applications when the Child Nutrition bill, H.R. 24 and S. 1484, is taken up by the conference committee.

Requiring only the adult member who applies for a free or reduced-price lunch on behalf of a child to provide a Social Security number would simplify the application procedures and assure that fewer elibigle families would be dissuaded from appling because of complicated requirements.

Thank you for considering this measure and for all work on this important piece of legislation.

Sincerely,

VIRGINIA C. VERTIZ, Ph.D.,
Government Relations Specialist.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support for H.R. 24, the Child Nutrition and WIC Reauthorization Act of 1989, as we consider this legislation for the second time. I am confident that this version contains good compromises between the House and Senate versions of this legislation.

H.R. 24 makes important reforms in the National School Lunch and School Breakfast Programs, which provide nutritious meals to schoolchildren. Schools are able to serve these meals because the Federal Government provides meal subsidies to all children, regardless of income. For children from low income families, the Federal Government reimburses schools for most or all of the meal cost.

I was pleased that during this reauthorization no attempts were made at reducing or eliminating this subsidy. In 1981, when the section 4 subsidy was reduced by 30 percent, 4 million students were cut from the program. We are still not serving as many school lunches as were served in 1980. I am hopeful that those who in the past had supported funding cuts have learned from the mistakes of 1981.

I would like to commend my colleague and friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. GOODLING, for his efforts to extend the Cash-CLOC pilot projects. While we could not obtain the permanent authorization of these programs, we are extending them through September 1992. These pilots exist because of complaints we heard about the commodity distribution program. I would like to note that the only letter I received this year from a school district opposed to the extension of these pilots, in fact supported the expansion of the pilot—it was an "if I can't get it, no one should get it" letter. This only reaffirms my commitment to Cash and CLOC as options in the commodity distribution program.

H.R. 24 directs USDA to conduct pilot projects in schools serving a large percentage of students from low-income families. These pilot projects may help reduce the administrative burden on large, urban schools, where the majority of children receive a free or reduced price lunch. This act also authorizes a demonstration project for providing meals to homeless children, who often are left unserved by other Federal child nutrition programs.

H.R. 24 will reduce the paperwork burden that schools must now face. This act also establishes a uniform, single audit system based on USDA regulations. Schools in Michigan have informed me they are being audited up to seven times per year on just this one program. I am confident that H.R. 24 will provide administrative relief, while protecting the integrity of the program.

H.R. 24 reauthorizes the Special Supplemental Food Program for women, infants, and children [WIC], which provides food packets and nutrition and health services to about 850,000 pregnant or nursing women, 1.132 million infants, and 1.7 million children per month nationwide. I fully support the $150 million increase in funding for WIC, authorized by this act. This increase will provide nutrition and health benefits for an additional 300,000 women and children.

Currently WIC can only serve half of those eligible for benefits. Provisions in this legislation to mandate that States use the least costly infant formula will ensure that limited resources help as many families as possible.

Provisions which increase coordination between WIC and other human service programs including food stamps and Medicaid will reduce confusion and increase the nutrition and health benefits for low income families.

WIC is one of our most effective Federal progams. The Harvard School of Public Health has found that every $1 spent on WIC saves $3 on health costs for low birth weight babies. Proper nutrition and prenatal care has far-reaching benefits on infants and children and their achievement ability later in life.

In each Congress we authorize legislation to assist our Nation's farms, forests, mining and other industries in an effort to fully develop our natural resources. H.R. 24 assists us in developing our greatest natural resource—our children. By providing children with proper nutrition, we are truly ensuring the strength of America.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 260.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 260, the resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FORGING A NATIONAL HOUSING POLICY

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, last week when the House Republican Research Committee Task Force on Housing was holding a hearing on the crisis of affordable housing and the plight of the homeless, the Chicago Tribune was running a series of articles about how we deal with that crisis. Yesterday's Tribune has an editorial which I will incorporate into the RECORD. This editorial, in fact, outlines a very good recommendation as we address the issue of putting together a national housing policy. It does a number of things. It calls for putting the FHA program back to its original legislative intent. It calls for implementation of a proposal on which I worked during the savings and loan crisis, that of having local governments reduce the kinds of constraints, high impact fees, rent control, and other things, which jeopardize the prospect of affordable housing. It calls on us to implement legislation which allows individuals to withdraw from their individual retirement accounts for the downpayment on a new home purchase, and number of other things.

I hope very much that as we look at this very clear outline of recommendations, Mr. Speaker, that we will finally be able to take and implement these recommendations as public law.

Mr. Speaker, I include the Chicago Tribune article, as follows:

FORGING A NATIONAL HOUSING POLICY

When the Reagan administration came into power nearly nine years ago and pronounced most federal housing programs a miserable failure, it was hard to disagree. And when the president and his staff set about dismantling some of the failures and turning their backs on others, that seemed justified, too. But only as an interim step.

What should have followed was a new national housing policy geared to the America of the late 20th century and beyond, and a set of initiatives and incentives designed to achieve it efficiently and equitably.

Instead, what followed was . . . nothing.

Remnants of a housing policy still survive in Washington, but they are either geared to the nation as it was in the 1950s or twisted and diluted to benefit the well-off and the politically connected rather than the poeple who need help in getting a decent place to live. And while a movement is growing in Congress to restore some subsidies slashed during the Reagan years, few members have the courage to say out loud that existing federal, state and municipal laws would immediately swallow up a big chunk of the money. Taxpayers would be hoodwinked, and so would the families priced out of today's housing markets.

A series of reports published in The Tribune last week described how escalating housing costs, disappearing federal subsidies and government incompetence and inattention are converging to destroy the American dream of owning—or even renting—a good home. Especially in urban areas, including Chicago, you no longer have to be poor to be ill-housed. If you are poor, your housing is likely to be dangerous as well as ill. Or it may not exist at all.

So far President Bush has said little to indicate he wants to establish a housing policy, or even that he sees the need for one. Fighting drugs and improving schools seem to be the only domestic items on his plate, and of course they deserve all the resources he can give them. But decent, affordable housing is inextricably linked to both. Kids growing up in a crowded, crumbling slum next to an abandoned hulk serving as a crack house aren't likely to do well in school.

The President may be scared off by the multibillion-dollar-a-year price tags attached to some of the housing programs floating around Congress. If that's his problem, he should counter with proposals that make better use of existing funds and slice the cost of housing without raising the federal deficit. Some examples:

Return the Federal Housing Administration to its original mission of helping people of modest means and first-time homebuyers. It has drifted into competition with private insurers, servicing higher/income borrowers and speculative developers who sought low-cost insurance for risky, upper-income projects.

Back the bipartisan move to let first-time homebuyers tap individual retirement accounts for a down payment, or create special tax-free savings accounts exclusively for home purchases. These ideas have a triple benefit: They help lower housing costs, they boost the construction industry and they expand the pool of savings available for industrial expansion.

Support tax credits for investors in low-cost housing, the most efficient form of federal subsidy.

Help Jack Kemp, secretary of Housing and Urban Development, create an objective set of standards to freeze out the clout-heavy consultants and developers who squandered millions of dollars from HUD's few remaining assistance programs for the poor.

Create a system of matching grants to cities and states on the basis of their own efforts to subsidize and stimulate the production of low-cost housing. New money for this program will have to come from budget trims; defense is still the most likely source.

Finally, fight to repeal the federal Davis-Bacon law, which bans less-than-union-scale wages on any construction project receiving any form of federal help, and deny federal housing money to states and localities that force up the cost of housing with their own prevailing wage laws, overly restrictive zoning codes and unnecessarily rigid building codes.

MINIMUM WAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HAYES] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HAYES of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to participate in this special order to express my support for the increase in the minimum wage and to express my dismay in the delay by the House on the final consideration of this legislation.

For me, there is absolutely no question as to whether or not there is a need to increase the minimum wage. Keeping workers in poverty was clearly not the intent of the minimum wage ceiling and we can no longer condone nor tolerate such occurrences. As a former trade unionist, I have strongly supported the need for an increase since my election to this body.

The purposes of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 was to provide a decent wage at which working people can care for themselves and provide for their families. We have neglected to honor this Nation's 50-year contract with workers to pay a better decent minimum wage. This obvious oversight must be rectified.

Since the beginning of the 101st Congress, strong efforts have been put forth through the leadership of Chairmen HAWKINS and KENNEDY, to bring about a viable minimum wage increase bill. An attempt to give America's working poor their first pay raise in more than 8 years has fallen by the wayside. My committee, the House Education and Labor Committee, just approved legislation, H.R. 2710, which provides a wage increase to $4.25 an hour over a 2-year period. Of course, we now hear that the President does not agree with this compromise proposal.

We have a President who continues to tout his rhetoric about a kinder, gentler nation, while standing as the only obstacle to a minimum wage increase. If our President could show the same amount of interest and enthusiasm for the minimum wage increase as he does for the capital gains tax cut or corporate exploitation of pension plans, we would all be amazed at how quickly a consensus could be gained on a fair wage increase for those in poverty.

Aren't we tired of deliberately making survival more and more difficult for those that are economically disadvantaged? Working for a living and living in poverty are not longer mutually exclusive conditions. More than 1.1 million families cannot escape poverty even though one or more persons within the family work full time and year round. We just gave the very wealthiest Americans a large windfall. Are we now going to deny working men and women what they deserve? The shameful neglect of the dreams and desires of the working poor is not a kinder nor gentler action. It only adds insult to injury against low-income working families who are not afraid of hard work.

I now hear that we may not consider the Fair Labor Standards Act until after the first of the new year—not until the second session of this Congress. We have delayed and compromised too much. We must consider this legislation before we close out this first session. This Congress has waited too long to address the needs of working men and women in this Nation.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to reiterate the fact that H.R. 2710 is more than a compromise. Our American workers are deserving of far better. It is time to stop holding these workers hostage to petty squabbling and pass a minimum wage increase. I would ask for my colleagues' support for these efforts.

UPDATE ON MINIMUM WAGE BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on this special order to bring back the memory of an issue which had been hotly debated on the floor of the House of Representatives several months ago but an issue we have not heard of for several months. It is kind of curious, as we have entered into the debate on capital gains and the future of the economy of America that we seem to have forgotten especially those people who go to work every day in the United States of America, those people who have faced and endured a particular hardship because the Congress of the United States of America and the President have been unable to resolve political differences relating to the salary that these people are paid.

Mr. Speaker, I address myself to an issue which affects literally millions of Americans, an issue which affects the lifestyle and quality of life of countless families, and an issue which really strikes at the heart of justice in this country. The issue to which I address myself is the minimum wage.

I think it is instructive for us as we consider the present political status of the minimum wage to consider several factors: The minimum wage is not welfare. The minimum wage is not a social welfare program. It is not a vehicle to compensate persons in financial need. It is not a subsidy to families. It is not a stipend.

But the minimum wage is in fact the basic compensation for the lowest paid workers in America who get up every morning, put on their work clothes and go to work. It is a wage paid for work done, not to aid the poor nor to relieve the pressures of family life.

It is an important mechanism to raise the standard of living for people in America, to avoid the sort of economic exploitation which these folks and their families would inevitably face if the Congress of the United States of America is unresponsive.

Another thing to consider is that more than 45 percent of the minimum wage workers in America are heads of households who are working women. For these 45 percent the minimum wage is not a supplement to income, it is in fact the very bedrock and basis of their income.

Now we on Capitol Hill and the President and the White House have had differences of opinion on how the minimum wage should be change. But take a look at the history.

The minimum wage in America was last increased in 1981, when it was raised to the present level of $3.35 an hour. If we had merely taken that $3.35 wage in 1981 and kept pace with inflation, our minimum wage in America today would be $4.68 per hour.

But we have not met our responsibility to the millions of families who rely on us.

I think as a matter of economic and social justice the people of the United States realize this. In fact, a recent Washington Post/ABC News poll found that 84 percent of Americans support an increase in minimum wage. They understand it is long overdue.

One of the major sticking points on the issue of minimum wage is the question of a training wage. In other words, how long can an employer keep a person on a payroll below the minimum wage while that person learns the job? The President of the United States, the administration, has taken the position that employers should be given this option for 6 months. It has been the position of the Democrats in the House of Representatives that that period should be 60 days.

Mr. Speaker, I come to this issue with some personal experience. I have been an employer. I can tell you that it takes a very short period of time for an employer to realize whether that employee is trustworthy, hardworking, whether that employee can be counted on to come to work every day and whether that employee deals with the public in the type of fashion that could help a business.

I did not need, as an employer, 6 months to come to that conclusion. I do not think employers across America need 6 months. In 60 days, a 2-month period, you are going to know whether you have an employee that you want to stay with your business, that you can invest in for the future.

The President insisted on 6 months. We have held to the standard of 60 days, and I think that is entirely reasonable.

Now, it is interesting in the last several weeks we have spent a lot of time on Capitol Hill talking about capital gains. Curiously, the people in America who make the most money are tuned into this debate because we are talking about the amount of disposable income they will have.

□ 1340

The President has said it is necessary for the future of America for Members to cut the tax rate for the very wealthy in our country, to give them an incentive to invest, he says. I would like to suggest to the President and all listening, that it is also an economic incentive for America to give to working families across this Nation the necessary resources for people to survive. These families, scraping by, week to week and month to month, take those checks they receive on their jobs and spend them. They are, in fact, buying the food and clothing and shelter and the necessities of life. Unfortunately, they ususally are not in a position to be able to save much money. The money they spend and the products they buy, fuel the economy and keep it moving. It raises their standard of life and in turn raises the standard of living for all of those people working in industries supported by their purchases.

Therefore, Mr. President, if you are listening, I would hope that the President will consider not only the capital gains of the wealthiest Americans, but also the minimum wage for these working mothers and fathers, those breadwinners across America, who also have a standard of living at stake in this great debate.

The package that we have proposed for the President was a subject of a great compromise, but I think a reasonable one. What Congress has asked for is that we raise the minimum wage to $4.55 an hour. I think that is entirely reasonable. I think it is important now we realize that this issue of economic justice is a compelling one on America's economic agenda. I hope the President and the Congress come to the table soon and remember these forgotten American families.

FOREIGN BANK DOMINANCE IN THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, foreign banks have been growing much faster than their U.S. counterparts. While many U.S. banks once occupied places among the listing of the 10 largest world banks, now none is in the world's top 20, and only 2 U.S. banks are in the top 50. Many foreign banks, especially Japanese banks, are well-capitalized and in a position to remain very competitive in the future.

Foreign banks are growing not only in their home countries, but they are invading our own Nation and aggressively wrestling market share from U.S. banks.

Foreign banking operations in the United States are growing by leaps and bounds. Just as U.S. banks went abroad in search of new and profitable markets, many foreign banks have entered the United States. These foreign banks have been able to take business from our banks by offering similar products at lower prices.

Foreign banks are starting to catch up to U.S. banks in our own backyard in most measures of performance, including deposits, assets, and loan totals. These facts may be attributable to many different forces. Nevertheless, foreign bank operations in the United States are enormous and growing, and the United States is being placed in a particularly vulnerable position.

In December 1973, foreign banks accounted for $32 billion or 4 percent of total bank assets in the United States. At that same time, foreign banks made $18 billion in loans, 4 percent of the total U.S. bank loan market. They held $11 billion in deposits, for 2 percent of the market. These numbers grew steadily to $201 billion or 12 percent in assets, $121 billion or 13 percent in loans, and $80 billion of 7 percent in total deposits by December 1980.

Foreign banking activities in the United States have continued to grow, and as of December 1988, foreign banks have some $651 billion in assets in the Untied States. That is a staggering 20 percent of total banking assets in the United States. In the past 9 months, their share of assets has since grown to almost 22 percent. Foreign bank loans in the United States are growing almost three times as fast as those of U.S. banks. These facts are summarized in a table at the end of my statement.

Thirty-three Japanese banks control almost half of the total foreign bank assets in the United States, or $329 billion. The Japanese share of the overall United States banking asset market share is now 10 percent, triple that of a decade ago.

Foreign banks, as of December 1988, accounted for $339 billion in loans or 17 percent of the total U.S. banking market, and $335 billion in total deposits, or 14 percent of the total U.S. market. Foreign banks make an astounding 28 percent of commercial and industrial loans in the United States. In other words, $2 out of every $7 borrowed in this country for productive purposes is borrowed from foreign-control institutions.

The erosion of the position of U.S. banks in our own banking markets could have a significant and detrimental effect on our economy, employment, and trade deficit. As long as dollars continue to flow abroad with our trade deficit, many of these dollars will seek their way back home through foreign-controlled U.S. banking institutions. Development of foreign banks at the expense of U.S. banks could promote development of their economies and exports at the expense of ours. Even more importantly, a massive pullout of foreign investment or foreign banking operations in the United States would wreak havoc on the U.S. economy.

Banks are the driving force in the U.S. economy. A healthy banking system is a prerequisite to a healthy economy. We must understand that the U.S. economy is driven in large part by foreign banks, money, services, and products. The participation of foreign banks in the U.S. economy is becoming critical to American prosperity. Control of such a vital segment of the economy gives foreign institutions extraordinary power to influence our economic health.

Congress must ensure that U.S. banks can remain competitive, not only around the world, but also here at home. We must make sure that U.S. banks have the opportunities to do so, not for their sake, but for the sake of our economy.

I want my colleagues to understand not only the importance of foreign banks in the United States, but also the diminishing role of U.S. banks here at home. We have all seen the inroads that have been made by foreign competition in the United States in the auto, steel, and electronics industries. The inroads are not as visible, but are just as real, in the banking industry. I do not intend to stand idly by while the competitive position of our banks deteriorates. We must ensure stable and competitive domestic banks to ensure a prosperous U.S. economy.

CONCERN FOR AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of and are talking about the sale of the motion picture studio, Columbia Entertainment Pictures, Inc. to a Japanese company, the Sony Corp. Although many of us know that Sony has operated in this country for a long time, it still is a Japanese-owned firm.

There are so many things with this sale that are not in our best interest.

I want to talk to you about the importance of this sale, what it means to America and the opportunity it presents for us to be propagandized. I also want to examine the importance of this sale to our trade balance, to our industrial base, and why I believe there should be a Government action to stop the sale.

Most of us want to know who we are dealing with and what we can expect of them. I want to call your attention to a quotation from a book I recently mentioned to you, The Japan That Can Say No. It was written by Akio Morita, chairman of Sony Corp. and Shintaro Ishihara, a possible candidate for Prime Minister.

The book points out that we have not come to grips with the reality of our political and economic decline. But a quotation from that is very revealing. Mr. Morita stated, "One of the reasons United States-Japan relations are in such a mess is that Japan has not told the United States the things that need to be said."

Both he and Mr. Ishihara proceeded to criticize the United Stated in a most unflattering manner and point out what they regarded as a better way of looking at the work from the Japanese standpoint. What is also revealing of their intentions toward the United States is, according to the September issue of Fortune, neither Messrs. Morita nor Ishihara "are eager to have an American audience read their book."

Sony's potential purchase of Columbia Pictures studio reminded me of that quote that "Japan has not told the United States the things that need to be said." That along with Morita's quote from yesterday's Washington Post that the "best investment is one that will get Americans on Japan's side." I thought to myself, boy—they have the chance to tell us now with a studio.

With a studio they have the chance now to tell us what they think is wrong with us and to block those people who will be critical of Japan.

They now have a first-class way through movies in theaters or beamed right into our homes over television to tell their story to the American public—and we must not forget VCR's in that scenario. They will be the American image makers.

It is ironic that Coca Cola—a company which is so image conscious and so American in selling its American image all over the world—is the company to deliver the American image-making ability to the hands of the Japanese.

What makes it even more difficult for me is that Coca Cola plans to reinvest the money from this sale of our cultural heritage in its foreign operations in foreign countries.

Just a little over a week ago we read of the death of Robert Penn Warren. Columns were written about this Pulitzer Prize winning novel, All The Kings Men, and his profound impact on the literture of this country. Now his Academy Award-winning film, All The Kings Men, along with Lawrence of Arabia, Oliver, The Bridge on the River Kwai, to name a few, will belong to the Japanese.

Just the title of these films are a potent reminder of the potential to influence public opinion through films. I am not the only one concerned about this.

Last week, in the Washington Post, a number of individuals were interviewed about the sale and some raised the specter of bringing influence to bear on the movies or rewriting something unfavorable to Japan.

Most did not think it would happen, but no one was sure citing the example of a Tokyo film distributor trying to censor newsreel footage from Bernardo Bertolucci's Academy Award-winning film, The Last Emperor.

I do know personally what happened with my friend Marvin Wolf, the author of The Japanese Conspiracy, who wrote the book showing how the Japanese targeted our industries. When his book was published in Japan some of it was changed—his book was edited. The chapter on Japanese ethics was removed. In America we call this censorship.

Knowing that, I wonder if they would remove any criticism of Japan from a film? An absentee landlord of a studio can be a subtle influence in who stars, what is produced, and who moves ahead in his or her career.

My friend Pat Choate, an economist and vice president for policy analysis with TRW Inc., was also quoted in the article that the sale of the studio "Offers a potential for propaganda."

The article quotes him as "comparing the deal to a foreign purchase of an American television station, which is prohibited by Federal regulations because of fears that a foreign owner could use his station to broadcast propaganda."

Being politicians, most of us can understand this consideration.

We certainly hear about fairness in time on television during campaigns.

The big losers in this sale are the American people. David Geffen, chief executive officer of an independent record and film company, was interviewed by the Washington Post, and succinctly stated the whole proposition for us.

He said, "If the Japanese came in and bought all the textbook manufacturers in this country, you can be sure someone in Congress would complain about the potential for abuse. Well, a giant part of the education of young people in this country comes from film and TV and someone should be paying attention to what's going on."

I am paying attention, Are you?

Who really loses in this sale are the American people. I mentioned to you on May 10, in a speech titled "Bedtime for America," how important the magic of Hollywood and its films are to our lives.

In that speech I quoted Jonathan Yardley, who was reviewing a book for the Washington Post, that "Hollywood not merely manufacturers dreams but fixes them in the national psyche."

Other countries are aware of this.

We must ask ourselves if other countries would sell off their communication and cultural businesses. The answer is "No." In Canada you must have the approval of the government to even buy a distribution system in the cultural industries.

In Japan we could not even buy into their entertainment industry. Boone Pickens learned you can't even buy into a business and be seated on the board—much less the entertainment industry.

So why are we selling off the studios and the record industry? Just what does Sony get from this sale?

They will have one of the best film libraries in the world with 27,000 hours of television programs, 40 years of movie history including our classic films, and over 300 television series. According to newspaper reports they are also acquiring the Loewes 820-screen movie theaters.

With the American films they can also penetrate the Asian market where American movies are beginning to do well. More importantly, with the 2,500-plus film properties they can be in the network business in Europe.

According to the news they want to get the software because of their hardware—their cameras, VCR's, and now HDTV.

This has important implications for American business. In the May speech I previously referred to, I pointed out that the magic of Hollywood drove the VCR market. Buying a VCR so we can see the movies affects our trade deficit and our electronics industry.

The American films have created the VCR market. Approximately one-third of American homes have at least one VCR. Last year 13.6 million sets were sold to replace older VCR's and the world market is three or four times larger than the U.S. market.

In another 2 years the American market should reach the saturation point of 73 percent. The VCR's make a lot of movie viewing possible. With the sale of the studio and its film library to the Japanese we have ensured the need for their hardware and the entrance of their products into future markets.

We have given them a continued way to channel American dollars to Japan just when we are for the first time near producing microprocessors again in this country—and coming out with our own double deck VCR, which is being produced by Go Video of Scottsdale, AZ.

The Japanese trading companies have fought Go Video. They fought for their Japanese businesses. But what have the Americans done?

With this sale it appears we are allowing a vertically integrated foreign company to operate in the United States, which is not legal for American business.

By vertical integration I mean they have the communication field covered. Sony owns a dominant position in VCR's. According to the September 28 Washington Post, "Sony will have a role in almost every step of an entertainment property's life—from producing a movie and its soundtrack album, playing them in its theaters, and then selling them to the home video and audio markets."

It also has a Sony video service feature in New York. They have opened up a lab for HDTV research in California and it also has minicams and other equipment to fully support the field.

Now they have added Columbia Pictures. According to the Washington Post it "is the leading producer of network television programs." It is a money maker for television and is regarded as the gatekeeper for the networks with its enormous film library.

To me that is a picture of vertical integration and a violation of antitrust.

There are other concerns involved. The future of HDTV has not been squarely placed in Japanese hands.

The film studies provide development equipment for films and for television. The worldwide market is estimated to be $140 billion. We have just effectively wiped ourselves out of the market.

I had asked CBS about HDTV. Martin Franks, vice president of CBS, Washington, replied that, "we had not focused on one area in which we currently enjoy a trade advantage—namely, the export of films and television programs to foreign markets. Thousands of jobs are involved, which is no doubt why some in Europe want a production standard different from ours which will act as a trade barrier to this successful United States export."

Martin Franks was also kind enough to send me CBS's submissions to my esteemed colleague, Congressman MARKEY on HDTV. In that paper CBS stated, "Not much attention has been paid to the potential effects on international trade in video entertainment products (that is, software) in the recent debates about advanced television technologies.

"In fact, this country has a natural world-wide competitive advantage in the export of video entertainment products because of the size of the English-speaking market and a free and open international program exchange."

So what is the scorecard? What does this sale mean to us? Who wins? Well, certainly Sony and the Japanese are the big winners, along with a few people at the top of Columbia who have made $25 million for their personal involvement.

Who loses big are the American people—and our children. We have sold a cultural legacy. And, something that personally concerns me very much being a reporter and an editor—and a former TV producer—is the fact our writers and producers will now have to deal with foreign owners. I know how fiercely we feel, and frequently debate our first amendment rights. I do not believe that foreign companies should have a major control over the production of films for television viewing.

The American businessman is also a big loser. We are locked out of the semiconductor market. In fact, the coauthor with Akio Morita, pointed out in his book that no matter how much we expand our military we can do nothing if Japan one day were to say "We will no longer sell you chips." He meant computer chips chips.

Well, this locks up the VCR's at a time when we were beginning back in the business, so we lose there, too.

The business community and the people also lose in the current accounts balance. Remember the stories 2 weeks ago that pointed out that one reason for the decline in our current accounts was the large amount of foreign investors and their withdrawal of their profits out of the country.

This raises another concern, and that is just what is the viewpoint of the Japanese on doing business. The answer was given by the ranking Japanese member of the World Bank. In an article on Shadow Warriors in Manhattan, Inc. he made some startling statements. Mr. Yoshio Terasawa said, "I have heard the argument the Japanese won't succeed here in America because of the peculiarity of our culture and its homogeneity."

He went on, "But, I don't agree with this argument at all. We are not a religious people, so we have no transcendent precepts or principles that bar us from taking whatever action is necessary. We can be terribly immoral if necessary."

He said, "Now in order to make more money and be more competitive, Japanese businessmen will do anything they have to. There are no limits. They may talk about Americanizing their companies to please their American employees, but that is not what they will really do. Big Japanese corporations are going to acquire big American corporations and let them run things so that the Japanese owners will not be visible."

I repeat again, the American people and the American businessmen lose out on this sale.

In summary, this deal allows foreigners to have access to our communication network—it puts a cultural legacy in the hands of foreigners—it locks up the semiconductors, affects our exports of a profitable business—gives away an American lead in an uniquely American business: the film industry. You can no longer call it American because it belongs to the Japanese. We have the largest pool of creative talent in the world and we are putting them in the hands of a foreign entity. As I stated earlier, this personally bothers me very much because I came from the news business and television.

We just simply lose—and lose big on this.

I believe the American people will react to this sale—we have an indominitable spirit, one that cannot be interpreted by foreign owners. I believe the Government should step in on this sale, and I believe the American people also feel that way.

We all lose in a big way in this—only Sony and Coca Cola are smiling.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

CONGRESSMAN SKELTON ADDRESSES 33D DIVISION OF WORLD WAR II VETERANS

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, on the evening of September 30, 1989, in Indianapolis, IN, I had the opportunity to address the biannual reunion of the 33d Division of the United States Army which fought from New Guinea to the Philippines. A good part of the success of this reunion was due to the hard work of the former mayor of Osceola, MO, Glen Toalson, and Bill Endicott of Seattle, WA. The 33d Division began its active role in 1943, and ended the war upon the capture of Baguio, in the Philippines in 1945. Theirs was a proud war record, and I was pleased to have had the opportunity to address them. My speech to the veterans of the 33d Division is as follows:

THE 33D DIVISION 1989 REUNION,
INDIANAPOLIS, IN

(Speech by Congressman Ike Skelton)

Last week, my colleague and friend from Florida, Charles Bennett, said to me, "I see you're going to speak to my old unit, the 33d. Be sure and tell them hello for me."

Charlie Bennett, a much revered veteran Congressman, represents all that is good about a soldier, and he, as others of your division, has continued to follow the path of self-sacrifice, honor and patriotism. As a platoon leader, he fought with you in New Guinea, and later, he was the leader of 1,500 Philippine guerrillas on the island of Luzon, being awarded the Silver Star and the Philippine Legion of Honor. So, I bring you greetings from your comrade in arms, Congressman Charles Bennett.

Many changes have occurred throughout the world since you were on the battlefield. Since your war, the intensity and speed of change have been tremendous. Changes in the Soviet threat, declining military budgets, Poland being headed by non-Communist leadership for the first time in 40 years, and Hungary preparing for free elections in 1990. We also see increasing low-intensity conflicts in the Middle East and Latin America, international drug wars, terrorism, worldwide population explosion, high-tech weaponry proliferation, as well as Islamic fundamentalism.

A poem written over two centuries ago reflects this change in the turbulent state of international affairs.

If ponies rode men and grass ate cows,
And cats were chased into holes by a mouse . . .
If summer were spring and the other way round,
Then all the world would be upside-down.

These are the words of the tune the British band played while Cornwallis surrendered to Washington at Yorktown in the fall of 1781. That melody, "The World Turned Up-Side-Down," was appropriate at that time, and it is perhaps even more fitting today, as we look at the threats to world peace, regional instability, and endangered freedoms on our globe, we see that this is truly a topsy-turvy world, one that continues to be dangerous, where much is not as it seems. Confronted with these new challenges, it would be wonderful if diplomacy, goodwill and common sense would provide us with answers to these questions and solutions to these problems. However, this is not the case. If the past is a reliable guide to the future, it is the soldier who will be called upon again and again to protect and preserve our freedoms and liberties. Often, the mere presence of the soldier brings stability and preserves the peace, as proven by our soldiers in NATO and South Korea. In this world of topsy-turvy rapid change, it is ultimately the soldier who makes the greatest sacrifices to pave the way to solving many of the world's problems.

Your division, the 33rd Division, certainly made a tremendous contribution to protect freedom during World War II.

The 33rd sailed from San Francisco in July of 1943 and guarded vital military installations in Hawaii until April of 1944, when it moved to New Guinea. After participating in the Wakde-Sarmi campaign, the 33rd jumped off on Christmas Eve of 1944, for the Second Battle of Morotai in the Netherlands East Indies.

You entered the Battle of Luzon in the Philippines in February of 1945, relieving the 6th Division and opening the drive to Baguio, the summer capital of Luzon, and the headquarters of General Yamashita. You began the campaign by capturing the key towns of Rosario and Aringay. You waged two vicious battles proving that the Japanese were not the only soldiers capable of successful night attacks. Victories at Galiano and Asin provided our forces with an all weather road for the final drive on Baguio. Here the Japanese elected to make their last-ditch stand, and here, working with the 32nd and 37th divisions, you achieved your final objective.

For three months you engaged in savage fighting, over the most rugged terrain of all Luzon—through thick tropical forests, over rocky volcanic mountains. Battles were sharp and brutal against the enemy who fought and died on his mountain positions. There were no easy routes, it was an uphill battle over rugged mountains all the way. At the beginning of that campaign the 33rd had a division front of 20 miles. Three months later, just before the capitulation of the city, the division was fighting on a 65-mile front. With the liberation of Baguio, several thousand were freed from Japanese captivity, including Manuel Roxas, former aide to General McArthur.

Yours is a record of which you can be very proud. It is your service and sacrifice that helped catapult America into the role of being the bastion of freedom and super power that it is today.

When World War II ended, you came home to your fellow Americans who recognized your sacrifice and your dedication and you resumed the lives that you had left to serve America. Those who made the ultimate sacrifice, your comrades—who gave their lives to defend our country—would live on in the memories of the loved ones they left behind. Sacrifice and dedication are common bonds shared by all soldiers—universal virtues which remain constant, from generation to generation, from war to war.

The sacrifices your grandchildren have made while ensuring free passage in the Persian Gulf, attempting to thwart terrorism around world and preserve world order through their service in Grenada, Libya, Lebanon, and Panama, are in many ways similar to the sacrifices you made in World War II.

While these sacrifices have changed little over the passage of time, domestic appreciation by our citizens at home has fluctuated.

It is unfortunate that many who have served their country with dedication and courage have not been properly appreciated for their efforts.

For example, while you returned to loud praise and acclaim, those soldiers who returned from Vietnam returned to silence, jeering and empty streets. Most Americans don't fully understand the sacrifices made by the generation that went off to fight in Vietnam.

In Shakespeare's "Anthony and Cleopatra," there is a scene with which many Vietnam veterans can easily identify. A messenger has come to tell Cleopatra in the unwelcome news, that her beloved Mark Anthony has married another. Upon hearing the bad news, she strikes the unfortunate messenger. She strikes the poor fellow again and again, venting her anger, hurt and frustration.

In much the same way, Vietnam veterans suffered unjustly from a war that through no fault of their own had become unpopular. Nations make war; soldiers merely fight them. Yet a vocal minority, made the mistake of blaming an unpopular war on those who courageously answered their country's call, rather than on those who made the decision to fight that war. Those who fought in Vietnam, or served in the military at that time, were held responsible for events over which they had little control.

I would like to share with you a passage from a letter written by Capt. Rodney R. Chastant to his parents in Mobile, Alabama, on the 19th of October, 1969. It reflects his emotions and gives you personal insight on sacrifices made by the soldier. Chastant was just then extending his 13-month tour of duty in Vietnam.

"It is great to know your family's safe, living in a secure country; a country made secure by thousands upon thousands of men who have died for that country. In the Philippines I took a bus ride along the infamous route of the death march on Bataan. I passed graveyards that were marked with row after row of plain white crosses. Thousands upon thousands. These were American graves—American graves in the Philippines. And I thought about the American graves in Okinawa, Korea, France, England, North Africa—around the world. And I was proud to be an American, proud to be a Marine, proud to be fighting in Asia. I have a commitment to the men who have gone before me, American men who have made the sacrifices that were required to make the world safe.

"Your son,

ROD."

Capt. Rod Chastant was killed three days later. He was 25 years old.

In the years since the end of the war, many Americans who once treated Vietname veterans with indifference and even contempt have come to realize that such treatment was wrong and misdirected. Those who served and fought in the most divisive conflict since the War Between the States deserve the honor and respect traditionally accorded to the veterans of other wars.

Parades for Vietnam veterans that have taken place in Washington, Chicago, New York and other cities and towns throughout the country are important symbols of this long-deserved recognition. A beautiful memorial in Washington, DC was erected in memory of the nearly 58,000 soliders who gave their lives or who remain missing. The contrast between the soliders returning from these two wars, World War II and Vietnam, tells us that there's nothing constant in a country's appreciation toward those who fight our battles. History tells us that the soldier, following the dictates of his profession, often finds himself misunderstood at home and seldom appreciated. This is especially true in peacetime, or during a war that doesn't have unanimous public support. It is the soldier's difficult, and sometimes lonely, task to preserve our freedom and way of life, and let neither praise nor disdain take him from his course of duty as a military professional.

For centuries, the British demonstrated a repeated lack of respect for their soliders returning home from various wars. Often, the public back in Great Britain knew little of the battles, and in many instances, did not care about them or the men who fought them. British poet laureate Rudyard Kipling spent much of his time as a young man in India writing about soldiers and soldiering. One of his most memorable works, penned about that familiar British soldier, known more commonly as "the Redcoat" or "Tommy", gives us a vivid, and sobering picture of public attitude toward the soldier of his day:

Tommy

I went into a public-'ouse to get a pint o' beer,
The publican 'e up an' sez, "We serve no red-coats here."
The girls be'ind the bar they laughed an' giggled fit to die,
I outs into the street again an' to myself sez I:
O it's Tommy this an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, go away";
But it's "Thank you, Mister Atkins," when the band begins to play—
The band begins to play, my boys, the band begins to play,
O it's "Thank you, Mister Atkins," when the band begins to play.

I went into a theatre as sober as could be,
They gave a drunk civilian room, but 'adn't none for me;
They sent me to the gallery or round the music-'alls,
But when it comes to fightin', Lord! they'll shove me in the stalls!
For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, wait outside";
But it's "Special train for Atkins" when the trooper's on the tide—
The troopeships's on the tide, my boys, the troopeship's on the tide,
O it's "Special train for Atkins" when the trooper's on the tide.
You talk o' better food for us, an' schools, an' fires, an' all:
We'll wait for extry rations if you treat us rational.
Don't mess about the cook-room slops, but prove it to our face
The Widow's Uniform is not the soldier-man's disgrace.
For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Chuck him out, the brute!"
But it's "Saviour of 'is country" when the guns begin to shoot;
An' it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' anything you please;
An' Tommy ain't a bloomin' fool—you bet that Tommy sees!

Whether the soldier be a "Tommy" in a red coat of yesteryear or a modern GI in Khaki or camouflage, a soldier is still a soldier, appreciated or not. A soldier's duty is still a soldier's duty. A soldier's honor is still a soldier's honor. A soldier's country is still a soldier's country.

Tonight, I am proud to be with the men of the 33rd Division—men who years ago from New Guinea to the Phillipines brought distinctions and honor to the word "soldier."

Thank You. God Bless You.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ANNUNCIATION CATHEDRAL

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues in the Congress to join me in marking a milestone in the history of the Greek Orthodox Cathedral of the Annunciation in Baltimore, MD. On Sunday, October 8, 1989, the Annunciation held a service of thanksgiving to mark the 100th anniversary of the building of the present ediface that is the congregation's house of worship.

Located on the corner of Preston Street and Maryland Avenue in downtown Baltimore, the church was built in 1889 as an Associate Congregational Church. It was in 1937, when the Continental Oil Co. sought to raze the church to build a gas station, that the Annunciation Church leaders put in a bid to purchase the church.

With the help of Mayor Howard Jackson, the Baltimore City Council rescinded authorization for the razing of the church, and it was bought by the Annunciation congregation.

Since that time, Mr. Speaker, the Annunciation Church, now the Greek Orthodox Cathedral of the city of Baltimore, has continued to grow and expand. The church interior itself has been beautified in the ancient Byzantine style. Frescoes and icons of our Lord, the Blessed Virgin, and countless centuries of saints and martyrs for the faith adorn the walls and ikonostasion, or icon screen that separates the sanctuary from the worshippers in an Orthodox church.

An educational building was added to house the Sunday School and Greek language school, where countless young people have been instructed in their faith and heritage.

And most recently a cultural and social center, the Annunciation Orthodox Center, was built in the shell of four old row homes across from the church that were deemed worthy of preservation.

Over 30 years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Annunciation Cathedral made a commitment not to abandon the city of Baltimore and its downtown neighborhoods, and it has lived up to that commitment. In addition to serving as the heart of Orthodoxy in Baltimore and Maryland, the Annunciation Cathedral is a vital part of the cultural life of Baltimore as well.

The Annunciation Cathedral has a very special place in my heart, because it was in this church that I was married to my husband Bill 30 years ago. It gives me great pleasure to join in commemorating this very special occasion and to ask my colleagues in the Congress to join with me in congratulating Father Constantine Monios, the dean of the Cathedral, Father Loius Noplos, the assistant pastor of the Cathedral, and the entire Cathedral family on this momentous anniversary.

ST. JOHN'S HIGH SCHOOL SELECTED AS "SCHOOL OF EXCELLENCE"

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, it is with great enthusiasm that I rise to congratulate and pay tribute to the students, faculty, and parents of St. John's High School in my hometown of Toledo, OH, for being selected by Secretary of Education Lauro F. Cavazos as a "School of Excellence" under the 1989 School Recognition Program.

At a time when our commitment to quality education has never meant more for ensuring a secure and promising future for our community and Nation, St. John's has set a new standard in defining the skills our young men and women will require to carry out this vital task.

Since 1965 St. John's High School has demonstrated a consistent dedication to excellence in academics, and in its wide range of extracurricular activities. St. John's is dedicated to the principle that the young men it fosters will be successful only inasmuch as they strive to be men for others.

H.G. Wells once said that, "Human history becomes more and more a race between education and catastrophe." The young men of St. John's and their generation are clearly writing a new chapter in our history. Their conscious decision to be the best they can be extends the hope that this chapter will, in fact, be our Nation's finest yet.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues in the House of Representatives join me in extending our congratulations, encouragement, and above all, sincere appreciation for the inspiration St. John's provides young men and women throughout our Nation. May its ongoing efforts to pursue excellence in their education ensure that the fondest dreams for its students truly become a reality.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, the racial incident which occurred a few weeks back in Bensonhurst, Brooklyn concerned not only New Yorkers, but all of the people in this country. An article recently appeared in New York Newsday by the Reverend Jesse Jackson which sheds a new light on this incident. It offers hope that there is better in us than what happened in Bensonhurst and I would like to share it with you.

TEACH CHILDREN TO VALUE ALL CREEDS AND COLORS

(By Jesse Jackson)

Recently I went to Franklin D. Roosevelt High School in Bensonhurst and found a miniature United Nations, a true rainbow of humanity.

The Bensonhurst I visited was not the bastion of racism described in the media.

The student body at FDR is made up of young people from 58 different national heritages who study and play together in peace and with mutual respect. These young people are America's dream team, and they show why we need a multicultural education to keep the milk of human understanding flowing.

The brutal murder of Yusuf Hawkins has caused much racial misunderstanding and pain. The media have not helped matters by portraying the white people of Bensonhurst in a one-dimensional way. Many innocent young people expressed a feeling that they were not only ashamed of what happened to Yusuf Hawkins but embarrassed by the distorted press coverage of their neighborhood.

Almost all of the students I spoke to responded positively to historical examples I gave them of interracial cooperation in struggles for freedom and justice. I told them about Viola Liuzzo, an Italian-American woman who was shot down by racists while driving civil rights activists between Selma and Montgomery, two key points in the freedom struggle. I told them about the large African-American vote for Mario Cuomo when he became New York's first Italian-American governor.

I told them about all of the people of every conceivable color and heritage who had chosen to place hope over fear. And they responded with swelling pride.

But what about the young Americans cut off from this history and caught up in the pathology of racial animosity and fear?

The striking thing about the rising tide of racial violence is that it is, for the most part, perpetrated by young people. According to the New York City police, 70 percent of all crimes in the city involving intergroup bias are committed by people under 19 years of age.

The social pressures producing race hatred are enormous, beginning with reduced career and educational opportunities for young people. When there is racial polarization and growing impoverishment of the white working class, many disaffected whites scapegoat African-Americans, Asians, Latinos, other ethnic groups and women.

The gang that set upon Yusuf Hawkins with baseball bats was acting out of, among other things, a profound frustration with their own lives. Joseph Fama, who was arrested in the shooting of Yusuf Hawkins, dropped out of high school at age 15. His lack of economic success was the material basis of his racist rage.

People who believe in themselves and in the future do not kill innocents in cold blood. But when the material basis for racial anger and rage is combined with crude stereotyping in the media and a lack of moral leadership in local communities, the results are explosive. That is how we come to associate (unfairly) whole communities, such as Bensonhurst and Howard Beach, with racial attacks, or Harlem with crime and violence.

But we have a way to reduce the chances of more deaths owing to racial hatred and impulse.

We can give our children a multicultural education that teaches them mutual respect and support. We can teach them about heroes and heroines who believed in, and fought for, the oneness of humanity regardless of race, creed or color.

Without such an education, sending our children to school with children from other heritages becomes a risky proposition. But there are great rewards to be reaped if we transmit the richness of multicultural experience.

The great American challenge is for people of different backgrounds to learn to live together in peace. Whether we rise to this challenge depends on the efforts of "we the people," our sacrifice, our devotion, our courage.

BRIAN McLAUGHLIN: A PROFILE IN PUBLIC SERVICE

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, one of the nice features in New York Newsday is a column entitled "Queens Profiles." Last week's profile featured one of Queens' brightest residents, Brian McLaughlin.

Brian serves as assistant to the president of the New York City Central Labor Council. He also works as business agent for Local 3 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. When Brian is not working for the working men and women of New York, he is active in civic and political affairs. He serves as a member of Community Board 8 in Queens, and he has been elected Democratic Party leader in part A of the 27th Assembly District in Queens.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues join me in commending Brian for his excellent record of public service. I ask that the Newsday article be reprinted in the RECORD at this point, and I commend this article to my colleagues.

[From New York Newsday, Oct. 5, 1989]

QUEENS PROFILE—BRIAN M. MCLAUGHLIN

(By Sheila McKenna)

Job: Assistant to the president of the New York City Central Labor Council, comprised of 500 unions with a city membership of 1.2 million; business representative of Local 3, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; member of Community Board 8, serves on the youth planning committee; volunteer for the Boy Scouts of America; treasurer of the Electchester Little League.

Biography: 37; born in Manhattan; bachelor's from Empire State College; master's in labor and industrial relations from New York Institute of Technology; an electrician, served as pension director of the Electrical Industry Pension Fund; married; two children.

Residence: Co-op in Flushing.

Community accomplishment: "In 1979, our baseball team was down to 12 children, we now have 214 boys and girls playing Little League. We also expanded the Electchester Athletic Association and got a Little League charter for the greater Flushing area . . ."

Current focus: "For the past six months, I've chaired a subcommittee of Community Board 8 that deals with teenagers. We set out to plan a series of organized, supervised activities. At our first dance, we had 417 teenagers, age 13 to 17. It sent a signal that it's something they want. We have another scheduled later this month and this is the kind of thing that I would like to do more often."

ASSISTANCE TO POLAND—STATEMENT OF LANE KIRKLAND, PRESIDENT, AFL-CIO

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, on September 20, 1989, the Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East received testimony concerning United States economic programs for Poland and Hungary.

One of the distinguished witnesses was Mr. Lane Kirkland, President, AFL-CIO. He spoke of the AFL-CIO's long ties and close support for the Solidarity trade union, and made a compelling case for timely Western assistance to the new Solidarity-led government in Poland.

I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to Mr. Kirkland's concluding remarks on Poland:

STATEMENT OF LANE KIRKLAND, PRESIDENT, AFL-CIO

If I may say one word in conclusion. Our generation is privileged to be present and to be players in a moment of extraordinary historical change. We can see history moving before our eyes, things we have all prayed for and worked for many, many years.

It is one of the great challenges and opportunities that human history affords mankind. This is not a time when this country can respond by a plea of poverty and a lack of resources. What is lacking is will.

What is lacking is leadership—strong and forceful leadership. I raised the point of the role of the OECD because, despite revisionist history and all of that, the fact is in my view that the Cold War began when the Iron Curtain descended and the nations of Central Europe were denied by the Soviet masters the opportunity to participate in the Marshall Plan.

That was the onset of the Cold War. It would seem to me to be fitting that with the end of it in sight, they be brought into this historical association that still exists—and that the instrument be put to work on the task of rebuilding those economies and bringing them into the society of free men and women.

It is symbolically correct. It was there for that purpose. It hasn't had that use for many, many years. It ought to. The opportunity is there. History will not judge this generation very well if we are found wanting at the time when we can literally see history moving before our eyes.

What happens in Poland, its success or failure, will have a profound influence on what happens in Czechoslovakia, Hungary, East Germany, Romania, and Bulgaria in the future. Freedom and democracy in Poland are worth many times the billions of dollars that we have spent on our military establishment. The collapse and the failure of this adventure, this movement of history, will cost us in its military, defense, and security consequences, many, many billions of dollars, besides shattering the emerging hopes of free people everywhere.

There is no possible grounds or excuse for saying: "Where we are going to get the money? We don't have it. We are too poor." We have got to do whatever is required. The proposals I put forward are very modest, exceedingly modest. It is almost a good faith beginning, in effect.

I deeply believe that we must lead the rest of the democratic world into their appropriate share of this responsibility. That burden is primarily ours. Others should share it. It is in all of our interests. It is in the interests of free men and women everywhere.

WHEN WILL WE EVER LEARN?

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker's last week's historic vote to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 represents a turning point in the seemingly inexorable growth of the liberal welfare state. For the first time, the Congress appears ready to jettison a program that follows the traditional prescription of how we should provide health care to our senior citizens—that is, rely exclusively on the Government to provide the financing and to establish the standards for this care, even where the private sector stands ready to offer an attractive alternative.

As we know, this government-only approach has not worked well; among other things, it has contributed to the rapid growth in health care inflation over the past few decades. In fact, senior citizens allot the same proportion of their incomes to health care expenses today as they did before the enactment of Medicare.

I want to draw my colleagues' attention to the latest report from the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] on the escalating costs of the beseiged program. It seems that what appeared to be a $30 billion program only 1 year ago has been mysteriously transformed into a $48 billion behemoth.

Well, friends, there is no mystery about it. Every time we have expanded the Government's role in the area of health care, we have relied on naively low estimates of the fiscal impact of our actions. This happened when the Congress approved the original Medicare and Medicaid Programs. The 1970 cost of the Medicaid Program was supposed to be $2.7 billion. What happened? Actual costs were 85 percent higher, or $5 billion. For Medicare the story was no different. While we were told by our exports that the total cost in 1970 would be $4 billion, the real cost turned out to be $6.3 billion, 58 percent higher.

Again, we are looking at projections that indicate the total cost will exceed last year's estimate by about 60 percent. When will we ever learn?

I urge my colleagues to examine the CBO report and to support whatever steps may be necessary to defend the House position in conference.

CBO REESTIMATE OF MEDICARE OUTLAYS FOR SKILLED NURSING FACILITY [SNF] BENEFITS

In early August, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) provided a memorandum on the unexpected increases in Medicare reimbursements for care in skilled nursing facilities (SNF). Since that time, we have updated our estimates of both SNF spending and the effects of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (MCCA).

Table 1 displays updated CBO estimates of Medicare SNF spending and the portion of that spending attributable to MCCA. Medicare benefits for care in skilled nursing facilities are projected to rise rapidly. In fiscal year 1988, Medicare SNF reimbursements totaled $883 million. In the first 10 months of fiscal year 1989, these benefit payments have totaled $1.731 billion. Using information on the number of SNF bills submitted in August and taking the trend of recent monthly spending, we now project that Medicare SNF spending for fiscal year 1989 will total $2.3 billion.

TABLE 1.—PROJECTED MEDICARE OUTLAYS FOR SKILLED NURSING FACILITY BENEFITS [1]

[In billions of dollars, by fiscal year]

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
MCCA	0.9	2.5	3.1	3.4	3.6	4.0
Other [2]	1.4	1.9	2.3	2.5	2.8	3.0
Total	2.3	4.4	5.4	5.9	6.4	7.0

[1] The estimates pertain only to the Medicare program and, therefore, do not include any offsetting effects on the Medicaid program. In addition, it appears that the MCCA SNF provisions have altered nursing home behavior in ways that may not be fully reversible. This would imply that the estimated effects of the MCCA in Table 1 overstate the savings that could be achieved by repeal of the provisions.

[2] Includes effects of new administrative practices and Fox v. Bowen on the older base program.

Source: Congressional Budget Office.

However, because critical information is not available, the estimates for total spending during the 1990–1994 period and the estimated impacts of MCCA are much more uncertain. For example, we have no data on the characteristics of Medicare SNF recipients in 1989. In particular, we do not know what portion of these recipients has entered SNFs from previous hospital stays or the distribution for lengths of stay of current recipients. Without such data, we have had to base our estimates on discussions with industry representatives, nursing-home operators, Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) personnel, academic experts, state Medicaid staffs, and others. While we have learned a great deal from these discussions, they do not replace having specific data.

BASIS OF ESTIMATE

We developed our current estimates by projecting what the growth in the Medicare SNF benefit would have been without MCCA. We then projected total Medicare SNF spending after MCCA and calculated the effects of MCCA by subtracting the first projection forom the new total.

SNF SPENDING WITHOUT MCCA

Without MCCA, we estimate the Medicare SNF benefits would have more than doubled between 1988 and 1990. The rapid growth was a result of two administrative changes made in the spring of 1988:

In April 1988, HCFA adopted a new manual of administrative guidelines to clarify eligibility for benefits. The new manual was, in part, a response to criticisms from interest groups that previous administration of benefits had been inconsistent among regions and more restrictive than required by the relevant law and regulations. The new manual changed the focus from what care was not covered to what care was covered.

Also in April 1988, new administrative arrangements mandated by the U.S. District Court took effect in Connecticut (and possibly certain other states). In 1986, the court had found in Fox v. Bowen that the Department of Health and Human Services had administered the Medicare benefit in ways that arbitrarily and unlawfully restricted eligibility while denying due process. The court mandated new administrative practices for Connecticut that were designed to achieve what it regarded as appropriate administration of the law.

Advice from several experts suggests that the changes in the manual and the implications of Fox v. Bowen could result in a doubling of what program outlays would otherwise have been when the changes are fully carried out. We assumed that the full effects of these administrative actions would be in place in the spring of 1991, some three years after their implementation. Subsequent growth was based on projected rates of inflation plus a small factor representing the expected growth in the Medicare population. The estimates assume that without the MCCA changes in the Medicare SNF program, spending would have risen from $1.4 billion in 1989 to $3.0 billion in 1994 (see Table 1).

TOTAL SNF SPENDING WITH MCCA

In January 1989, SNF provisions of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act took effect. These provisions:

Eliminated the eligibility requirement of a prior three-day hospital stay;

Increased the maximum covered stay from 100 days during a spell of illness to 150 days during a calendar year; and Changed the structure of copayments from a relatively high copayment ($70 per day in 1989) for the twenty-first through the one hundredth day of a SNF stay to a relatively low copayment (currently $25.50 per day) for the first through the eighth day.

Since January, monthly SNF reimbursements have risen rapidly, reflecting both administrative and legislative changes. Some providers responded by promptly claiming the Medicare SNF benefit for several categories of existing nursing home residents who were previously ineligible—for example, residents who had not had a three-day hospital stay before entering the nursing home, and residents who had exhausted their 100 days of benefits. Some state Medicaid programs have encouraged or reportedly even required nursing homes to submit claims to Medicare for such residents before seeking Medicaid reimbursement.

Preliminary administrative data suggest that, nationally, the share of nursing-home beds paid for under the Medicare SNF benefit in 1989 is three times larger than it was before the administrative and legislative changes. Many experts maintain that the full effects of the administrative and legislative changes are still to come. In some areas of the country, changes in the manual may not have been fully reflected in decisions about coverage. Also, the indirect national implications of Fox v. Bowen have not been fully felt. Some nursing homes and state Medicaid agencies have not been aggressive in seeking Medicare reimbursement under the new rules. A number of nursing homes and states have a shortage of Medicare certified SNF beds. Requests for Medicare certification of SNF beds are up sharply in 1989. As in the case of the administrative actions, we anticipate that the full effects of the legislative changes will not be realized until 1991.

When the administrative and legislative changes are fully in place, we anticipate that the modified Medicare SNF program will provide reimbursement for approximately 14 percent of all nursing home expenditures. Again based on our discussions with experts, this estimate is not an unreasonable interpretation of current laws and future expected practices. These assumptions imply Medicare spending on SNF benefits of $5.4 billion in fiscal year 1991, a sixfold increase from the 1988 level of $883 million. From the end of fiscal year 1991 through 1994, the estimates assume that Medicare SNF spending will rise by the projected rates of inflation plus a small factor representing the expected growth in the Medicare population.

The effects of the changes in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act can be calculated as the difference between total projected spending and projected spending under old law. As shown in Table 1, Medicare SNF spending resulting from MCCA legislation is estimated to increase by $900 million in 1989, rising in $4 billion in 1994.

THE EFFECTS OF SNF SPENDING ON TOTAL MCCA ESTIMATES

In July, CBO estimated that Medicare spending would increase $36.8 billion over the 1989-1993 period as a result of the catastrophic provisions. Financing provisions were estimated to raise $42.0 billion over the same period. This revised estimate of Medicare SNF spending attributable to MCCA adds $11.5 billion to the spending estimate. Under these revised estimates, estimated spending for the 1989-1993 period would be $48.2 billion or $6.3 billion more than the estimated receipts. The distribution of spending and receipts is shown in Table 2.

HONORING WILLIAM T. BRINGHAM, SR.

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to take a moment today to speak about a man of distinguished community activities, civic service, and professional integrity. That man is William T. Bringham, Sr., who is retiring at the end of this year after 35 notable years of dedicated service to the organization of Sigma Chi. Beginning in 1954, Bill has worn many hats at the international headquarters of the Sigma Chi Fraternity. He has helped the organization grow, more than double in members and almost double in the number of active chapters. He has been thoroughly involved in the planning and operation of numerous Sigma Chi activities and instrumental to their success.

In recognition of Bill's exceptional service, he has received Sigma Chi's highest honors: the Significant Sig Award for professional achievement and the Order of Constantine for great service to the fraternity.

Bill has worked hard to establish strong relations with members of Sigma Chi in the U.S. House and Senate. His rewards are the friendships he has helped to create between brothers throughout the world. Bill Bringham will be truly missed at the headquarters of Sigma Chi, but his friendship and his inspiration to the brothers of Sigma Chi will endure.

TRIBUTE TO DOROTHY L. DORMAN

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to offer my heartiest congratulations to Miss Dorothy L. Dorman, principal of Padonia Elementary School in my district, upon being selected as the 1989-1990 National Distinguished Principal by the Maryland Association of Elementary School Administrators [MAESA].

Dorothy, whose parents I have known for years, was chosen for this distinguished prize by a committee of peers from across the State who recognized her outstanding dedication and her 25 years of service to the education profession. Indeed—with qualifications such as hers—it's difficult to imagine anyone who deserved this award more than she did.

A graduate of Goucher College and the Teachers College of Columbia University, Dorothy has remained a staunch advocate of public education throughout her years of service. During her 8 years as a principal—first at Middleborough Elementary School and now at Padonia, where she has been for 2 years—her creativity and innovative leadership drew praise from children, parents, fellow administrators and teachers alike.

The quality that has truly made her a great educator, however, has been her intense love of children. She truly cares about our young people and wants them to have the best learning experience possible. Indeed, this is not something one can learn from a book but a feeling which rests in one's heart. Dorothy Dorman has this feeling—and for that the children of her elementary school have been truly blessed.

Mr. Speaker, on October 17 and 18, 1989, Dorothy will join other distinguished principals from 49 States to receive the recognition she so richly deserves. I urge you—as well as all my colleagues—to join me in extending to Dorothy Dorman as well as the other distinguished principals from across the country my best wishes and kudos for a job well done.

IN HONOR OF ABLE'S 20TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, in classrooms throughout our Nation's cities and towns, at countless veterans' gatherings, during any number of other civic and patriotic events, and at the beginning of each day's legislative business in this Chamber of the House of Representatives, we proclaim in our Pledge of Allegiance that we are truly "* * * one Nation, under God, with liberty and justice for all." In my hometown of Toledo, OH, the Advocates of Basic Legal Equality [ABLE] has worked to ensure that justice is never the sole possession of a privileged few.

Since 1969, ABLE has worked to develop a system by which high quality legal services in civil matters are available to low-income individuals and groups, thus ensuring equal opportunity, equality, and self-reliance to every citizen and group. Throughout these past 20 years, ABLE has been the voice to those who had none. Not only it strived to extend fundamental legal services to those who otherwise could not afford representation, it has dedicated its efforts to providing those less fortunate with a better way of life. Particularly, ABLE has worked tirelessly to secure the rights of low-income and minority persons to decent, safe, sanitary, and affordable housing.

Whether through negotiations, litigation, legislative and administrative advocacy, technical assistance, or community education, ABLE has worked to identify strategies to help the poor and disadvantaged become self-reliant.

Indeed, the vision of ABLE for a "just society" will long serve to remind us that if even one member of our community is denied the rights and liberties guaranteed as a citizen of these United States, then these same rights and liberties are incapable of protecting the rest of us.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the men and women of ABLE for their tireless efforts to promote equality and justice to all the members of our community. I know my colleagues in the House of Representatives join me in congratulating them on this their 20th anniversary year. May their work continually remind us that "Justice in the life and conduct of the State is only possible only as first it resides in the hearts and souls of the citizens." Inscribed on the U.S. Department of Justice Building.

SERGEANT KRUPKE LEARNS ABOUT THE FLAG

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, the following appeared in the Christian Science Monitor on September 25, 1989.

I recommend it highly to my colleagues.

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Sept. 25, 1989]

SERGEANT KRUPKE LEARNS ABOUT THE FLAG

(By Jeff Danziger)

Officer Krupke was walking his beat the day after the law was passed making it a crime to burn the American flag. He stopped at Green's deli for a roast beef sub and a cream soda. As of that morning, burning of the American flag or desecrating it in any form would get you five to 10 driving a sledge in the big house.

Officer Krupke was alert to crime wherever it happened. His district was full of wise guys, gang members, thugs, and hooligans. These kids today! Chasing them all day made a man hungry. A nice fresh roast beef sub. . . .

Suddenly his ever-alert nose sniffed smoke. Was It? Yes! Flag smoke! When you had been on the force as long as he had, you could tell. He ran to the corner, his trusty .38 drawn and ready. There they were!

"Freeze!" he shouted to the group of thugs standing around the conflagration.

"For what, flatfoot?"

"Burning the American flag. You have the right to remain silent, you . . . ."

"What flag?" said one of the hoodlums. "This ain't the American flag."

"Of course that's the American flag!"

"No, it ain't. Look close, kindly Sergeant Krupke, this piece of fabric only has 49 stars. Ergo, it ain't an American flag."

Peering through the flames, he couldn't see clearly. But what if they were right? Was there any law against burning an almost American flag? He didn't know.

"Oh, wise guys, eh?" said Officer Krupke.

It's just our bringin'-upke," they said. "But we're legal."

More smoke drifted around the corner. Krupke leaped forward. More creepy types were burning a flag! They dumped kerosene on the beloved symbol.

"Reach!" Krupke barked. "You are under arrest! You have the right . . . ."

"For what, copper? This is a fireproof flag. The kerosene is burning, but the flag ain't. So?"

Sure enough, although the flames licked and crackled, the flag itself remained untouched. Was this constitutional or not? Had our forefathers foreseen asbestos flags? Krupke was starting to feel a mild Scalia-like doubt about due process.

"Look!" one of the creeps pointed across the street. A woman was stuffing a real flag into an incinerator. Krupke raced up, his Smith & Wesson cocked.

"Ah, hah!" he chortled. "You are under arr . . . ."

"For what?" she asked.

"For burning an American flag! For desecrating the . . . ."

"For your information, Elliot Ness this is an old flag which I fly every day. It is threadbare and dirty. According to the regulations it is not supposed to be laundered, but rather disposed of in a respectful manner, preferably by burning. Don't you read government publications?"

"Really?"

"Absolutely. Now put that thing away, Batman, before you hurt somebody."

Poor Officer Krupke. He holstered his gun and walked dejectedly back to Green's deli. Constitutional law certainly was a puzzlement. No wonder they paid judges and presidents so much. All this thinking made him hungry. At least his roast beef submarine and cream soda was waiting. He neared the deli.

"Krupke! Where were you?" Mr. Green shouted at him from behind the meat case.

"What happened?"

"What happened? What happened, he says! I was robbed! Cleaned out! Cash! Checks! Pastrami! Cappacola! Turkey breast!"

"Roast beef?" Officer Krupke's heart skipped a beat.

"Roast beef, too! Where are the cops when you need one?" Mr. Green sunk into a funk.

Officer Krupke was about to tell him, but then thought better of it. He headed for the nearest Dunkin' Donuts.

THE NEED FOR LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE

HON. JIM BATES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I share with my colleagues the reservations that have been expressed over the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I appreciate very well the tremendous political pressure that we in Congress have been under to repeal this law. I also understand the concerns of some of our senior citizens who have been asked to pay additional taxes to support the program.

However, I must express my deep regret that, in so doing, we will be voting to repeal the skilled nursing facility benefit included in the 1988 Act. Loss of this provision will exact a great toll in human terms. Thousands of our frail elderly who desperately need skilled nursing care will go wanting, now and in the future.

Let me cite a few facts. The Catastrophic health law expanded an already existing skilled nursing facility benefit. Prior to enactment, it was mainly a paper benefit. Today it is a bona fide benefit used by many frail elderly. According to figures obtained from the Health Care Financing Administration, more than 500,000 beneficiaries will have obtained a day of covered nursing home care in 1989. My office, and the offices of other Members of Congress, may not have heard from these people, since their condition makes it difficult for them to communicate. But they have been receiving an unmistakable benefit as a result of our passing the Catastrophic health law last year.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that even now we can state our commitment to providing accessible, quality long term care to the millions of Americans who need it.

A RAY OF HOPE FOR PEACE IN LEBANON

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tueday, October 10, 1989

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on September 19, 1989, the House passed House Resolution 128, by a vote of 413 to 0. This resolution, which I introduced in April, asks the President to call upon the parties in Lebanon to honor the international call for an immediate cease-fire, the removal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, and the disbandment of all militias. It also supported the efforts of the Arab League and the United Nations to secure a cease-fire and steps toward internal reconciliation, including the fulfillment of the constitutional mandate to elect a new President.

Congressional approval of House Resolution 128 sent a clear message to the warring parties in Beirut and Lebanon that the United States wanted the carnage and bloodshed to end in that beleagured country. Since March 8, in Beirut alone, 835 people have been killed, 4,000 people wounded, and two-thirds of Beirut's 1.5 million people have fled the city. Life in Beirut came to a standstill with most people living in underground shelters without adequate food and water, most business paralyzed, hospitals destroyed, and all schools and universities closed.

On September 22, 1989, in response to congressional and international appeals, the warring factions in Lebanon—including Syria—accepted the seven-point Arab League plan for a cease-fire, setting the stage for discussions on national reconciliation. The plan calls for a durable and verifiable cease-fire and an end to all blockades imposed by the warring factions. The proposal also invites members of the Lebanon Parliament to meet to discuss and approve a charter for political reforms and national accord.

Mr. Speaker, there is reason for optimism that the fighting in Lebanon will end. The cease-fire is still holding. Lebanon members of parliament are meeting in Taif, Saudi Arabia, in an attempt to resolve their political differences and reach an agreement on national reconciliation. There is progress at these talks. The roads leading to Beirut are clogged with traffic as thousands of Lebanese return to the city from the country and mountain areas where they had sought refuge from the savage fighting of the last 6 months.

However, this truce will not last if political accord is not achieved. All foreign forces—especially the 40,000 Syrian troops that occupy 70 percent of Lebanon—must leave the country so that the Lebanese can resolve their differences without outside interference. By giving unanimous approval to House Resolution 128, Congress expressed the sentiments of the American people that a political solution is the only solution to restoring peace in Lebanon. I commend the Arab League for its effort to end the fighting in Lebanon and I hope that the discussions in Taif lead to national reconciliation.

OAK HILLS UNITED METHODIST CHURCH CELEBRATES 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, as Representative of the First Congressional District of Ohio, I ask my colleagues to join me in extending sincere congratulations to the members of the Oak Hills United Methodist Church as they celebrate that church's 150th anniversary on Sunday, October 15.

On April 10, 1816, Frederick Alter and his wife, Mary Ann, conveyed 1 acre of land to be used to "erect and build or cause to be built thereon a house or place of worship for use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America."

In 1839, the first known building was erected thereon. It was a log style building. In 1849, a brick structure was built on the same location replacing the log building. In 1866, a tornado destroyed this brick structure, but the congregation wouldn't let go. Working side by side, they salvaged the bricks and rebuilt it.

In 1940, Mrs. Amelia Wilke donated additional land, built a new church building of brick and stone, and furnished the interior with pews and altar furniture, in memory of her departed husband, August "Doc" Wilke. The church was then renamed the Wilke Memorial Community Church. This new building and land was adjacent to the 1849 structure and land. The 1849 structure was demolished in 1964 due to its unsafe condition.

In 1967, the church name was again changed by a vote of the congregation in order to identify it with the community location. The 1940 structure was then renamed the Wilke chapel. In 1968, when the United Brethren and Methodist churches merged, this church's name was again changed to the Oak Hills United Methodist Church.

In 1971 a new sanctuary and fellowship hall was built in order to hold the overflowing congregation. The cornerstone of the 1849 brick structure was incorporated into the northeast wall of the new sanctuary.

Despite the name changes, there has been a place of worship on the southeast corner of Ebenezer Road and Bridgetown Road in Green Township, Hamilton County, OH, for over 150 years.

As a further outreach to the community, this church has had a day care center for 17 years. Presently, it offers a before and after school program and a summer day camp program. The total enrollment of these combined programs is 186 children.

Mr. Speaker, the contributions the church has made to the people of the community deserve our sincere thanks. The Oak Hills United Methodist Church has a proud history and an important role in the future of the community. Please join me in extending sincere congratulations to the Oak Hills United Methodist Church.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM F. EISELY

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure and respect that I salute Mr. William F. Eisely, State Director of the Maryland, Delaware, and District of Columbia of the Loyal Order of the Moose [LOOM], in recognition to his years of service to his lodge and to the State of Maryland.

Mr. Speaker, the LOOM is an organization whose charitable acts have in the past included providing food and clothing for disaster victims, participation in various community activities, and delivering baskets of food to the poor during Thanksgiving and Christmas. Indeed any individual who has attained great success in such an organization—as has Mr. Eisely—must certainly epitomize its lofty values and is worthy of our praise and appreciation.

Mr. Eisely joined the Essex, MD, Lodge No. 768, LOOM, on March 22, 1965, and has served in all lodge-appointed and elected offices. On the statewide level he has served the lodge's third district as sergeant at arms, treasurer, secretary, and as past president.

He served the Maryland State Association, LOOM, as convention coordinator for 3 years, as secretary of the association, and—finally—as State director. Among the many awards he has received from the order are the Fellowship Degree and the Pilgrim Degree for Merit for outstanding service to the Moose.

The members of Essex Moose Lodge No. 768, Essex Chapter No. 783, and the Women of the Moose—in honor of Mr. Eisely's achievements—are renaming their meeting room in his honor. Indeed few members of any organization are so honored. And it is my great honor to offer Mr. Eisely my very best wishes during this happy occasion as well as kudos for a job well done.

TRIBUTE TO REV. MSGR. MARK J. GIORDANI AND ANTHONY OCCHIUZZI, ITALIAN CIRCLE "MEN OF THE YEAR"

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest admiration and pride that I rise today to pay tribute to two outstanding men in my 8th Congressional District, one a spiritual leader of great renown and the other a dedicated and tireless civic leader, who are being honored for the great contributions they have made to their community.

I am speaking of the Rev. Msgr. Mark J. Giordani, pastor of St. John's Cathedral and chaplain of the Italian Circle of Paterson, NJ, and Mr. Anthony Occhiuzzi, a highly respected member of the circle for many years. For all they have done both for their organization and for the people of the greater northern New Jersey area, Monsignor Giordani and Mr. Occhiuzzi will be honored as the Italian Circle's 1989 Men of the Year at the organization's annual Columbus Day Dinner and Dance on Friday, October 13, 1989, at the Regency House in Pompton Plains.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no two people more fitting of this high honor. Monsignor Giordani was born in Pessola, Parma, Italy and emigrated to the United States in 1958 with his family. He studied at St. Mary's College in Kentucky and St. Bonaventure University in Olean, NY, receiving his B.A. in Philosophy. He entered Christ the King Seminary in New York where he received his Masters of Divinity in Theology.

Monsignor Giordani was ordained a priest by Bishop Lawrence B. Casey in St. John's Cathedral in Paterson in 1969. In 1974 he was appointed copastor at St. Gerard's parish. Under Monsignor Giordani's tireless leadership and guidance, the St. Joseph Community Center was built, and he established such organizations as the St. Vincent DePaul's Society, and the St. Gerard's Day Care Center. He also served as chaplain of the Paterson Police Department, as chaplain of the Haledon, NJ, Fire and Police Departments, as chaplain to the Constables Association in West Paterson, as chaplain to the Italian Circle and as a member of the Paterson CETA Program Advisory Board in 1978.

Mr. Speaker, in 1987, Monsignor Giordani was appointed as Rector of St. John's Cathedral in Paterson, the mother church of the Paterson Diocese, by Bishop Frank J. Rodimer. And on May 21, 1989, he was installed as Honorary Prelate to His Holiness, John Paul II, giving him the title of Monsignor.

Mr. Speaker, Anthony Occhiuzzi was born in Italy and came to the United States at age 9 where he attended public schools and graduated from Central High School in Patterson, NJ, in 1945.

Mr. Occhiuzzi has been a long-time member of the Italian Circle and has been integrally involved in some of the Circle's most important activities. When the Italian Circle was relocated to Berkshire Avenue in 1972, Mr. Occhiuzzi was cochairman of the dedication book for the new building. He was also chairman of the committee to raise funds for the new building.

In 1985 Gaetano Federici's famous statue of Christopher Columbus was moved from Eastside Park in Paterson to the Gaetano Federici Park on Ellison Street. Mr. Occhiuzzi was chairman of the committee which raised funds from brother members and the private sector to finance this venture. Throughout the years Anthony Occhiuzzi has been loyal and highly valued member of the Italiance Circle.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to present a brief portrait of the two men who are being honored on October 13. I know the dinner in their honor will be a great success, thanks in great measure to the dinner chairman, Charles Scialla; cochairman, Sam Calafiore; and the dinner committee, Mike Adamo, Joe Carrao, Ralph Gambatese, Jim LaCava, Joe Lobosco, George Scala, Anthony Ventimiglia, and John Giovatto.

Mr. Speaker, I invite you and our colleagues, then, to join me in saluting two outstanding citizens of my 8th Congressional District of New Jersey, Rev. Msgr. Mark J. Giordani, Pastor of St. John's Cathedral, and Mr. Anthony Occhiuzzi, the Italian Circle's Men of the Year.

AFRICA WATCH: DEDICATED TO FURTHERING HUMAN RIGHTS

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, There are precious few organizations in the world dedicated to furthering human rights in Africa. One of the most well respected is Africa Watch, founded last year to "monitor human rights practices in Africa and promote respect for internationally recognized standards." I am continually impressed with this group's work, but I was particularly moved by the following reports on Sudan and Malawi. Africa Watch documents how Sudan's new military government has clamped down on several basic freedoms, including an independent judiciary. It also describes how Malawi has imprisoned citizens for their political activism—among those jailed is the country's best known poet, Jack Mapanje. I urge my colleagues to read these eye-opening reports.

[From Africa Watch, Sept. 25, 1989]

SUDAN—DESTRUCTION OF THE INDEPENDENT SECULAR JUDICIARY, MILITARY GOVERNMENT CLAMPS DOWN ON PRESS FREEDOM

Sudan's new military government has dismissed dozens of judges who objected to the violations of the rights of civilians facing trial in special military tribunals. It has also closed down all independent newspapers, has detained lawyers and trade unions and threatens to move against its critics in the university.

The elected government of Sadiq el Mahdi, overthrown in a military coup on June 30, 1989, and the rebel Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) of Dr. John Garang had planned to meet on September 18 in a Constitutional Conference, to settle the nation's civil war and other critical issues. The new military government of the Revolutionary Command Council (RCC) under Lieutenant General Omar at Bashir has promised to move towards peace, but, as September 18 passes, peace seems further away then ever. The recent convening of a "Peace Committee" in Khartoum is widely believed to lack credibility.

A central demand of the SPLA is that Sudan should be a secular state without Islamic Law (sharia). Recent actions by the RCC suggest that it is moving in precisely the opposite direction, systematically dismantling the indpendent secular judiciary with the implicit aim of replacing it with a militant Islamic judiciary. Africa Watch is concerned that this will lead to the denial of basic human rights to all citizens of Sudan, whether from the north or south, and will also serve to extinguish the hope of peace.

Information about recent developments in Sudan is scarce and often slow in arriving, because of the government's strict censorship (see below). However, the following sequence of events has apparently occurred.

On July 31, a delegation from the trade unions and professional associations, which were dissolved by government order immediately after the June coup, presented a mildly worded, legalistic memorandum to the RCC calling for the ban on their organizations to be lifted. They also requested that the Sudanese Bar Association be invovled in drafting any future legislation concerning the right of free association. The Bar Association and the Association of Legal Advisors in the Attorney General's Chambers have both signed this memorandum. The response of the RCC was to imprison the signatories, including Abdalla al-Hassan, president of the Bar Assocation (see News from Africa Watch, August 22, 1989).

The RCC had meanwhile set up special three-man tribunals, whose members were to be military officers, to try members of the previous government and other people suspected of corruption. On August 12, the first major tribunal met, to try former Deputy Chairman of the Council of State Idris el Banna. The judiciary were unhappy about this. Around this time, judges began to be dismissed. On August 21, a strike of judges was organized, which resulted in more dismissals (reportedly bringing the total to 57), and the detention of over 20 judges. On August 25, the judges submitted a memorandum to the RCC protesting these dismissals, and arguing that the tribunals could not be said to be independent, as they were chaired by military officers. Subsequently, more judges have been dismissed, either publicly in small numbers every few days, or individually and privately. Others have resigned, presumably expecting dismissal. The total number dismissed is not known, but it is believed that the RCC has a list of 120 whom they intend to purge. Some legal advisors to the government have also been dismissed, or resigned.

The judges' worries about the military tribunals were well founded. After two adjournments, Idris el Banna was brought to trial on September 2. He was charged with corruption and misappropriation of road-building equipment donated by Libya, which had been found at his home when he was arrested. Idris el Banna was given only four days to prepare evidence in his defense, he was not allowed a defense counsel but only a "friend" in court, he was not permitted access to the evidence of the prosecution, nor allowed to present the evidence in his defense properly. The trial was broadcast on television that evening. It lasted less than two hours, during which time the defendant was interrupted and abused by members of the court. However, he made a good impression on the public by his dignity under abuse and by denying the right of a military court to try a civilian. Idris el Banna, who is 73, was sentenced to 40 years in jail. The next trial to be held is that of Dr. Pacifico Lado Lolik, former member of the Council of State, for alleged corruption.

There are reports that Awad el Gid, a prominent Islamic juror and one of the architects of the introduction of Islamic Law in 1983, has been called upon to appoint suitable judges to replace those who have been dismissed.

It appears that the government of Sudan is in the process of dismantling the independent secular judiciary that the country has enjoyed since independent and replacing it with a militant Islamic judiciary, sponsored by the military government. Under such a judicial system, no defendant will have the guarantee of a fair trial.

The special courts are also empowered to impose punishments laid down in the 1983 code of law—the "September laws" introduced by former President Nimeiri—which include amputation, stoning, flogging and crucifixion. Africa Watch considers that these are cruel, inhuman and degrading punishments which violate Sudan's international legal obligations.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

Until June 30, Sudan had one of the freest presses in sub-Saharian Africa, with over 40 journals and newspapers. Since the coup, only government-sponsored newspapers have been allowed to publish, their editors approved by the RCC and their "news" consisting largely of official pronouncements. Journalists have not been allowed to travel. The Sudanese people, accustomed to vigorous debate in the papers, buy these publications merely out of habit.

However, the tradition of free speech is not so easily suppressed. Underground editions of the newspaper al Medan have been circulated, and student unions have also circulated news-sheets. On the campus of the University of Khartoum, a "Democracy Wall" also exists. Known as nashart ("activity"), it dates from pre-independence days, and consists of an open-sided shelter with internal walls, each covered with notices pinned up. Each section of the wall belongs to a different political grouping, and even under today's strict censorship, the views of each political party can still be read there. Nearby, students from all political affiliations speak their views with impunity. A similar Wall exists in the medical faculty. While information posted on the Wall is not subject to liberal laws or press regulations, and cannot be verified, it remains the only significant source of free information other than gossip.

Can the Wall last? At present the University of Khartoum, along with the medical doctors, are the only major institutions of secular Sudanese society that have not been purged. The military, police, civil service, press, trade unions and the judiciary have all been purged. Two university lecturers are in detention, Dr. Ushari Mahmoud, a leading human rights activist, and Dr. Ali Abdallah Abbas, of the University Staff Association, but this is mild treatment compared with the other institutions mentioned above. It is likely, however, that the Students Union, which is dominated by Moslem fundamentalists, has pressed for such a purge to be put off until the end of September, when the students' examinations will be over. It is likely that Khartoum's "Democracy Wall" will also fall victim to such a purge.

[From Africa Watch, Sept. 20, 1989]

MALAWI—A POET OUT OF BOUNDS, JACK MAPANJE DETAINED WITHOUT TRIAL FOR 2 YEARS

On September 25, 1987, Malawian police arrested Jack Mapanje, the country's best-known poet. Two year later, despite widespread international protest on his behalf, Mapanje remains in detention at Mikuyu Prison near Zomba in southern Malawi. He has not been charged with any offense, nor has the government made any public statement as to the reasons for his imprisonment.

Malawian law allows for detention without trial. Under the 1965 Public Security Regulations the President can order the indefinite detention without charge of anyone "for the preservation of public order." It is not known whether Jack Mapanje has been served with such a detention order. What is known is that he is held at Mikuyu with a group of detainees, comprised of suspected critics or political opponents of the government. They include Machipisa Munthali, who has been held without charge for more than 20 years. For the first 20 months of his incarceration, Mapanje was not allowed visits from his family or friends (he is married to a midwife, Mercy Mapanje, and they have three children). Nor has he been allowed to see a priest—Mapanje is a practicing Roman Catholic.

In the absence of any statement by the government, we can only speculate as to the reasons for his detention, although clearly it was Mapanje's writing which upset the authorities. At the time of his arrest his 1981 collection of poems, Of Chameleons and Gods, was banned. After his arrest in Zomba, Mapanje was first taken in handcuffs to the University of Malawi, where he is head of the Department of English Language and Literature. The police searched his office and seized various manuscripts, including poems and a paper delivered at a conference in Stockholm in 1986, entitled "Censoring the African Poem: Personal Reflections." This includes an account of his problems with the Malawi Censorship Board. It is likely that the authorities were also concerned about Mapanje's plans to bring out a second volume of poems, provisionally entitled Out of Bounds, and about an invitation for him to take up the post of writer-in-residence at the University of Zimbabwe. It was presumably felt that, from the safety of Harare, Mapanje would feel less constrained about openly criticizing the Malawian government.

Jack Mapanje was born in Mangochi District in southern Malawi in 1943. He was educated at the University of Malawi and the University of London, where he obtained an M.Phil in the early 1970s and returned to study for a Ph.D in the 1980s. In addition to being a published poet of international reputation, Mapanje is a respected theoretical linguist. He is chairman of the Linguistics Association of SADCC Universities (SADCC is the Southern African Development Coordination Conference, an organization which aims to reduce the dependence of the independent countries of the region on South Africa.) Mapanje has edited two anthologies of Africa poetry, broadcast for the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC), and acted as judge in BBC and Commonwealth poetry competitions.

In his 1974 M.Phil thesis, Mapanje remarked on the usefulness of an international reputation to an Africa writer: "Writers are a threat to African leadership because having been published abroad they are usually given international recognition and hence international protection." Sadly, Mapanje's reputation has not saved him from two years of arbitrary and unjustifiable imprisonment, but it has ensured that his case has not been forgotten. In June 1988 he was the winner of the Poetry International award in Rotterdam. This was accepted on his behalf by the Nigerian writer, Wole Soyinka, winer of the Nobel Prize for Literature.

What may be more surprising, even to Jack Mapanje's sympathizers in the Western world, is the extent of his popularity in Malawi. His poems do not circulate freely and his book has never been on sale in the country's book shops. Yet why, when he delivered a university lecture in 1983 on "Aspect and Tense in ChiYao, ChiChewa and English," was the audience so large that it had to be transferred to a different hall? Why, in short, did the Malawian Government have to detain him?

Malawi is a rigidly authoritarian country where freedom of speech is virtually non-existent. It has been ruled since independence in 1964 by President Hastings Kamuzu Banda, who leads the sole permitted political organization, the Malawi Congress Party (MCP). Shortly after independence Banda sacked from his Cabinet a number of Ministers who were critical of his policies and was later declared President-for-Life. The sacked Ministers fled into exile and no opposition or political debate has been permitted since. Hundreds of opponents, real or alleged, have been detained, tortured or assassinated. For example, in November 1988 Osborne Mkandawire, a journalist working for the government's Department of Information, was tortured to death in Mikuyu Prison. His alleged crime was to have passed information to a foreign journalist. Fred Sikwese, senior economist in the Ministry of External Affairs, was reported to have been starved to death in Lilongwe Central Prison in March 1989. A few days later, Frackson Zgambo, a businessperson, was reportedly killed at Mikuyu Prison. Sikwese and Zgambo are alleged to have smuggled documents out of the country dealing with the sensitive issue of Malawi's relationship with South Africa. Strict laws govern the free exchange of information. There is a penalty of life imprisonment for anyone who sends "false information" out of the country which may be "harmful to the interests or to the good name of Malawi." However, as these cases show, more often suspected dissent is dealth with outside the law.

The authorities are extremely sensitive about the import or publication of books and magazines. There is an extensive list of proscribed publications; possession of any of them is a criminal offense punishable by a term of imprisonment. These range from the overtly political (Marx, Engels, Trotsky and, oddly, a counter-insurgency manual by a former US Marine Corps officer), through the sexual (Playboy, Kama Sutra, Harold Robbins) to works of literature. Among the hundreds of authors who have failed to win the approval of the Malawi Censorship Board are George Orwell, James Baldwin, Bernard Malamud, Wole Soyinka, Okot p'Bitek, Ernest Hemingway, Tennessee Williams, Simone de Beauvoir and Graham Greene. In his 1986 paper delivered in Stockholm, Jack Mapanje recalls an occasion when President Banda recommended to his Cabinet a book he had been presented with on his return to Meharry Medical College, Tennessee, where he had trained as a doctor, only to find that it was on the list of banned books. As Mapanje commented, "the objective of most censorship boards is first and foremost to protect the censors from dismissal."

The Malawi Censorship Board was set up in 1968 under a law that made it an offense to publish anything or handle any publication:

likely to give offense to the religious convictions or feelings of any section of the public, bring anyone into contempt, harm relations between sections of the public or be contrary to the interests of public safety or public order.

It also provides that any member of the public can complain, anonymously if they wish, about material which has "caused offense."

When Of Chameleons and Gods was published in 1981 it was neither officially proscribed nor cleared for sale. Thus book shops were not allowed to display it, but no one could be prosecuted for possessing a copy. In 1985 the Ministry of Education and Culture issued a circular banning its use in schools and colleges. In his 1986 paper Mapanje quotes the Polish novelist Tadeusz Konwicki to the effect that censorship "forces the writer to employ metaphors which raise the piece of writing to a higher level." He is amused at the idea that the Malawi Censorship Board may have actually improved his poems.

For many years Mapanje had exercised skill in evading the blue pencil. In the 1970s he was a member of the Malawi Writers' Group. Although the group numbered journalists and others among its members, it met at the university and was regarded as part of the academic teaching program—a loophole through which it evaded the attention of censors. Its significance was more than just literary; with the stringent controls on political activity, it rapidly became the only forum for critical discussion. However, this discussion could not be overt and many metaphors were developed to refer to the principal characters and issues in Malawian politics. For example, references to "dawn" or "cockerel" were metaphors for the Malawi Congress Party, whose flag contains a symbol of sunrise. President Banda proclaims "Kwacha" (dawn) at the beginning of all speeches and the kwacha and tambala (cockerel) are the units of currency. "Chingwe's Hole," a cleft in the rock of the Zomba plateau is used to refer to detention. This is where a Yao chief is said to have executed his enemies by throwing them down the hole. The "leopards of Dedza" are the Official Hostess, Cecilia Kadzamira, and her uncle, John Tembo, both deeply unpopular and the principal contenders for the succession to Banda. Such phrases, which recur in Mapanje's poems, are widely understood and have found their way into popular usage.

Mapanje has also made his poems more accessible by his use and adaption of traditional oral verse forms. His 1974 thesis was entitled, "The Use of Traditional Literary Forms in Modern Malawian Writing in English." In it he discusses the predicament of African writers who are so often critical of the leadership of their societies—an especially acute problem in the ferociously anti-intellectual atmosphere of Malawi after the 1964 Cabinet crisis.

While some writers have had to make a painful reassessment of their "hope-for" roles in Independent Africa by an unhappy accommodation of their moral and aesthetic principles within their new political situation, others have inflicted upon themselves some sort of exile, while still others have been forced into exile by the embrassed politicans who look at the writer's critical approach to life as an impediment to their remaining in power for as long as they would like.

It is no wonder then that African writers should feel alienated in their societies today * * *. To keep their sanity * * * they have to write what politicans regard as subversive literature or obscure works either directed towards a literary coterie or meant as therapy for their psychological crises.

As an alternative Mapanje advocates a return to "traditional literature and modes of thought as the source of metaphor and inspiration." Such an approach is particularly potent in Malawi, where Banda makes extensive use of pseudo-traditional ritual at all his public appearances: women dancers, praise singers and so on. In his thesis, Mapanje argues that traditionally the praise poet had a license to criticize the chief, whereas the new songs have become "'watered down propaganda to praise the new leaders with very little poetic insight."

What the new praise-song lacks is an element of constructive criticism of either the leadership or the society. The criticism was necessary in the original song because it was one way of helping the chief or the traditional leader to improve. It was also a way of knowing what the people think about the leadership * * *. What we would like to see is a critical-praise poem to bring about sanity where it is rare to find.

With his use of metaphor and traditional forms Mapanje was able to outwit the censors. But finally he could do so no longer; his book was banned and he imprisoned. Partly, of course, this simply reflects the effectiveness of Mapanje's criticism and the frustration of the authorities at his wits and skill. But it is also the result of changes in the political situation. For Mapanje, a turning point was the murder in 1983 of Dick Matenje, secretary-general of the MCP, Aaron Gadama, Minister for the Central Region and two Members of Parliament. Matenje and Gadama were both opponents of the powerful Kadzamira-Tembo faction; Matenje as secretary-general of the party would have become acting-President at Banda's death. Their removal, ostensibly in a road accident, cleared the way for Kadzamira and Tembo to succeed Banda. After their deaths Mapanje wrote in a private letter:

Do you remember watching Idi Amin off Tottenham Court Road in 1973? Well, those shootings were so remote. They looked like jokes. I did not realize that ten years later the story'd get home. And it was so painful that I could not work or think for months.

His poetry began to deal more overtly with political themes. In Mapanje's 1986 paper on censorship there is no reference to the critical license of the praise poets. He now regards himself as Out of Bounds.

ATROCITIES AGAINST CHILDREN: NEW YORK'S FOSTER CARE GROUP HOMES

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 10, 1989

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Education and Labor Committee I am concerned about education problems and other issues affecting our children throughout the Nation; however, I am particularly and deeply concerned about education and other services to children in my own 12th Congressional District in New York City. In reality, my national and local concerns are not mutually exclusive. My district is a mirror of some of the best and the worst educational activities and social services for children in the country. Lessons learned in my district would be useful anywhere in the Nation. From time to time, in my district, I discover situations which can only be described as atrocities against children. I think it would be useful if these outrages were exposed to the whole Nation.

In New York City it took years of agitation and litigation by child advocates before their campaign to reform and rehumanize our city's child welfare system began to succeed. But about a decade ago it seemed that the system had finally started to turn the corner; the foundations for a new, more progressive and humane system—a model for the Nation—were being laid down.

But then it all just stopped; the system appeared to collapse under the pressure of raging poverty, homelessness, crack, and AIDS. Suddenly New York's child welfare system was now drawing national attention not for its quality or innovations but for the egregiousness of its mistakes and failures. Strangely, however, there were few regrets expressed by our Mayor Koch and his appointees. Each successive incident of cruelty or ineptitude, each death or injury of a child, were waved away with a sigh as if they were some kind of natural phenomena, as inevitable and unpreventable as falling leaves in autumn and snow in winter. It was all very sad, but there was nothing we could do.

That, of course, is a lie.

A report recently issued by the Brooklyn Health Action Committee, Inexcusable Harm, makes clear the terrible extent to which the city's child welfare system has disintegrated and, most importantly, the mendacity of politicians who would excuse themselves from blame.

Written by Dr. Karen Benker and James Rempel, the report examines New York City's revival of foster care group homes—an institution abolished during the wave of reforms in the 1970's—and the scandalous conditions to which young children are subjected in these facilities. One out of every five children under age 6 who enter the foster care system—or 135 children each day—are relegated to the group homes for periods of between 2 weeks to 16 months. All of these children are Afro-American or Hispanic and many have a serious medical problem or a disability, such as AIDS, developmental delay, cerebral palsy, and cardiovascular impairments.

Psychologists have emphasized the critical importance of providing intimate and individualized attention to very young children who have been separated from their parents and families to east their emotional trauma and distress; without such care, these children are likely to develop grave psychological problems later in life and may as well experience developmental delays. Yet the city's Child Welfare Administration does not even attempt to provide some semblance of this kind of care and attention to the infants and toddlers it confines in the group homes. Most of the workers in these shelters are untrained, temporary hires who are rotated among the 17 facilities; the 6 children at one home were cared for by no less than 20 different workers over one 11-day period. The children are watched and monitored but are rarely held, spoken to, or played with; in some cases, workers do not even know the children's names.

The physical needs of the children receive little more attention than their emotional needs. Half of the homes have been repeatedly cited for serious fire safety violations, including padlocked fire exits, overcrowding, and nonfunctioning fire extinguishers. Accident hazards abound; safety inspections have noted broken or unsafe cribs, playpens and highchairs, play areas strewn with broken glass, and toxic chemicals stored within easy reach of the children.

Unsanitary diapering practices and improper food handling have made the homes a hotbed of infection and disease. Infectious diarrhea is common. At one facility alone 15 children were striken with diarrhea and had to be hospitalized; 2 of them later died. Inspectors identified unsanitary diapering practices as the cause of the outbreak and called for immediate action to rectify the problem. When they returned months later, however, they found that the practices continued unchanged.

Even the most basic, common sense health practices are ignored. The children were not immunized against some of the most deadly childhood diseases and, in some cases, are not immunized at all or only after they have been in the shelters for several weeks. Though many of the children have serious medical problems, they are not regularly monitored by professional health care providers, leaving all of the responsibility for safeguarding the children's health with the homes' untrained, transient workers. The results have been dangerous and deadly. When one infant was hospitalized with meningitis, no action was taken to examine and protect the other children in the shelter from this highly contagious disease. In another incident, workers failed to recognize that a child had contracted meningitis until it was too late; the child died without having received any appropriate medical care. Had the child been properly immunized when he first entered the foster care system, he would not have become ill at all.

The list of indignities and cruelties goes on and on. Children with disabilities who are not provided with the simple and inexpensive assistive devices they need. Spoiled food and infant formula. Siblings who are separated and sent to different shelters for no apparent reason. Sexually abused children who never receive any specialized medical and psychological care.

These and other horrors detailed by Benker and Rempel are a revelation only to the general public, not to the city officials who are responsible for the group homes. Inexcusable Harm is based largely upon inspection reports and internal memoranda from the Child Welfare Administration and the Department of Health; in these documents the same abuses and deficiencies are reported over and over, month after month, year after year, without prompting any meaningful corrective action. What becomes clear is that the vile conditions in the group homes are not some tragic error, nor the result of gross bureaucratic ineptitude; they are instead the product of political decisions consciously made at the highest levels of city government.

Far more disturbing than the abominable conditions in the group shelters is the fact they exist at all. There is general recognition among child development experts that, even when they are properly maintained, group homes are simply not suitable environments for raising and caring for young children. This is why they were abolished in New York City more than 10 years ago. A new emphasis was made on prevention services to keep families together and more intensive efforts to identify family placements for foster care children were initiated. The group homes were shut down and remained closed for a time. But then the commitment to the reforms of the 1970's began to unravel. Slowly, quietly, the Koch administration began to revive the group homes, becoming increasingly more and more dependent upon them to manage the foster care caseload.

As with the conditions inside the homes, there was nothing inevitable or accidental about the revival of group foster care homes; this, too, was a conscious political choice.

The Koch administration did not choose to reopen the group homes because they were less expensive than placements with individual families. On the contrary, group shelters cost considerably more—as much as $60,000 to $100,000 per child each year versus the $10,000 annual cost per child for a family placement.

Nor did the Koch administration decide to reopen the group homes because there was an insufficient number of family placements available. In fact, many New Yorkers were eager and willing to provide loving homes for these children, but the Koch administration did not want them. Inexcusable Harm reveals that the recuitment of foster care families was made the lowest possible priority. The names of hundreds of families who had called the city's hotline to express interest in becoming a foster family were lost; hundreds more were so illegibly recorded that they were worthless. The average response time to inquiries from families whose names were neither lost nor illegible was an incredible 6 months. Those families who somehow made it over these hurdles were confronted with still more obstacles and roadblocks. Orientation meetings held in inconvenient locations. Combative and uncooperative caseworkers. No help in locating child care and other support services needed by the children. And on and on. There could have been real, loving homes for these children. But the city seemed determined to do everything it could to prevent that from happening.

If not for financial reasons, if not because there were no family placements available, then why did the Koch administration reopen the group homes?

Because it was the most convenient alternative, the simplest, fastest, and most expedient way for the city to dispose of these children. Dispose is the only word for it. These frightened, vulnerable children were treated as if they were some peculiar kind of solid waste to be gotten rid of or at least to be gotten out of sight. In a deposition cited by Benker and Rempel, one of the chief political appointees responsible for the foster care program freely admits that the children could have been placed with individual families—there was a backlog of names of interested families—but that he just did not care to make that effort. It would have been inconvenient, more complicated than simply packing the children into group homes. He goes on to indicate that he wants to open additional group homes but that the State department of social services has stood in the way. The State, he complains, stubbornly insists on viewing the group homes as a temporary, stop-gap measure and not as the permanent solution he believes it should be. Or maybe, given the disgusting conditions of the homes, the final solution is what he really meant to say.

The brutality to which these vulnerable and all too powerless children are subjected is inexcusable; it is an atrocity. As Dr. Benker and Mr. Rempel note in their conclusion:

> Clearly, we are permitting two entirely different standards of justice. When parents act in a manner to harm or risk harm to their children, they are charged with abuse and neglect. But when government officials persistently, willfully, and unnecessarily harm children by forcing them to endure emotionally painful and physically dangerous confinement in shelters, these officials are not held accountable. Until we refuse to allow such behavior, these public officials will continue to act as if they believe that minority foster children are so unimportant as to be beyond the interest of the law and that they themselves are so important as to be above the law.

SENATE—Wednesday, October 11, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 12 noon, on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable CHARLES S. ROBB, a Senator from the State of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

This morning I am especially burdened for Mrs. Domenici and Mrs. Ford, both who lost parents last week, and for the son of Ron Kavulick, who is a Reporter of Debates, whose son is experiencing a difficult illness. We commend them to Thee Father.

O Lord, thou hast searched me, and known me, Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thought afar off. Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether.—Psalm 139:1-4.

Omnicient Lord, Thou knowest all things. Mighty God, who "fixes the times and the seasons by Your own authority," the future is as plain to Thee as the past, the end as the beginning. Our lives are an open book to Thee. From Thee we have no secrets. When we try to hide from Thee, we deceive only ourselves, despite which Thou dost love us with unconditional, everlasting love. Forgive us, Father in Heaven, for ignoring this love, for assuming we can get along without Thee. Teach us the wisdom which gives maximum meaning to life—knowing Thee, seeking Thee, loving Thee, serving Thee.

In Jesus' name whose life was dedicated to this realism. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 11, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable CHARLES S. ROBB, a Senator from the State of Virginia, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ROBB thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this afternoon, following the time for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein. There will be no rollcall votes today.

It is my hope that early tomorrow the Senate will be able to proceed to the legislation providing for assistance to the Nicaraguan election process, legislation which the administration is anxiously seeking approval on, which has been enacted by the House, which I favor, and to which I intend to proceed in the Senate, if possible. Unless prevented from doing so by objection of Senators, we will proceed to that early tomorrow morning.

Upon disposition of that legislation, which I hope will be in a relatively brief period of time, although I understand there may be some amendments offered, it is then my intention to proceed to the reconciliation legislation. As I announced last weekend and have stated publicly on several occasions since then—indeed, on more than one occasion every day this week—we will proceed to the reconciliation legislation tomorrow as soon as we can do so, and we will continue on that matter until completion this week. So Senators should be prepared for lengthy sessions on tomorrow and Friday and, if necessary, although I hope it will not be necessary, on Saturday, to complete action on the reconciliation legislation. The Senate simply must complete action on that legislation prior to the October 15 deadline with respect to sequester, that of course being on Sunday.

So we are going to try to do the Nicaraguan legislation tomorrow, if we can do that, and then either upon completion of that or failure to be able to bring it up because of objection, which I hope will not occur, then proceed to reconciliation and just stay with it until completion.

RESERVATION OF LEADERSHIP TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reserve the remainder of my leader time and the time of the distinguished Republican leader. I now yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The time for both leaders is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will now be a period for morning business. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. I thank the Chair.

GLOBAL CLIMATE CHANGE

Mr. GORE. I rise today to speak on the subject of global climate change. My colleagues may remember that last May there was a controversy in the Senate Commerce Committee over the attempt by the administration to censor the testimony of a scientist who had come to appear before our committee on the subject of global climate change. In his prepared statement that witness told us, or was going to tell us, about the reliability of computer models indicating that global warming will bring with it a relatively more frequent incidence of drought in areas like the middle of the United States of America.

The Office of Management and Budget had used a heavy hand in awkwardly attempting to censor his statement before the committee. This became known publicly and the administration quickly began to backtrack.

As part of their damage control, when that controversy erupted, the administration announced that they were going to call a meeting of countries around the world to discuss global climate change and what to do about it.

We saw, on May 9, the White House announcement of this meeting intended to consider a response to global warming and other environmental problems. Two days later, on the evening of May 11, President Bush sent a cable to the U.S. delegation in Geneva, to a conference then discussing these subjects, instructing them to "make every effort to obtain agreement on a global warming workshop this fall hosted by the United States."

The cable continued that the workshop:

* * * should be designed to identify the scientific, legal, technical, and economic issues critical to further progress on beginning negotiations on an international convention on global climate change. * * * The scope and importance of this issue are so great that it is essential for the U.S. to exercise a leadership role. We should seek to develop full international consensus on necessary steps to prepare for a formal negotiating process.

This again was from the President's cable publicly released in the aftermath of this controversy in the Senate about whether or not the administration was serious in providing leadership on this issue of global climate change.

At that time, I publicly welcomed the announced meeting and the apparent decision by the President to finally begin recognizing the importance of global climate change as the international issue demanding attention.

I welcomed the meeting in spite of the fact that I and others realized at the time the White House was merely taking advantage of the fact that a regular meeting of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change would take place in the fall of 1989 anyway. But I welcomed the elevated attention that the White House was giving to that conference, and the apparent attempt by the President with his own imprimatur on that meeting to have it in Washington, and increase the prominence of the discussions that were held there.

The meeting took place last week and some changes have occurred since last May when the White House press releases were put out. It is now clear that the announcements by the White House in May were principally attempts to relieve the tremendous public, congressional, and media pressure that the White House faced in light of the controversy over the OMB effort to censor the scientist, Jim Hansen.

Over the last 10 months they have begun to downplay the entire issue. Some administration officials have strived to convince the President to allow the United States to play an active role in calling for and in designing a framework convention of the kind referred to in the President's initial cable. But those voices in the administration have not prevailed. What happened after the flurry of press attention in May is that, first, the meeting was moved from Washington to Geneva. Then, after it had been made more prominent they began the effort to make it less prominent. The reports coming out of Geneva indicate that the United States delegation reverted to the original Bush administration line of foot dragging, downplaying the problem, allowing others to provide world leadership, and calling not for action but merely for more research.

Mr. President, more research on the causes of global climate change are needed, but action is also needed, because if we wait until all of the remaining questions have been answered to everyone's satisfaction, it will be too late for meaningful action to do any good.

So I rise today really to note the contrast between the impression which the White House gave last May and the performance that we got in Geneva last week. At that time, in May, they were feeling some heat. They were attempting to demonstrate to the country and to the world that this administration was serious about global climate change, and was intent on providing world leadership to come up with a sensible way to deal with this problem.

Now that so much time has passed, it is obvious that they are not following through on the impression they were so eager to create last May.

I read an article from the Scripps Howard News Service, and I have, I might say, attempted to confirm its contents through staff contacts with individuals who participated in the sessions in Geneva last week. The article, by Robert Engelman says:

The Bush administration will oppose efforts next week by several nations to develop a treaty limiting emissions of the gases that contribute to global warming.

The United States will contend that any such treaty should aim instead at increasing scientific understanding of the greenhouse effect and its likely impacts.

The reporter quotes portions of policy statements contained in a position paper that outlined what the United States intended to do at the meeting in Geneva, and in those discussions, the delegation, in fact, appears to have taken the go-slow approach.

The article goes on—

Privately, administration officials argue that there is still far too much uncertainty about the likelihood of serious warming to justify taking steps that might dampen the U.S. economy.

Mr. President, this is the kind of head-in-the-sand approach that we should avoid. It is the kind of approach the administration was accused of taking last May. Again, they were very eager to dispel the impression that they were guilty as charged back in May, but now we see the discussions taking place. We see the positions adopted. We see the arguments being made. We see the reports of what the administration officials are saying in private, and it is all too obvious that the administration is not providing the kind of leadership we need on this issue.

I really believe, Mr. President, that the Secretary of State understands this issue much better than other officials in the administration.

I really believe that the President of the United States as an individual, if confronted with the evidence, would not take the kind of approach that his administration is insisting upon in these international discussions. But there is a certain momentum in institutions like the State Department and other parts of the executive branch of this Government that is prevailing over the better instincts of individuals in the administration who ought to know better.

It is not the first time that this has happened. Let me give you another example.

Secretary of State Baker, in his first public appearance after taking office as Secretary of State, addressed the same group, the intergovernmental panel on climate change, at the meeting which took place in Washington very early this year. He said:

We can probably not afford to wait until all of the uncertainties have been resolved before we do act. Time will not make the problem go away.

Secretary Baker then went on to specify those issues in need of immediate attention. He said:

We should focus immediately on prudent steps that are already justified on grounds other than climate change. These include reducing CFC emissions, greater energy efficiency, and reforestation.

Well, those were welcome words, but in a meeting which immediately followed the Secretary's remarks, American officials, after the Secretary had left, unveiled a plan to the delegates present at that meeting. Incredibly, the plan, which was presented by officials in the department, did not at all resemble the approach which had just been outlined by the Secretary of State in his formal remarks. Certainly they did not resemble the approach promised by President Bush when he was a candidate before the election, saying 2 months prior to the election: "I am an environmentalist, always have been, and I always will be."

Candidate Bush went on to proclaim, "Those who think we are powerless to do anything about the greenhouse effect are forgetting about the White House effect. As President, I intend to do something about it."

"In my first year in office," Candidate Bush went on to say, "I will convene a global conference on the environment at the White House. The agenda will be clear, and we will act."

These were promises made to the American people about what President Bush would do in response to global climate change. Those promises are being broken right now, even as we meet here today. The first year is not entirely over with, but it is getting close, Mr. President. President Bush has yet to act.

In fact, he has clearly allowed those in his administration who would prefer to ignore the crisis facing the global environment to prevail over those who know better and who understand why it is imperative that this world begin to respond immediately, those who understand that if this world is going to respond to this unprecedented challenge, the leadership must come from the United States of America.

President Bush has not called for a special international conference. He has not even called for a conference among his own policymakers on this subject, as Prime Minister Thatcher did many months ago, and as other world leaders around the world have done.

Earlier this year, just prior to the meeting of the Senate Commerce Committee, which I referred to a few moments ago, the Washington Post reported that major administration officials, including the White House Chief of Staff and officials from the Office of Management and Budget, were actually blocking others in the administration from proposing that our Nation actively support plans for developing a framework convention on global warming, an initiative favored by high ranking officials in the President's own Environmental Protection Agency, and in the State Department. And let me say that Secretary Baker is not the only person in the State Department who I believe personally understands the importance of this issue. Others have supported the call for a global convention on this subject. Some in the White House itself have supported this move. But in spite of that, U.S. delegates to international meetings have been told to only discuss the possibility of a framework convention and to push primarily for further study, without in any way endorsing the need for action.

Mr. President, I really do not think this is adequate. I think that we need to do more, because the latest reports from Geneva, again, indicate that the administration is taking its usual go-slow approach to this issue in not providing the world leadership that we need. How long are we going to tolerate this shell game from the administration on global climate change? We have had a series of bold pronouncements and promises of action, to be followed by a rather timid approach, characterized by some backtracking on issues like this.

I believe we should have a framework convention, and while I intend to elaborate on what I think such a convention should be aimed toward at a later time, I want to briefly say, before I conclude here today, that I think we should proceed immediately to structure a framework convention on global climate change, and do so with great care. Unless it is defined carefully, we could, of course, see the history of other North-South negotiations repeat itself, resulting in a paralysis of who is responsible for what. Unless this convention receives the level of attention appropriate for a threat to our national security—which we all must agree, in my opinion, it most certainly is—then a disastrous outcome could result in which we find that a lack of U.S. leadership could lead to a chaotic standoff in which the nations are too divided to unite in order to deal with the environmental crisis that our planet faces.

Fortunately, if we have the courage to act, there is a fundamental level at which elements of consensus on the threat of global warming are based on the well-accepted scientific information. Therefore, consensus on these elements is easier to secure. At this level we have the following elements: First, global warming is a common threat of the highest magnitude to all nations, capable of threatening the underlying environmental balance upon which international stability depends.

Second, the sources of this problem include increases in greenhouse gas emissions that have resulted from industrial growth and urbanization and decreases in the absorptive capacity of the environment through deforestation in some regions and desertification in others.

Third, corrective actions taken now will reduce the scope of the oncoming threat, while a delay will markedly increase the threat and severity of its consequences. Marginal responses will not be sufficient; an urgent and profound response is needed, and it must be international in scope. It will require nations to take both individual and collective action on two fronts in order to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases radically; and in order to improve the Earth's ability to absorb these effluents through, for example, massive efforts to reforest those portions of the Earth which can be reforested.

Fourth—and this is a key point—we must forge a commitment to the effect that the international planning effort ongoing through the auspices of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change must be designed to look to agreements that are binding commitments upon the governments involved, which freely enter into these agreements, to take both individual and multinational corrective action precisely stipulated as to extent, timing, and costing of the required response.

A key principle of this effort will be the recognition that economic development must be sustained, and in some parts of the world accelerated, but that ways must be found to reconcile this growth with needs for global environmental stability. Thus, we will need additional international work aimed at identifying existing and new technologies for continuing economic growth, without further compromising the environment, with a special emphasis on finding the means for financing the development and transfer of these technologies to the developing world—a global strategic environment initiative, if you will.

Mr. President, the effort to agree to this intention, in the form of a framework convention, should begin at once.

In closing, Mr. President, let me say that I fully realize that a problem like this one, unprecedented as it is, defies the imagination. It is extremely difficult to fully realize and comprehend a problem that is so different from anything that has ever come before us. It is, however, real. We must confront it. We cannot continue to delay.

We were promised, last spring, that this fall would be the time when, at last, the United States would supply the leadership greatly needed by the world to confront this problem. Here we are in the fall. The meeting which had been advertised as the high-profile Washington conference aimed at action has occurred not in Washington but in Geneva, not with a high profile but with a low profile, not aimed at action but aimed at further study.

Mr. President, I personally have confidence in President Bush as an individual, and Secretary Baker as an individual, and they are extremely personable. They are capable of not only understanding the problems fully but of coming up with imaginative responses.

I think there is a tendency to deny the seriousness of this problem I am discussing today, and within the administration thus far there has been a tendency to put its head in the sand and accept the counsel of those within the administration who wish only to delay.

So today I am calling upon the administration to follow through on the promises made last spring, give this issue the attention it deserves, and provide the world the leadership it needs in order to address the problem of global climate change.

I intend in the days ahead to speak further on this subject and to outline exactly what our response should be, in my opinion, and to present further evidence on what our reponse has actually been, and I would characterize that actual response as a disappointment. But there is time for change. There is time for the administration to change its approach and provide the leadership needed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Knoxville News-Sentinel of September 30, 1989, entitled

"U.S. To Oppose Global Warming Treaty."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Knoxville News-Sentinel, Sept. 30, 1989]

U.S. TO OPPOSE GLOBAL WARMING TREATY

(By Robert Engelman)

WASHINGTON.—The Bush administration will oppose efforts next week by several nations to develop a treaty limiting emissions of the gases that contribute to global warming.

The United States will contend that any such treaty should aim instead at increasing scientific understanding of the "greenhouse effect" and its likely impacts. A second aim would be "protecting social, environmental and economic well-being from adverse impacts likely to result from climate change."

The policy statements are contained in a position paper prepared by the State Department for an international meeting on global warming that begins Monday in Geneva. A copy of portions of the paper was obtained Friday by Scripps Howard News Service.

The statement did not categorically rule out later treaty amendments aimed at curbing global warming, however.

Environmentalists charged this week that the Bush administration was reneging on the president's own promises to act decisively on global warming. In the economic summit in Paris in July, Bush and the leaders of six other industrial nations said they "strongly advocate common efforts to limit emissions of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases, which threaten to induce climate change."

Speaking before the United Nations General Assembly on Monday, Bush promised "the United States will do its part" to preserve the global environment. The nation emits about 23 percent of the carbon dioxide that is the single most important greenhouse gas.

Privately, administration officials argue that there is still far too much uncertainty about the likelihood of serious warming to justify taking steps that might dampen the U.S. economy.

Scientists predict a warming of several degrees will become evident within decades—and possibly in the 1990s—from such heat-trapping gases added to the atmosphere by human beings. Computer models suggest such a warming would intensify droughts and storms and could cause sea levels to rise.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I see the Republican leader on the floor. I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Republican leader, Senator DOLE.

JUSTICE, NAMIBIAN STYLE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to bring to the attention of the Senate, the American media, and the American people a legal outrage being perpetrated against an American journalist in Namibia, in southern Africa.

Scott Stanley, editor of the Conservative Digest—who happens to be a friend of mine—went to Namibia earlier this week, to testify on behalf of Namibian defendants in a trial there.

The defendants were arrested because they reprinted an article Scott wrote here in this country, based on an interview Scott had conducted with a Mr. Brian O'Linn—chairman of a governmental body called the Namibian Commission for the Prevention and Combating of Intimidation and Election Malpractices.

Mr. O'Linn—apparently a very powerful man in Namibia—took offense at Scott's article; had the newspaperman who reprinted it in Namibia arrested; and, when Scott showed up to testify in their behalf, had him arrested, too.

Scott now finds himself one of the defendants in the trial in which he originally was to be a witness.

He now finds himself in jeopardy of up to 2 years in jail and/or a big fine in Namibia, because of a perfectly legitimate article he wrote weeks ago, in the United States.

And, most outrageous of all, he finds himself not even being charged for false reporting—but for holding Mr. O'Linn up to ridicule.

Mr. President, no one has to hold this whole process up to ridicule: It is ridiculous on its face—or at least would be, if the safety and freedom of an American citizen was not at stake.

Mr. President, Scott went to Namibia because of his concern about the principle of a free press. In defending that principle, he now finds himself no longer a free man.

I hope all Senators—and equally important—all the members of media—will take a very careful look at Scott's dilemma; and will speak out very strongly on behalf of the principle of a free press, and Scott Stanley's basic human rights.

FELDSTEIN OP-ED ON THE SOVIET ECONOMY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have recently received a letter from Martin Feldstein, former Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, enclosing a copy of an op-ed he wrote for the Wall Street Journal.

The op-ed—entitled "Back in the U.S.S.R. as the Storm Clouds Gather"—ran in the Journal on September 14. I will ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD the full text of the op-ed.

Mr. President, this op-ed has a sobering message, which can be summed up in the brief opening paragraph:

My second visit to the Soviet Union within 6 months left two very clear and disturbing impressions. First, the Soviet economy is on the verge of collapse; and second, in the current political environment, the economic deterioration cannot continue for long without provoking some sharp political change.

Mr. President, those are very tough words, and Feldstein backs them up in the op-ed with some provocative observations—and some prescriptions for how Gorbachev can get himself out of a very tight box.

The op-ed reinforces my view that, as important as the political developments inside the Soviet Union are, we may be focusing too much on them—while giving too little attention to the economic crisis that Feldstein describes, which could ultimately turn out to be the decisive factor in shaping the Soviet future.

Mr. President, I commend this op-ed to the attention of all Senators and all Americans. It is must reading. I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 14, 1989]

BACK IN THE U.S.S.R. AS THE STORM CLOUDS GATHER

(By Martin Feldstein)

My second visit to the Soviet Union within six months left two very clear and disturbing impressions. First, the Soviet economy is on the verge of collapse. And, second, in the current political environment, the economic deterioration cannot continue for long without provoking a sharp political change.

Ironically, the recent political reforms are making it particularly hard for the Soviets to achieve the economic reforms that they need. And yet it is the new political freedoms that will permit the public to hold the political leadership accountable for the economy's abysmal performance. The Soviet Union's inability to reconcile economic reform and political freedom could cause a repressive political swing to the right in which both will be lost.

The increasing shortages of consumer goods—both a symptom and a cause of the worsening economic situation—are destroying the already poor system of distribution. Leningrad has had to issue ration coupons for soap, sugar and salt. Many basic goods are no longer available to all. And although consumer durables have extremely high official prices, especially relative to Soviet wages, they too have generally disappeared from the shelves.

BLACK MARKETS

The rise of nationalism is also contributing to the economic breakdown. The Baltic states and other Soviet republics are preventing the shipment of locally made products to other parts of the Soviet Union and denying Soviet citizens who are not local residents the right to buy things in their stores. The Moscow government has retaliated by announcing that Soviet citizens from other republics who visit Moscow may not buy consumer durables, imported products and other desirable goods that may happen to be available.

This disintegration of the regular market in consumer goods encourages black markets and widespread corruption. The Soviets readily acknowledge that retailers and others involved in the distribution system help themselves to consumer goods that can be sold on the black market for much more than official prices or, better yet, for dollars or other hard currency.

The combination of shortages and of rapidly rising prices for the limited range of goods for which price increases are permitted is destroying the value of the ruble. Although it is illegal for Soviets to trade rubles for foreign currency, this trading has become blatant. The official exchange rate is $1.60, while the rate on the street is only 10 to 20 cents a ruble.

A primary cause of the shortages and price rises is the government budget deficit, now estimated at more than 10% of gross national product. Although a deficit need not be inflationary if it is financed by issuing bonds that crowd out private spending, the Soviets do not issue bonds but finance their deficits by adding to the cash in the hands of Soviet workers. In a Western economy, such an excess infusion of cash would cause prices to rise. Soviet experts privately estimate their inflation rate at nearly 10% even though most prices are not allowed to rise. And with only a limited number of prices free to increase, the excess cash chasing a limited supply of goods causes shortages.

The fear of future inflation encourages people to spend their savings before the ruble's purchasing power decreases even further. With the interest rate limited to only 3%, any kind of good that can be stored for future use is a better investment than money in the bank.

But the shortages reflect declines in production as well as increases in demand. One cause of the reduced output is the new system of factory management in which managers are elected by the workers and have some discretion over pay and work requirements. Without the discipline from owners or creditors, managers have raised wages and met production quotas by accounting gimmicks. In addition, workers and farmers whose income is related to their own effort frequently have cut back because the rubles that they would earn by extra effort are of such limited value.

What is needed to rescue the Soviet economy is a radical reform of the price-setting process and a move toward a much more market-oriented economy. Mr. Gorbachev's economic advisers recognized that two years ago but have now abandoned those proposed reforms because they fear that price decontrol would lead to skyrocketing inflation. Such inflation is politically unacceptable in a nation where Lenin's promise of price stability has been repeated for more than 70 years. Moreover, since Soviets do not own shares or homes or other assets that would preserve their value during inflation, a rapid inflation would wipe out the life savings of every Soviet citizen—hardly a propitious start for a government that wants to develop confidence in capitalist ways!

The prerequisite to price decontrol and the establishment of a market economy is therefore appropriate anti-inflationary macroeconomic policies. First, the excess infusion of cash by the budget deficit must be stopped. Soviet officials acknowledge this and say that they will cut the budgetary money growth in half during the next year by a combination of reduced defense outlays, increased revenue from the sale of imported consumer goods, and the use of bond finance. But eliminating a budget deficit of 10% of GNP will not be possible without raising taxes, cutting subsidies or reducing the already low standard of public services. Any such painful changes will inevitably be criticized in the press and reflected in votes against Communist Party candidates in contestable elections.

Even more important than deficit reduction is raising the interest rate that households receive on their bank deposits. That rate must be high enough so that households will want to leave their past savings in the bank when prices are decontrolled, rather than spending them and thereby bidding up the prices of available goods. At a minimum, that is likely to require an interest rate that exceeds the inflation rate, a substantial rise from the current token rate of interest. Such a rise in interest payments would be unpopular with a Soviet public raised on the communist ideology that all capital income is unfair. Moreover, since the ownership of savings is highly concentrated, paying higher interest rates would conflict with the egalitarian standard of fairness that the Soviet public has come to accept.

Popular opposition to economic reform extends not only to the policies required to prevent inflation but to the basic market reforms themselves. While most Soviet economists continue to recognize the necessity of price decontrol and movement toward a market economy, they report that these notions are not supported by the mass of Soviet people.

Soviet citizens want a higher standard of living but do not see how that will follow from market forces. Instead they see price reform as eliminating the subsidies on bread and rent and adding to a general price inflation that would lower their already low standard of living. And they understand that with fewer regulations some individuals will become much richer than others, in sharp conflict with their values. With democratization, such popular opposition inevitably increases the political reluctance to act decisively.

SOME POSSIBILITIES

The deteriorating economic conditions make the continuation of current policies very unlikely. One possibility is that the leadership will accept the political risks of adopting radical reforms that simultaneously contain inflationary pressures and move toward a market economy. Or, Mr. Gorbachev might lose power to a politician prepared to adopt the needed reforms.

But there is a darker possibility. The Soviet public and many of those in government or military circles may conclude that inflation, shortages, strikes and corruption are all evidence that the Gorbachev government is too weak. They may yearn for a government that can bring back price stability, crack down on black marketeers and stop the nationalist political movements. Such a political change could spell the end of economic perestroika and of political liberalization. The very fear of such a political ouster might make Mr. Gorbachev and his colleagues adopt a tougher, less reform-oriented stance themselves.

Those of us who want to see an increase in pluralism, democracy and market forces in the Soviet Union can only hope that the current government will have the courage to adopt the needed reforms before it is too late.

NOMINATION OF DAVID GEORGE BALL TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF LABOR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish to comment on the nomination of David George Ball, of Connecticut, to be an Assistant Secretary of Labor. It was my understanding that that nomination has been cleared on all sides and is ready to go the last time we were in session.

I hope we could resolve any last-minute snags on the nomination. It has been pending for some time. I hope we could confirm that nominee today. He is a very vital member of the Department of Labor and I know the Secretary of Labor very much would like to have him on board.

RECONCILIATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the majority leader has indicated he would like to start reconciliation tomorrow and I certainly have no quarrel with that. We have been in discussions the past several days, Republicans and Democrats. Yesterday the House leadership, Congressman FOLEY and Congressman MICHEL, and myself and the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, discussed a number of topics including reconciliation. That was the primary purpose of the meeting.

I am not certain what the attitude may be on the House side as far as stripping extraneous provisions from reconciliation. It is more difficult for the House since they have already passed their bill.

It is rather difficult now to say, "Well, we ought to go back an undo some of it and strip all the extraneous provisions."

As the majority leader has indicated, there is I think fairly strong bipartisan support in the Senate to support and enforce the Byrd rule where we can. And much of that hopefully can be done prior to considering the reconciliation package on the Senate floor, to expedite certain consideration of reconciliation and also expedite, I would hope, the conference.

It would seem to me that the House would be under some pressure to reciprocate if in fact we did do what we should do on the Senate side and strike out, remove, whatever, delete a lot of the extraneous provisions that have no place on the reconciliation bill.

But there is still one area on which we have not agreed and that is whether we are going to do anything with capital gains. I must say the Republicans have made three proposals. We have as yet to receive a counterproposal from the Democrats on this particular matter. We offered three different ways to reach some solution to make certain that the President's capital gains program would have a vote, and so far we are still waiting for some response. Hopefully that will come today. If so, we may be able to work it out and that would expedite the process considerably.

There has been some indication that the statement by the White House press spokesman may have complicated matters. As far as I know, I know

Mr. Fitzwater has not been part of the negotiations. He has not been up here at all and certainly has not complicated matters at all.

I know there are big stories today in the Washington Post. I do not believe it was of that much importance but the problem is we have not gotten any counteroffers. It is not Mr. Fitzwater. It is the fact that the Democrats have not come forth and not indicated what they are willing to do. Unless there is some willingness to negotiate, to compromise, then I would guess we are not going to have agreement.

I would say, as I said last evening, we are prepared to negotiate. The White House is not complicating matters. If Mr. Fitzwater made an error then so be it. But he is not part of the negotiations and has not been.

I have been consulting on a daily basis with OMB Director, Mr. Darman, and Treasury Secretary, Mr. Brady. They are involved in the process.

I would be very happy to meet with Democrats at their request, at their convenience, either with Republicans or without Republicans. And it is my view that we should be able to come to some agreement on handling this matter.

It complicates it a little when the Democratic staff of the Budget Committee puts out press releases at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in fact characterizing what is happening in these private negotiations. It was also my view that these were private negotiations; we were not supposed to carry it to the press. It is still my view. I would hope they might desist from editorial comments and so-called factsheets that have been distributed to the press.

The point is we are certainly willing to negotiate. Capital gains has broad bipartisan support in this body; no doubt about it. I think probably 15 or 20 Democrats would like to vote for some capital gains provision. And I would guess that probably 43, 44, or 45 Republicans also share that view. We do not believe we should be foreclosed from that opportunity.

It is good policy. We believe now that the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], has announced a plan I understand many Democrats support. There has been a plan announced by the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], that many Republicans support, that we have again a possibility of working out a compromise that would have widespread support on both sides of the aisle.

It would seem to me that there is an interest. There should be some way to package capital gains, IRA's, whatever, in an effort to satisfy those on both sides, so that everyone is treated fairly. So I just hope we can conclude some agreement. But it is pretty hard to have an agreement unless you have offers and counteroffers, and we are still waiting for the first counteroffer.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the remainder of the Republican leader's time is reserved.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to request that my colleagues take note of the fact that today is the 1,670th day that Terry Anderson has been held captive in Beirut.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I understand the majority leader wishes that we recess until 2 o'clock and I so move that we stand in recess until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The motion was agreed to and the Senate, at 12:38 p.m., recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to by the Presiding Officer [Mr. MITCHELL].

RECESS UNTIL 4 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from Maine, asks unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 4 p.m.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:01 p.m., recessed until 4:01 p.m.; whereupon the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. DECONCINI].

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is still in morning business.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECONCILIATION

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, on May 15, Congress adopted a budget resolution that directed the eight Senate committees to recommend changes in laws within their jurisdictions that would reduce the deficit.

I am pleased to report that these eight committees have now acted.

Under the Congressional Budget Act, the job of the Budget Committee is clear. Section 310(b) of the Budget Act provides:

The Committee on the Budget * * * upon receiving all such recommendations, shall report to its House reconciliation legislation carrying out such recommendations without any substantive revision.

The Budget Committee will meet tomorrow morning to report that legislation.

The Budget Committee received the last committee's submission late last week.

The Budget Act states that the Budget Committee must report "Without any substantive revision." That being the case, barring modification by the reporting committees, the submissions that we have received to date will in all probability be the same as the reconciliation bill that the Senate will consider on tomorrow.

As we try our best to complete reconciliation expeditiously in the face of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deadline date of October 15, we need to facilitate consideration of the reconciliation bill on the Senate floor without any unnecessary delay.

Consequently, for the convenience of Senators, staff, and observers of Congress, I will submit to the desk a summary of the reconciliation submissions that the Budget Committee has received.

So that all may have a fair opportunity to review this material during the consideration of the reconciliation bill tomorrow and Friday, I ask unanimous consent that these materials be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF THE SENATE-REPORTED BUDGET RECONCILIATION BILL FOR FISCAL YEAR 1990

(Senate Budget Committee, October 12, 1989)

The 1990 Budget Resolution provides for deficit reduction of $27.7 billion in 1990; $13.8 billion of this total is assumed from reconciled changes in entitlement or mandatory programs. The Senate Budget Committee is charged under the Congressional Budget Act with packaging all reconciliation legislation into one bill for consideration by the full Senate.

The budget resolution included reconciliation instructions to eight Senate Committees. All eight Committees have either met or exceeded their savings directives for 1990. The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimate of deficit savings for these committees totals $14.1 billion.

This summary provides a brief description of the major provisions in the Senate-reported reconciliation bill. The attached table shows the savings achieved by each authorizing committee and for major provisions within each title.

TITLE I—AGRICULTURE

Increase the Cotton Acreage Reduction Program (ARP) for 1990 Crop

Provides the Secretary with the authority to increase the ARP percentage from 25 percent to 30 percent if the 1990 ending stocks for the upland cotton crop are estimated to be above 7 million bales. Savings of $45 million in 1990 will result due to a reduction in acreage eligible for deficiency payments and a resulting increase in cotton prices.

Reduce Advance Deficiency Payments

Reduces 1990 crop deficiency payments for corn and other feed grains, wheat, upland cotton and rice by approximately 3 percent. The reduction will be applied against any advance deficiency payment made available to producers of 1990 crops, thus ensuring that the savings occur in 1990. Savings from this provision total $235 million in 1990.

Reduce Export Enhancement Program Expenditures by $150 million

Limits the EEP spending in 1990 to $650 million in budget authority saving $108 million in outlays in 1990.

Reduce Targeted Export Assistance Funding by $100 million

Lowers TEA expenditures by $100 million resulting in outlay savings of $40 million in 1990.

Mandate the Oilseed Planting Program

Extends provisions in the Disaster Assistance Act which will result in fewer deficiency payments and loans made on program crop acreage. Under this provision, producers would switch approximately 1 million acres from corn to beans, thus raising corn prices and reducing deficiency payments. This provision saves $116 million in 1990.

REA Loan Refinance Penalty

Allows Rural Electrification Administration (REA) cooperatives two options to reduce rates on long-term loans with the Federal Financing Bank (FFB). First, the provision would waive existing prepayment penalties and allow cooperatives to prepay high interest rate loans with Federally-guaranteed private financing. Second, it requires the FFB to reduce interest rates on REA loans at the borrower's request and assesses a penalty in exchange for this interest rate write-down. While this penalty would result in approximately $30 million in savings in 1990, the loss to the Federal government over the five year period, 1990 through 1994, totals $278 million.

Delay Effective Date of Bumpers-Pryor Amendment

Delays the effective date of the Bumpers-Pryor Amendment until January 1, 1993, saving $420 million in 1990. Until that date, the Financial Assistance Board will make annual interest payments to member institutions on the amount those institutions would have been refunded under the original amendment.

Creation of New Commodity Promotion Programs

Creates new commodity promotion programs and revises existing programs and marketing orders. Commodities covered include: potatoes, mushrooms, soybeans, limes, cotton, honey, kiwis, nectarines, plums, pecans, papayas, eggs, peanuts and Vidalia onions. The Secretary of Agriculture has some responsibility for start-up of the programs. This provision is estimated to cost $500,000 in 1990.

Adjustment of Purchase Price for Butter and Non-Fat Dry Milk

Allows the Secretary of Agriculture to adjust the prices that the Commodity Credit Corporation pays for the purchase of butter and non-fat dry milk under the price support program. Currently, the supply of butter in the U.S. outstrips demand, while demand for non-fat dry milk is greater than supply. This provision saves $20 million in 1990.

Miscellaneous Provisions

Other language provides for the modification of the current risk level used in calculating insurance premiums for FCS bonds, oat acreage limitation, Farm Bill technical changes, amendments to the Disaster Assistance Act, promotion of beef in U.S. commissaries, prohibitions on duty drawbacks and research in new products derived from plants.

TITLE II—BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

National Flood Insurance Programs

Reauthorizes the existing National Flood Insurance Program through the end of fiscal year 1991. Under current law, the program is scheduled to expire at the end of 1989. The reauthorization and extension of this program will result in additional premium income that will outweigh claims paid under the program through fiscal year 1991. This provision increases receipts relative to the baseline by $189 million in 1990.

TITLE III—COMMERCE, SCIENCE AND TRANSPORTATION

FCC User Fees

Raises existing fees and penalties charged by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to offset the costs of FCC regulatory activities. Under the legislation, the FCC would also establish new fees for certain categories of users including amateur radio operators, ship stations, and mobile radio facilities. In total, these fees and fines are expected to generate $43 million in additional receipts for the government annually.

Airport Slot Fees

Authorizes the Federal Aviation Administration to charge a fee for airport slots held by commercial carriers at high density traffic airports (National, O'Hare, Kennedy and LaGuardia). These fees will be set at a rate which reasonably reflects the value of each slot to the holder and the total of the fees collected shall equal at least $239 million in 1990.

Coast Guard User Fees

Directs the Coast Guard to establish a system for collecting $50 million in 1990 in receipts from users of Coast Guard services. Included in this fee system will be collections from the sale of stamps which entitle bearers to services without charge and fees charged to users of services who have not purchased stamps.

International Departure Fees

Commercial Aviation Fee: Authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to collect a fee of $3.00 per passenger on commercial aircraft departing the United States. These receipts will be deposited into the general fund and designated as offsetting receipts to those DoT activities which involve the monitoring and regulation of international air operations, such as aviation security and safety inspections. Receipts are expected to total $111 million in 1990.

Passenger Vessel Fee: Imposes a fee of $3.00 per passenger on cruise ships (with certain exceptions) during 1990. Two-thirds of the receipts will be deposited in the Harbor Maintenance Trust Fund and one-third will be designated as offsetting receipts to Coast Guard activities. Generates $19 million in 1990 receipts.

TITLE IV—ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS

Atmospheric Pollution Fees

Imposes fees on the production, importation, or distribution of ozone-depleting chemicals for which EPA has established production quotas to comply with the Montreal Protocol. Generates receipts of $455 million in 1990.

Directs that fees be placed in a trust fund from which up to $100 million may be appropriated for research grants to develop substitutes for ozone-depleting chemicals and the balance for support of EPA regulatory activities under the Montreal Protocol and this title. Authorizes interest from the trust fund to be appropriated for support of other EPA research and pollution abatement activities.

Establishes an expanded regulatory program for all chemicals with ozone-depleting potential. Mandates emission controls and an end to production of the most harmful chemicals by the year 2000. Requires EPA to conduct a comprehensive assessment of methane pollution problems.

Nuclear Regulatory Commission User Fees

Directs the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to increase charges to licensees for 1990 to recover 45 percent rather than 33 percent of its costs. Provides $54 million of receipts in 1990.

Authorizes NRC to reduce civil penalties by amounts donated to educational institutions for radiological health and safety programs.

Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund

Reinstates collection of the 3 cents per barrel fee on oil produced on the Outer Continental Shelf until the balance of fees deposited in the Offshore Oil Pollution Compensation Fund reaches $200 million. Generates $9 million in revenues in 1990.

Other Provisions

Authorizes EPA to hold a management conference and to provide grants for the restoration of Onondaga Lake (New York). Authorizes the Corps of Engineers to construct a pilot high-speed magnetic levitation ground transportation system.

TITLE V—NON-REVENUE PROVISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Medicare and Medicaid

Produces net outlay savings in the Medicare and Medicaid programs of $3.0 billion in 1990 and $13.1 billion over the five year period, 1990 through 1994.

Medicare savings are $3.1 billion in 1990, $15.9 billion over five years. Included is an expenditure of $0.2 billion for a rural health initiative ($0.9 billion over five years). Medicare savings are also offset by $0.1 billion net in Medicaid expenditures in 1990 ($2.7 billion over five years), including a child health initiative.

Medicare Savings Provisions

Reduces Medicare payments to hospitals for indirect medical education by 1.1 percent and for capital expenses by 5 percent. The hospital inflation update for services would be slightly below inflation for urban hospitals and 2 percent above inflation for rural hospitals. Hospital outpatient payments would be reduced by 2 percent. These provisions save $1.4 billion in 1990.

Increases in physician fees would be frozen for one year for most physicians with a three month freeze for physicians providing primary care services. Reductions would be made in certain surgical and other specialties. These provisions save $1.0 billion in 1990.

Physician payment reform provisions would phase in, beginning in 1991, a new system for determining physician fees based on a relative value system, and implement Congressionally-determined annual volume performance standards. This reform is projected to result in net savings of $0.9 billion per year by 1994.

Increases in payments for medical equipment and laboratory services would be limited to 2 percent, the current-law requirement that Part B premiums be set to cover 25 percent of program costs would be extended for one year, Medicare payment cycles would be reduced by two days, and collections from other insurers would be enhanced. Savings in 1990 from these provisions total $1.4 billion.

Protections For Rural Hospitals

Provides several Medicare protections for rural hospitals, including expansion of sole community hospital and regional referral center designations and additional reimbursement for nurse practitioners, at a 1990 cost of $0.2 billion. Authorizes additional rural assistance programs.

Child Health

Expands Medicaid coverage for low-income women and children costing $0.2 billion in 1990. Included are mandated State coverage for pregnant women and infants up to 130 percent of the poverty level and for children up to age six. States would be given the option to cover children up to age 19 to 100 percent of the poverty level. Also reauthorizes the Maternal and Child Health block grant.

Other Provisions

Miscellaneous Medicaid provisions produce net savings of $0.1 billion in 1990. Several other provisions affecting Medicare providers are included at a 1990 cost of $0.4 billion.

Supplemental Security Income (SSI)

Establishes Commission on Child Disability, expands required review of childhood disability denials and establishes outreach program for disabled children. Allows certain disabled children living at home to receive $30 monthly payment regardless of parent's income. Extends SSI eligibility to disabled children of service personnel abroad. Considers royalties received by SSI beneficiaries to be earned income rather than unearned income. Permits SSI benefits for individuals who lose disability insurance benefits due to work activity. Excludes impairment-related work expenses from determining SSI eligibility.

Also authorizes reimbursement for vocational rehabilitation services during certain months of nonpayment and SSI benefits. Disregards the value of transportation tickets given to SSI recipients as gifts. Excludes the counting of interest on burial spaces in determining SSI eligibility. Reduces the time during which income and resources of separated couples must be treated as jointly available. Allows SSA to take concurrent applications for the SSI and food stamp programs. Changes the valuation of certain in-kind support and maintenance. Excludes Agent Orange settlement payments in determining eligibility for means-tested programs.

Child Welfare and Foster Care

Requires study of foster care State administrative costs; increases authorization for child welfare services program; extends current law State authorization for transfer of unused foster care funds to child welfare services; increases federal matching rate for training of foster care and adoptive parents; extends authorization for independent living program, provides for enhanced data collection.

Unemployment Compensation

Eliminates requirement that states repay the costs of self-employment demonstration projects. Allows unemployment benefits to be reduced by the amount an individual may owe unpaid unemployment taxes.

Child Support Enforcement

Extends IRS authority to collect child support arrearages from tax refunds on behalf of non-welfare families. Allows states to use IRS offset for non-AFDC families when arrearage is under $500. Allows IRS tax offset to collect past due spousal support for non-AFDC families. Permits a parent to refuse cooperation with a child support agency vis-a-vis transitional child care benefits if "good cause" is established.

Finance Committee Amendment (Not Included in Reported Bill)

Social Security

Makes Social Security an independent agency run by a single Commissioner and a nine-member part-time Advisory Board. Also increases the earnings exemption limit for Social Security retirees aged 65–69. Increases the Social Security "contribution and benefit base" by $900 in 1990 to take into account certain deferred compensation payments and extends for one year the option to have disability benefits paid while an appeal is pending before an administrative law judge. Provides benefits to adopted children of beneficiaries regardless of whether the adoption occurred prior to the worker's entitlement to benefits. Enhances the opportunity for disabled beneficiaries to test their ability to work without affecting their entitlement to disability benefits and makes other miscellaneous changes.

Provisions Affecting Both Social Security and Supplemental Security Income

Expands requirements relating to representative payees who receive Social Security and/or SSI benefits on behalf of entitled individuals. Allows continuation of benefits to beneficiaries who medically recover while participating in a vocational rehabilitation program. Authorizes demonstration projections at 3 telephone service centers to monitor SSA accountability procedures. Sets standards for determining good cause or good faith by individuals who fail to report information to SSA. Sets up program to identify homeless individuals who may qualify for benefits. Requires SSA to expand notice requirements and inform claimants of available legal representation. Reforms appeal procedures, allows benefits in spite of SSA misinformation, requires same-day interviews in cases of personal urgency, and changes SSA review procedures of attorneys' fees

TITLE VI—REVENUE PROVISIONS

Repeal Financial Institution (FSLIC & FDIC) Tax Benefits

Accomplished in PL 101-73 raising $568 million in 1990, and $1.5 billion over five years

Corporate Provisions

Limits corporate preferences raising $713 million in 1990, and $5.2 billion over five years.

Employee Benefit Provisions

Limits the partial exclusion of interest paid on Employee Stock Ownership Loans and permits limited use of excess pension funds to pay current retiree health benefits, raising $1.7 billion in 1990 and $11 billion over five years.

Foreign Tax Provisions

Amends certain tax provisions affecting foreign corporations and U.S. subsidiaries, raising $123 million in 1990 and $874 million over five years.

Excise Tax Provisions

Imposes or raises excise taxes, raising $1.6 billion in 1990 and $13.3 billion over five years. Includes repeal of Airport and Airway Trust Fund tax trigger, increase in international airline departure tax, excise tax on certain ozone-depleting chemicals, and excise tax on international departures by commercial ships.

Accounting Tax Provisions

Repeals the remaining portion of completed contract method of accounting and modifies treatment of cost of acquiring franchises, trademarks, and trade names, raising $222 million in 1990 and $1.6 billion over five years.

Employment Tax Provisions

Imposes income tax withholding on the wages of certain agricultural workers and speeds up payroll deposits raising $2.6 billion in 1990 and $3.4 billion over five years.

Other Revenue-Raising Provisions

Imposes tax on pre-contribution gain for certain in-kind partnership distributions and restricts like-kind basis shifting techniques raising $106 million in 1990 and $714 million over five years.

Other Provisions Adopted by the Committee

Adds miscellaneous amendments to the committee bill losing $98 million in 1990 and $1.2 billion over five years.

Expiring Provisions

Extends the expiration date of certain tax provisions which have expired or are scheduled to expire losing $1.8 billion in 1990 and $12.8 billion over five years.

Child Care Initiative and Telephone Excise Tax

Adopts the child care provisions accepted by the Senate in S. 5 with an effective date modification. Includes EITC supplemental, child health insurance credit and refundability of the dependent care credit, losing $160 million in 1991 and $8.4 billion over four years.

Offsets expense of child care by extending permanently the telephone excise tax credit, modifies the telephone excise tax collection period, and requires estimated tax payments on corporate Subchapter S income, raising a total of $127 million in 1990 and $10.6 billion over five years.

Individual Retirement Accounts

Allows 50 percent deductibility of contributions to IRAs effective January 31, 1991, and allows penalty-free withdrawal for purchase of first time homes and education expenses effective January 1, 1990. Maintains full deductibility for those eligible under current law. Loses $192 million in 1990 and $12.7 billion over five years.

Other Provisions

Contains several miscellaneous tax provisions including repeal of Section 89 and makes technical corrections, losing $430 million in 1990 and $4.7 billion over five years.

TITLE VII—GOVERNMENT AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Postal Service Reforms

Places the United States Postal Service "off-budget" by excluding its receipts and disbursements from the totals in the President's Budget, the Congressional Budget Resolution, and the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985. Exempts the Postal Service from sequestration.

Requires the Postal Service to: (1) make a one-time deposit of $400 million into the Civil Service Retirement Fund (CSRS) in 1990; (2) pay additional sums to the CSRS to cover post-October 1990 annuitants' cost-of-living adjustments; and (3) contribute funds to the Federal employees health benefits fund to pay health benefits to survivors of former Postal Service employees who died on or after October 1, 1986.

Lump-Sum Changes

Changes the formula under which Federal employees can receive their own retirement contributions as a lump-sum payment upon retirement. In 1990, retirees would receive two lump-sum installments, 50 percent upon retirement and the remaining 50 percent one-year after retirement. The current 60 percent/40 percent formula has been temporarily extended until December 3, 1989. Saves $700 million in 1990.

TITLE VIII—LABOR AND HUMAN RESOURCES

Pension Asset Reversions

Discourages the practice of pension asset reversions by limiting the amount of surplus assets an employer can recoup upon terminating a defined benefit pension plan. The amount of assets reverting to the employer is conditioned upon what, if any, replacement pension plan is established for employees. Allows employers with qualified, well-funded pension plans to transfer surplus amounts in excess of 150 percent of accrued liability to a trust account to pay for health benefits of previously retired employees.

MSHA Penalties

Triples the maximum penalty that can be imposed by the Mine Safety and Health Administration (MSHA) for violation of mandatory health and safety standards. Increases revenues by $30 million in 1990.

OSHA Penalties

Increases by five times the maximum penalties that can be imposed by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) for willful and repeated violations of safety and health standards. Establishes mandatory minimum penalties to be assessed by OSHA to reflect the seriousness of violations. Increases revenues by $65 million in 1990.

ERISA Penalties

Imposes a mandatory $200 civil penalty on pension plans that fail to file an annual report on time and accurately as required under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). Increases revenues by $20 million per year. Imposes a mandatory civil penalty of 20 percent of a pension plan's lost assets for violating fiduciary standards under Title I of ERISA. Increases revenues by $25 million in 1990.

PBGC Premium Increase

Increases the per participant premium paid to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC) from $16 to $18, saving $65 million in 1990.

Pension Portability

Discourages cashing out of retirement benefits upon job termination by requiring employers to offer the option of transferring retirement assets into IRAs when employee leaves employment. Allows employees' nondeductible contributions to be rolled over into an IRA upon job termination.

Stafford Student Loan Program

Prohibits classification of medical residents as students for purposes of a student loan deferment. Requires that medical and dental residents receive loan payment forbearance upon demand. Saves $10 million in 1990.

Codifies the Secretary of Education's authority to prevent fraud and abuse in the Stafford Loan Program by taking short-term emergency actions against participating institutions and lenders.

Bilingual Education Awards Forgiveness of Certain Repayments

Forgives repayment of certain bilingual education awards made in previous fiscal years.

Low Income AIDS/HIV Treatment Assistance Program

Authorizes appropriation of $30 million for grants to States for provision of life-prolonging treatment to low-income AIDS victims.

Homeless Assistance Technical Amendment

Allows funds appropriated for job training for the homeless demonstration projects to be available for three years.

Health Services Outcome Research

Authorizes a new Title IX of the Public Health Service Act to establish the Agency for Health Services Research to replace the National Center for Health Services Research and the Council on Health Care Technology. Authorizes appropriations of $75 million for 1990, $100 million for 1991, and $150 million for 1992.

TITLE IX—VETERANS AFFAIRS

Extension of Housing Loan Origination Fee

Extends through September 30, 1990, the authority of the VA to charge a one percent fee on guaranteed housing loan originations for one year. Generates $169 million in receipts in 1990.

Extension of Current Law Asset Sale Provision

Extends through September 30, 1990, the authority of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to sell housing loans with or without recourse in the event of default. Saves $496 million in 1990.

ESTIMATES OF SENATE-REPORTED RECONCILIATION BILL, [1]
OCT. 12, 1989

[In billions of dollars]

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TOURISM IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, for decades the State of South Carolina's natural beauty, rich history, and friendly folks have combined to create one of the most desirable and affordable vacation spots in the world. As a result, tourism has quickly become the second largest industry in the Palmetto State and tens of thousands of South Carolinians are dependent upon it for their economic survival.

Unfortunately, the national attention which has followed Hurricane Hugo's descent upon South Carolina has left people throughout the world with several misconceptions. First, although the devastation caused by Hurricane Hugo was unprecedented in many parts of our State, several coastal areas were left virtually untouched by the storm. These areas, which were south of the storm's eye, include the historic city of Beaufort, beautiful Edisto and Fripp islands, and world-renowned Kiawah and Hilton Head islands. These towns escaped the wrath of Hugo, and each is anxiously welcoming the tourists who annually enjoy the autumn sights in South Carolina's low-country. If you had planned to visit our State this fall, check before you change your plans.

Second, many of the towns and cities hit by the storm almost 3 weeks ago have made remarkable recoveries and are once again welcoming visitors. For instance, 59 of the 60 championship golf courses located along Myrtle Beach's Grand Strand are once again challenging golfers at all levels of competition, and approximately 10,000 hotel rooms are available. Shopping outlets, including the well-known Waccamaw Pottery, are open and ready to meet Christmas shoppers from around the world.

Even historic Charleston, which was hardest hit by the storm, has made a remarkable rebound. The South Carolina division of parks, recreation, and tourism reports that 13 of the 19 Charleston area tour companies are open at this time. Five more are scheduled to open in less than a week. Notable attractions such as Patriot's Point, Middleton Place, the Old Exchange Building, the Gibbes Art Museum, and Drayton Hall are also in operation, with others returning on line daily. In Georgetown County, popular attractions such as Brookgreen Gardens, the Rice Museum, and Bellefield Nature Center are operating on schedule. If you had planned to visit our State, check before you change your plans.

Mr. President, as you can see, South Carolina is not only a beautiful State but a resilient one as well. Many people have worked day and night so that these attractions which have been enjoyed by so many millions of people would promptly be available once again. I encourage everyone who has planned to visit South Carolina to do so. South Carolina's smiling faces and beautiful places are ready to greet you again. If you have made reservations to visit, please remember this motto, check before you change your plans. You could be missing out on the time of your life.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following information from the South Carolina division of parks, recreation, and tourism indicating the status of hotels and attractions in the Grand Strand, Charleston, and Georgetown County be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POSTURING, FINGER-POINTING, AND PREACHING

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to see from wire reporting that the President had a good meeting today with the chairman and vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senators BOREN and COHEN, to help clear the air in the aftermath of the Panama situation.

It seems to me that kind of communication can help get us back on the right track—where we are working together, in the interest of the country; instead of at each other's throats, for partisan or other political interest.

Candidly, I think some in Congress have been a little slow in getting to this point.

In fact, there is getting to be a remarkably predictable rhythm to congressional reaction to an international crisis like Panama.

Phase 1 is posturing. It is the time when we all stand up, beat our chests, and demand strong action.

Phase 2 is finger-pointing. That is when the President's critics give the rest of us the lowdown on how badly he botched the job.

Phase 3 is preaching—when the Monday morning quarterbacks let us in on what they would have done, and what the President should have done.

On Panama, we have done it all—posturing, finger-pointing and preaching. We have gotten it off our chests.

So I hope we will all now take a lesson from the President, and from Senators BOREN and COHEN, and start lowering the volume of our rhetoric, and raising the level of our reason.

I also want to make an additional point. A good part of what went wrong in Panama did not happen last weekend. It started happening many years ago, when Congress first decided to start telling the President how he ought to manage crisis: What he could do and, more important, what he could not do without first getting our OK.

In earlier years, we sort of restrained ourselves; we tended to back the President while the action was hot, and at least waited until the post-mortem to start the finger-pointing and Monday morning quarterbacking.

These days, some are less and less inclined to such restraint. They take off in the middle of the crisis and do not land until they have squeezed every drop of political advantage out of their positions, regardless of the impact on our foreign policy.

Problems of the kind we encountered in Panama started happening, too, when we first began to tie the hands of the President and his administration on gathering intelligence, conducting covert action and taking decisive, low-intensity-type military action. And again, I am not necessarily referring to activity of this session but to a trend that has been going on for years.

Let me be clear. Our intelligence committees have a legitimate role to play. We happen to have an outstanding chairman and vice-chairman. I think the very responsible way they have gone about sorting out any misunderstandings with the White House demonstrates that again. We also have a strong and responsible committee. So I have no complaint about—on the contrary, I have great admiration for—the leadership and membership of our Senate committee.

But the fact is that we cannot over the years intrude more and more into sensitive matters like covert action and impose, or propose, more and more restrictions without it having an effect.

Mr. President, let us put posturing, finger-pointing and preaching behind us. That is what the President and Senators BOREN and COHEN clearly have done.

Let us look soberly and seriously at what happened in Panama; Let us find out the facts before we start writing the prescriptions. Above all, before we start telling the President how to solve the problem, let us make sure we are not a big part of it.

Mr. President, I ask that the statement by Senator BOREN and the White House issued today be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEWS RELEASE FROM SENATOR BOREN, OCTOBER 11, 1989

SENATOR BOREN was in Chicago and was due to fly to Oklahoma this morning. He returned to Washington at the President's request relayed to him by Chief of Staff Sununu, arriving back in Washington at 1:30 am in order to attend the early morning meeting with the President. In the meeting this morning, in addition to the President and Seantor BOREN, also present were Senator WILLIAM COHEN, R-Maine, Vice Chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Vice President Quayle, Chief of Staff Sununu, National Security Advisor Scowcroft and his Deputy, Bob Gates. BOREN said, "The meeting had a very good spirit and I feel that our discussion which focused on intelligence matters will be of great help to our country if we ever confront crisises like the Panama situation in the future."

"I especially appreciated the President's words in the meeting thanking me for always supporting necessary Presidential authority in foreign policy and expressing his dismay at some news stories which have implied otherwise. We all resolved that differences of opinion about the recent Panama coup will in no way disrupt our close bipartisan partnership in national security matters." Before leaving for Oklahoma, BOREN had a separate meeting with Governor Sununu and OMB Director Dick Darman to discuss the pending proposal to reduce capital gains taxes. Senator BOREN is a leader of a group of Democratic Senators who are supporting President Bush's capital gains proposal.

STATEMENT FROM THE WHITE HOUSE, OCTOBER 11, 1989

The President invited Senators BOREN and COHEN to the White House this morning for a conversation about the events of the last week and lessons learned. The President has the highest respect for the judgement and integrity of the Chairman and Vice Chairman and wanted to take this occasion to reaffirm the close working relations with Senators BOREN AND COHEN and the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. All participants in the meeting expressed disappointment over recent press stories, and the President expressed his particular appreciation for Senator BOREN's leadership on behalf of bipartisanship in foreign policy and his support for necessary presidential authorities in foreign policy matters.

UNITED STATES RESPONSE TO RECENT EVENTS IN PANAMA

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on October 3, some members of the Panama Defense Force attempted a coup against Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega. As the events surrounding that rebellion and the response by officials of the U.S. Government, both on the scene in Panama City and here in Washington, have emerged, serious questions have been raised.

Several Senate committees, including the Select Committee on Intelligence, the Armed Services Committee, and the Committee on Foreign Relations are looking into this matter. It is not my intention to prejudge their efforts to establish the facts and to perform their oversight responsibilities. However, the facts which have already emerged raise several concerns which have and should be publicly raised and discussed.

The chairmen of the Armed Services Committee and of the Intelligence Committee and others of our colleagues have already raised some of these important issues.

I reject the view of some administration officials that any criticism constitutes "micromanagement" of foreign affairs by the Congress. It is the responsibility of the legislative branch of our Government to constructively criticize action, or the lack of action, taken by the executive branch in the pursuit of the Nation's foreign policy and to offer constructive alternatives.

Further, efforts by some within the administration to shift responsibility for decisions made by the administration to the Senate Intelligence Committee are ill-founded, unfair, and counterproductive. The chairman of that committee, Senator BOREN, has stated that no authorities requested have been denied to President Bush and the reservations expressed were based upon the very concerns which these events have shown to be well warranted. Members of the committee feared that the administration, without a clearly defined policy and without adequate contingency plans, might face a violent situation in Panama and be unprepared.

Let me review a few of the facts as we know them. U.S. officials first became aware of a possible planned coup attempt on the evening of October 1. U.S. officials were told that a coup would occur on Monday, October 2, at 9 a.m. and a request was made for U.S. forces to block the Bridge of the Americas and to block the causeway. The indications given were that the coup would go ahead with or without U.S. assistance.

At roughly noon the next day, October 2, a message was passed to U.S. officials that the coup had been postponed until the next day. At midnight, the coup leader's wife contacted U.S. officials indirectly to indicate that the coup would begin at 8 a.m. Panamanian time on October 3. The request for U.S. forces to block the bridge and causeway were repeated and she requested safe haven for herself and family.

The first shots were reported fired at 9:05 a.m. e.d.t., 8:05 Panamanian time. Less than one-half hour later, Mrs. Giroldi arrived at Fort Clayton where she was granted safe haven.

At some point around noon time, Major General Cisneros met with two rebel officers. The officers stated that General Noriega was under the control of the rebels at the Commandancia, the PDF Headquarters, which was the site of the coup attempt. According to the testimony of Secretary Cheney and General Powell, the rebels indicated they had no intention of turning Noriega over to the United States. They wanted to emphasize the need to avoid any incident between U.S. forces and the rebels.

While I have no reason to disbelieve this account, other reports indicated that the rebels had offered to turn Noriega over to the United States. This is an important point which must be clarified with finality.

By 1:15 p.m. the counter coup was underway and shortly after 2, Noriega's loyal forces had regained control of the Commandancia and Noriega had ordered a cease-fire.

In the days leading up to the coup and during the early stages of the attempt itself, American officials were uncertain as to whether they were being set up. Major Giroldi, the coup leader, was a known Noriega loyalist who had previously been involved in putting down a coup directed at Noriega. During much of the morning there was uncertainty as to Noriega's location and whether or not he was actually in the control of the rebels, and there was also uncertainty as to the likely success of the attempted coup. Although Panama Defense Force troop movements were observed, there was further uncertainty as to whether those troops were joining the rebellion or were loyal to Noriega and attempting to regain control.

As is so often the case in crisis situations, by the time these uncertainties were clarified, it was too late.

Part of the difficulty in understanding U.S. actions in these events has been that the accounts of the administration's several spokespersons have varied and changed over the last several days. While it was initially denied that U.S. troops were involved, in recent days the administration has acknowledged that U.S. troops, indeed, did block some roads. Reports in the press and elsewhere have suggested as well that other actions may have been promised and/or taken.

But, the chronology of events aside, what is most difficult to understand, in light of the President and the administration's repeated public invitations to elements within the Panama Defense Force to rebel against Noriega, is how the administration could have been so unprepared when what it had long been urging finally took place.

The President was reluctant to commit U.S. troops in light of the uncertainties that he faced. But what concerns me is that the absence of a clear plan to deal with any such eventuality had not been established. Therefore, the President lacked information and options which should have been at his disposal.

At the very least, when U.S. officials were contacted by the coup leader, an effort should have been made to learn information critical to the U.S. response. For example, was it the intention of the rebels when they gained control to recognize the recent Panamanian elections? Were they intending to call for new elections? Did they intend to turn Panama over to civilian control and when, if at all? Were they preparing a formal request for U.S. recognition or military assistance or some other form of assistance?

U.S. policy and contingency planning should be clear enough to provide guidelines to American officials at the scene in such a crisis, not only to ask the right questions but to be prepared to convey the conditions for any U.S. assistance.

In this instance, not only were critical questions apparently not asked, but coordination among agencies of the Government and the military was so poor, both in Panama and Washington, as to add to the confusion. Intelligence was not adequately conveyed. There was confusion even as to as central and critical a question as to the willingness of the rebels to turn General Noriega over to U.S. authorities.

The point we must focus on today is not to ascribe blame. A contest in the media, pointing fingers and evaluating "who lost Noriega" is not in the national interest.

Both the executive branch and the legislative branch have a responsibility and must and should coolly assess our policy with respect to Panama and the procedures which were followed, and the decisions and actions which were taken during the course of the events last week in Panama. This assessment must be made continuously in all crisis areas. The reason for this assessment is not to embarrass this or any other President or administration. The reason in this instance, is to assure that should a future opportunity to bring Manuel Noriega to justice occur, the President will have at his disposal all of his options.

This is all the more critical, I believe, because in my view Noriega has been weakened, not strengthened by this coup attempt—even though it was not successful.

While I cannot foresee what the next opportunity might be, it is clearly in the best interests of our Nation to be fully prepared to respond to any future effort by the people of Panama to rid themselves of Noriega.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING RECESS

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1989, the Secretary of the Senate, on October 10, 1989, during the recess of the Senate, received a message from the President of the United States transmitting a nomination, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(The nomination received on October 10, 1989, is printed in today's RECORD at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 4:14 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, without amendment:

S. 248. An act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to provide increased penalties for certain major frauds against the United States.

The message also announced that the House has agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills:

H.R. 2087. An act to transfer a certain program with respect to child abuse from title IV of Public Law 98-473 to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 2088. An act to revise and extend the programs established in the Temporary Child Care for Handicapped Children and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2990) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes; it recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 34, 62, 63, 79, 82, 92, and 109, and agrees thereto; and it recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 13, 14, 15, 16, 26, 27, 28, 29, 33, 36, 37, 44, 51, 57, 59, 64, 71, 75, 76, 77, 78, 84, 87, 90, 91, 93, 94, 101, 104, 108, 111, 114, 119, 123, 128, 129, 132, 139, 144, 156, 172, and 176 to the bill, and agrees thereto, each with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 1113. An act to authorize appropriations for the Office of Environmental Quality for fiscal years 1989 and 1990; to ensure consideration of the impact of major Federal actions on the global environment, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2587. An act to conserve North American wetland ecosystems and water fowl and the other migratory birds and fish and wildlife that depend upon such habitats; and

H.R. 3007. An act to amend the Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978 to provide additional authorizations for appropriations.

At 7:37 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3026) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes; it recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 8, 14, 21, and 22 to the bill, and agrees thereto; and it recedes from its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 7, 11, 15, 16, 18, and 19 to the bill, and agrees thereto, each with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 1113. An act to authorize appropriations for the Office of Environmental Quality for fiscal years 1989 and 1990; to ensure consideration of the impact of major Federal actions on the global environment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 2587. An act to conserve North American wetland ecosystems and waterfowl and the other migratory birds and fish and wildlife that depend upon such habitats.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-1764. A communication from the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, transmitting, pursuant to law, the Final Sequestration Report for Fiscal Year 1990; pursuant to the order of January 30, 1975, as modified referred jointly to the Committee on Appropriations; the Committee on the Budget; the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry; the Committee on Armed Services; the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs; the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation; the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources; the Committee on Environment and Public Works; the Committee on Finance; the Committee on Foreign Relations; the Committee on Governmental Affairs; the Committee on the Judiciary; the Committee on Labor and Human Resources; the Committee on Rules and Administration; the Committee on Small Business; the Committee on Veterans' Affairs; the Select Committee on Indian Affairs; and the Select Committee on Intelligence.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. EXON (for himself and Mr. KERREY):

S. 1747. A bill to provide for the restoration of Federal recognition to the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 1748. A bill to provide tax assistance for forest landowners who suffered timber damage and loss as a result of Hurricane Hugo; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

S. 1749. A bill to restore previous exemption for edible molasses containing more than 6 percent nonsugar solids; to the Committee on Finance.

STATEMENTS OF INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. EXON (for himself and Mr. KERREY):

S. 1747. A bill to provide for the restoration of Federal recognition to the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

PONCA RESTORATION ACT

● Mr. EXON. Mr. President, today Senator KERREY and I are introducing a bill to extend Federal recognition to the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska.

A few weeks ago, I had the pleasure of visiting with Mr. Fred Leroy, the Chairman of the Northern Ponca Restoration Committee. I was indeed surprised to hear that the Poncas of Nebraska have been ineligible to receive Federal benefits for over 26 years. Although members of other Indian tribes receive benefits in the areas of housing, health care, employment, child welfare, and education, Mr. Leroy, who is a member of the Ponca Tribe, as were his ancestors, would be denied those benefits if he applied.

Mr. President, why is one Indian eligible for benefits while another is not? I posed just that question to Mr. Leroy. I learned that prior to 1962, the Ponca Tribe was a federally recognized tribe and its members received the benefit of our Federal programs. But in that year, the tribal status of the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska was terminated pursuant to the Termination Act of 1954.

The policy behind that act was to assimilate our Indians into the mainstream of American life by terminating their status as Indian tribes. While the intentions behind the bill may have been good, the results can only be described as a failure. Its effects on the Ponca Tribe are a good illustration of why.

Although Federal recognition of the Ponca Tribe was terminated, the Poncas continued to face the same problems that all native Americans confront. As could be expected, the loss of recognition had a profound effect upon the members of the Ponca Tribe. Lacking a central organization, the tribe has struggled to maintain its customs, traditions, and culture. Our Federal Government has responded to the needs of our Indians by providing programs and services in the areas of health, housing, education, and training; yet, those programs and services have been unavailable to the members of the Ponca Tribe.

Although many tribes lost their tribal status as a result of the Termination Act, only two have yet to be restored. But a few weeks ago, the Senate unanimously passed legislation to recognize the Coquille Tribe of Oregon. In that instance, and in many others, Congress has recognized the failure of the policy of termination and has acted on the basis of fairness and equity to restore eligibility to those whose rights had been terminated.

The Ponca Tribe of Nebraska has now begun to reestablish and practice its tribal customs and traditions. It has reorganized and has established a list of approximately 1,100 Poncas that are likely members of the tribe. It has chosen to seek recognition and has successfully petitioned the Nebraska Legislature to support their effort.

Congress must now take action to restore the Poncas to tribal status. The bill I and Senator KERREY now introduce will restore the basic services and programs that are offered to recognized Indians to the members of the Ponca Tribe. It will help the Ponca Tribe reestablish itself as an Indian nation and restore its cultural identity. An economic development plan is included to assist the Poncas in overcoming the disadvantage of being terminated Indians for nearly 30 years.

Mr. President, passage of this bill is an important step for the Ponca Tribe and for the State of Nebraska where the majority of the Poncas now reside. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort and urge that the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs promptly consider this bill and report it back to the full Senate for passage.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1747

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Ponca Restoration Act".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. For purposes of this Act—

(1) The term "Tribe" means the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior or the designated representative of the Secretary of the Interior.

(3) The term "Interim Council" means the Board of Directors of the Northern Ponca Restoration Committee, Inc.

(4) The term "member" means a person who is enrolled on the membership roll of the Tribe of June 10, 1965, that was compiled by the Bureau of Indian Affairs or is entitled to be enrolled as a member of the Tribe under section 7.

(5) The term "State" means the State of Nebraska.

FEDERAL RECOGNITION

SEC. 3. Federal recognition is hereby extended to the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska. All Federal laws of general application to Indians and Indian tribes (including the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984; 25 U.S.C. 461, et seq.), popularly known as the Indian Reorganization Act) shall apply with respect to the Tribe and to the members.

RESTORATION OF RIGHTS

SEC. 4. (a) All rights and privileges of the Tribe which may have been abrogated or diminished before the date of enactment of this Act by reason of any provision of Public Law 87-629 are hereby restored and such law shall no longer apply with respect to the Tribe or the members.

(b) Nothing in this Act may be construed to diminish any rights or privileges of the Tribe, or of the members, that exist prior to the enactment of this Act.

(c) The Secretary shall accept any real property that is transferred to the Secretary for the benefit of the Tribe. Such real property shall be accepted by the Secretary (subject to any rights, liens, or taxes that exist prior to the date of such transfer) in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Tribe and shall be exempt from all taxes imposed by the Federal Government or any State or local government after such transfer.

(d) Except as otherwise specifically provided in any other provision of this Act, nothing in this Act may be construed as altering or affecting—

(1) any rights or obligations with respect to property,

(2) any rights or obligations under any contract,

(3) any hunting, fishing, trapping, gathering, or water rights of the Tribe or the members, or

(4) any obligation to pay a tax levied before the date of enactment of this Act.

SERVICES

SEC. 5. The Tribe, and the members, shall be eligible for all services and benefits that are provided by the Federal Government to Indians because of their status as Federally recognized Indians and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, such services and benefits shall be provided after the date of enactment of this Act to the Tribe, and to the members, without regard to the existence of a reservation for the Tribe or the location of the residence of any member on or near any Indian reservation.

INTERIM GOVERNMENT

SEC. 6. Until such time as a constitution for the Tribe is adopted in accordance with section 8(a) and tribal officials are elected under section 8(b), the Tribe shall be governed by the Interim Council.

MEMBERSHIP ROLL

SEC. 7. (a) Until a tribal constitution is adopted in accordance with section 8, the Interim Council shall take such measures as will insure the continuing accuracy of the membership roll of the Tribe.

(b)(1) Until a tribal constitution is adopted in accordance with section 8, an individual shall be eligible for membership in the Tribe, and the name of the individual shall be placed on the membership roll of the Tribe, if—

(A) the individual is living and is not an enrolled member of another Indian tribe that is recognized by the Federal Government, and

(B) the individual—

(1) was listed on the tribal membership roll of June 18, 1965, that was compiled by the Bureau of Indian Affairs,

(ii) was entitled to be listed on the membership roll of June 18, 1965, that was compiled by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, but was not listed, or

(iii) is a lineal descendant of an individual, living or deceased, who is described in clause (i) or (ii).

(2) Any individual who is excluded from the membership roll of the Tribe by the Interim Council may appeal to the Secretary for a determination of the eligibility of the individual for membership in the Tribe. The Interim Council shall include on the membership roll any such individual that the Secretary determines in such an appeal to be eligible for membership in the Tribe.

(c) After adoption of a tribal constitution in accordance with section 8, the constitution of the Tribe, and the bylaws adopted under the constitution, shall govern membership in the Tribe.

TRIBAL CONSTITUTION

SEC. 8. (a) Before the earlier of—

(1) the date that is 60 days after the date on which the Interim Council submits to the Secretary—

(A) a written request of the Interim Council that an election to adopt a tribal constitution be held, and

(B) a copy of the membership roll of the tribe that the Interim Council certifies to be an accurate and up-to-date roll, or

(2) the date that is 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

the Secretary shall conduct, by secret ballot, an election to adopt a constitution for the Tribe. Absentee balloting shall be permitted in the election without regard to the residence of the voter. Notice of the election shall be provided to the members of the Tribe at least 60 days prior to the date of the election. In every other regard, the election shall be held according to the procedures applicable to elections under section 16 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 987; 25 U.S.C. 476).

(b) By no later than the date that is 120 days after the date on which the Tribe adopts a constitution under subsection (a), the Secretary shall conduct an election by secret ballot to elect officials of the Tribe, as provided in the constitution of the Tribe. The election shall be conducted according to the procedures described in subsection (a), except to the extent that such procedures conflict with the constitution of the Tribe.

(c) Notwithstanding the previous negative vote by the Tribe in an election conducted under section 18 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 988; 25 U.S.C. 478), the Tribe shall be treated as having made an affirmative vote in an election conducted under section 18 of such Act.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the governing body of the Tribe established under the constitution of the Tribe that is adopted under subsection (a) shall be treated as an Indian tribal government for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 9. The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PLAN

SEC. 10. (a) The Secretary shall—

(1) enter into negotiations with the governing body of the Tribe to establish a plan for economic development for the Tribe;

(2) in accordance with this section, establish such a plan; and

(3) upon the approval of such plan by the governing body of the Tribe (and after consultation with the State and local officials pursuant to subsection (b)), shall submit such plan to the Congress by no later than the date that is 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) To ensure that legitimate State and local interests are not prejudiced by the economic development plan established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall notify and consult with the appropriate officials of the State and all appropriate local governmental officials in the State with respect to the proposed economic development plan. The Secretary shall provide complete information on the proposed economic development plan to such officials, including the restrictions imposed on such plan by subsection (c).

(2) During any consultation by the Secretary under this subsection, the Secretary shall provide such information as the Secretary may possess and shall request comments and additional information on the extent of any State or local service to the Tribe.

(c) Any economic development plan established by the Secretary under subsection (a) shall provide that—

(1) real property acquired by or for the Tribe shall be taken by the Secretary in the name of the United States in trust for the benefit of the Tribe;

(d) The Secretary shall append to the economic development plan submitted to the Congress under subsection (a) a detailed statement—

(1) naming each individual consulted in accordance with subsection (b);

(2) summarizing the testimony received by the Secretary pursuant to any such consultation; and

(3) including any written comments or reports submitted to the Secretary by any individual named in paragraph (1).●

● Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator EXON in introducing the Ponca Restoration Act. This bill would grant the northern Ponca people tribal status following 27 years in legal limbo. During these years the northern Ponca people have lived in a society that considers them Indians without the legal status.

The Ponca Tribe's termination in 1962 marked the end of an era whereby the Federal Government terminated 109 tribes and bands in the United States. Termination ended the special Federal-tribal relationship almost completely and transferred almost all responsibilities for, and power over, affected Indians from the Federal Government to the States.

What was the result of termination? The Poncas have experienced a decline in customs and traditions, the loss of Federal services, employment-job training, health services for the young and elderly, Indian child welfare protection, higher education and youth programs.

The introduction of this restoration bill is the result of an effort that started in 1971 when former Ponca tribal members expressed their concerns about the termination of their tribe by incorporating. In the intervening years the Poncas have created an organization committed to reinstating themselves as a recognized tribe. After careful preparation members of the Northern Ponca Restoration Committee approached Nebraska's congressional delegation with a restoration proposal. The Poncas have won support for their effort from the local community of Niobrara, in the heart of their former home, and the support of the Nebraska State Legislature. Mr. President, I would like to submit resolutions of support from both of these bodies as an indication of support for the tribe's restoration, and ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD following the statement.

The Ponca Tribe is among the last of the terminated tribes that is seeking to become a federally restored tribe. In recent years Congress has supported the restoration of tribes in an admission that the policy of termination had failed in its efforts to integrate Indians by taking away their legal status as tribes. Mr. President, I urge Congress to give careful consideration of this matter and hope that we can recognize the northern Ponca people's just claim.

Conditions have changed in the Ponca's former home. It is not feasible, nor is it the intent of this legislation to create a large residential reservation in the Ponca's former territory. It is the intention of this legislation to see that the tribe recovers its identity and create a center devoted to preserving and cultivating their customs and tradition. The legislation also provides for an economic development package intended to assist the many Ponca's who existence has been reduced below the poverty level and allow them to gain economic self-sufficiency.

Mr. President, with this legislation we have the ability to correct the errors of a failed policy and create the conditions whereby an Indian people will have the opportunity to recover their proud history. It is ironic that we must grant legal recognition to the tribe of Chief Standing Bear. Because it was Chief Standing Bear whose trial in Nebraska following his escape from forced relocation in Oklahoma lead to Judge Elmer Dundy's pronouncement that "an indian is a person within the meaning of the law", a ruling that lead to the legal redefinition of Indians within our legal system. It strikes me that we should honor Standing Bear's commitment to our society and its laws by granting legal recognition to the northern Ponca Tribe.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION No. 1989-2

Be it hereby resolved, that the Village Board of Trustees of the Village of Niobrara supports the efforts of the Northern Ponca Tribe in their efforts to gain "Federal Restoration" as an Indian Tribe.

Passed and approved this 6th day of June, 1989.

STANLEY O. DRYAK,
Chairman, Village Board of Trustees.
Attest: Robert L. Olson, Village Clerk.

LEGISLATIVE RESOLUTION 428

Whereas, the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska was terminated by an Act of Congress, P.L. 87-629, on September 5, 1962; and

Whereas, former members of the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska are not eligible for and do not receive any federal services in housing, health care, employment, child welfare, and education, otherwise provided to federally recognized Indians; and

Whereas, former members of the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska are not defined as Indians by the federal government; and

Whereas, the Northern Ponca Restoration Committee, Inc., was incorporated in the State of Nebraska on August 19, 1987, to promote the federal restoration of the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska and its members; and

Whereas, the Northern Ponca Restoration Committee, Inc., will seek to acquire and provide federal services to former members of the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska in housing, health care, employment, child welfare, and education; and

Whereas, Ponca tribal members have played a historical role throughout Nebraska's history; and

Whereas, the trial of Chief Standing Bear established by law that Indians were persons: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the members of the Ninetieth Legislature of Nebraska, Second Session:

1. That the Legislature recognizes all former members of the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska as duly state recognized Indians.

2. That the Legislature extends its recognition to the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska.

3. That the Legislature fully supports the Ponca Tribe's endeavors to achieve federal restoration.

4. That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Northern Ponca Tribe of Nebraska Restoration Committee, Inc., in care of Mr. Fred LeRoy, Chairman of the Northern Ponca Restoration Committee, Inc. and Ms. Rose Hines, Vice-Chairperson of the Northern Ponca Restoration Committee, Inc., 2226 Leavenworth Street, Omaha, NE 68102.●

By Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 1748. A bill to provide tax assistance for forest landowners who suffered timber damage and loss as a result of Hurricane Hugo; to the Committee on Finance.

HURRICANE HUGO TIMBER TAX ASSISTANCE ACT

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise to introduce urgent legislation designed to assist the private timber owners who have suffered a financial calamity in the wake of Hurricane Hugo.

Mr. President, the press has done a superb job of describing the damage wrought by Hurricane Hugo on residential areas, buildings, bridges, highways, and so on. The largely unreported story, however, is the total annihilation of vast stretches of forest and timberland throughout South and North Carolina—countless acres of shattered, splintered trees as far as the eye can see. In the affected areas, literally nothing is left standing save for sheared-off tree trunks. Indeed, these broken forests are the most persuasive testimony to Hugo's brute force, and to the fact that it will be a full generation before the land fully recovers.

Mr. President, to quantify the scope of the destruction, it is estimated that there is enough fresh timber on the ground to build approximately 660,000 houses; that is the equivalent of rebuilding Charleston nearly 10 times over. In the Francis Marion National Forest alone we've lost an amount of board feet that could stretch around the world five times.

Total dollar losses in South Carolina timber are estimated to be $1.04 billion. North Carolina suffered about $62.1 million.

Needless to say, the timber market will be saturated in South Carolina for the indefinite future. In any case, the wood felled by Hugo lost much of its value because it was bent, broken and splintered by the 140-mile-per-hour winds. What we're left with is a glutted market that's paying about half of what it paid last year for sawtimber.

Making matters worse, this wood won't last long lying on the ground. It will soon be attacked by pine beetles and blue stain fungi, and we simply don't have the manpower, the rail access, or the mill capacity to salvage the vast amount of timber that is subject to rapid deterioration.

Prior to Hurricane Hugo, the timber industry had established itself as a mainstay of the South Carolina economy. Forestry is the third largest manufacturing industry in South Carolina, employing over 30,000 people. Moreover, the damage wreaked by Hugo disproportionately impacted individual landowners. Only 10 percent of total timber land is owned by the Government in South Carolina. Twenty-two percent is owned by corporate enterprises, while the great majority—68 percent—is owned by private landowners.

These individual landowners will have a great deal of difficulty recovering from Hugo. These timber owners have lost not only this year's harvest, but harvests for the next 2 years. Sawtimber volume damaged by Hugo totals 6.7 billion board feet. The total annual sawtimber volume harvested in South Carolina is approximately 2.2 billion board feet. So within a mere 8 hours, Hugo swept through and harvested 3 years' worth of timber in South Carolina.

Many of these individual landowners were planning on using their timber proceeds to pay for their childrens' education or to cover retirement costs. Many of them were using the proceeds to pay off mortgages on their land. These people were doing what we need more of in America—they were planning for the future—and they deserve help from our Federal Government in the wake of this unprecedented disaster.

My colleague from South Carolina and I have already introduced a bill to provide assistance in reforesting these lands. However, the benefits of reforestation will not be seen for between 15 and 30 years, the amount of time it takes to grow a crop of trees. These timber owners need immediate assistance to survive financially over the next few years. Therefore, I am introducing a bill that would provide immediate assistance in the form of limited tax adjustments.

The Hurricane Hugo Timber Tax Assistance Act will address the taxation of timber in several ways. First, it will allow for a break in taxes up front in exchange for offsets in the future. For citizens paying taxes on timber in a designated disaster area, the bill would permit a casualty-loss deduction for damages to timber connected with a trade or business or the production of income to the extent of the greater of: First, the taxpayer's basis in the timber; and second, the difference between the fair market value of the timber immediately before the disaster and its fair market value immediately after the disaster.

To the extent the decrease in the fair market value exceeds the basis in the timber, such excess would reduce the taxpayer's basis in other tax attributes in the following order: First, the basis in timber undamaged by the disaster; second, general business credit carryovers under IRC section #38; third, net operating lose carryovers to years after the year of the damage; fourth, net capital losses arising in the year of the disaster; and fifth, the basis of any real estate used for timber production prior to the impact of Hurricane Hugo.

The bill also provides an incentive to reforest lands damaged by Hugo by increasing the maximum amount of reforestation expenditures qualifying for amortization under IRC section 194 from $10,000 to $30,000. For environmental reasons, we should do everything we can to make sure that this land is reforested. The timber shortage that our country is expected to face in the next century is also an important reason for starting regrowth as soon as possible.

Due to the overwhelming need for damage assessment, timber owners may incur higher-than-normal expenses in getting such an assessment. The Hurricane Hugo Timber Tax Assistance Act eases this burden by exempting the timber damage assessment expenses from application of the 2-percent floor on miscellaneous itemized deductions.

Many individuals have been displaced because Hugo destroyed their homes, and many others have suffered extensive damage to their homes or offices. Electric lines as well as water and sewer lines are still in repair. The economy of the disaster area was brought to an abrupt halt by Hugo, and as people were forced to focus on the more immediate problems of caring for their families and their homes, financial matters were put aside. The Hurricane Hugo Timber Tax Assistance Act ensures that timber owners will not be penalized for failing to file business tax returns within the next 60 days. This grace period would be granted regardless of whether the taxpayer has been able to file for an extension.

As I said previously, many landowners use the proceeds from timber sales to pay off the mortgage on their land. The Hurricane Hugo Timber Tax Assistance Act counts the sale of timber damaged by Hurricane Hugo as an involuntary conversion. If the proceeds from the sale of such timber is used to pay a previously existing mortgage on the land, such a mortgage payment will be counted as reinvestment and will not be taxed as capital gains.

Finally, the Hurricane Hugo Timber Tax Assistance Act will provide help to timber owners by specifying that "passive activity" shall not include any interest in qualified timber property with respect to an individual owning timber in a Hugo disaster area, effective to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.●

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, NATIONAL PARKS, AND FORESTS

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks, and Forests of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on October 24, 1989, beginning at 2:30 p.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on six measures currently pending before the subcommittee. The measures are:

S. 1046, a bill to study the Merrimack River in New Hampshire for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System;

S. 1302, the Big Thicket National Preserve Addition Act of 1989;

S. 1524, a bill to study segments of the Pemigewasset River in New Hampshire for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System;

S. 1559, a bill to expand the boundaries of the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park;

S. 1594, a bill to revise the boundary of Gettysburg National Military Park; and

H.R. 1472, an act to establish the Grand Island National Recreation Area in Michigan.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, anyone wishing to submit written testimony to be included in the hearing record is welcome to do so. Those wishing to submit written testimony should send two copies to the Subcommittee on Public Lands, National Parks, and Forests, SD-364, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information regarding the hearing, please contact David Brooks of the subcommittee staff at (202) 224-9863.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CONGRESS MUST REVIEW AIRLINE INDUSTRY TRENDS

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the growth in airline mergers, acquisitions and bankruptcies has raised serious questions about the structural security of the airline industry. If we have learned anything from the catastrophic collapse of the savings and loan industry, we have learned that we must continuously review the appropriate role of the Government in maintaining competitive, deregulated industries.

The Senate will soon consider legislation creating a commission to investigate recent occurrences in the airline market and the consequences of these trends. While the proposal before the Senate specifically calls for a study of the Eastern Airlines case, it also calls for a comprehensive look at the deregulated airline industry.

I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article in the October 6 Washington Post which underscores the need to review the overall health of the airline industry. I ask that this article, "Trump Makes $7 billion Bid for American Airlines," be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

TRUMP MAKES $7 BILLION BID FOR AMERICAN AIRLINES

(By Martha M. Hamilton)

Billionaire developer Donald J. Trump launched the largest airline takeover bid ever yesterday by offering $7 billion for American Airlines.

In doing so, Trump is challenging one of the toughest, most aggressive managements in the aviation industry, that of American Airlines top executive, Robert L. Crandall. AMR Corp., which owns American, said it will consider Trump's proposal but remains committed to operating an independent airline.

The offer for American, the nation's largest carrier, comes at a time when virtually every U.S. airline appears to be up for grabs, heightening legislative and regulatory concerns about such buyouts.

Chief among the worries is whether the debt incurred in airline takeovers might jeopardize the new owners' commitment to safety or make the carriers vulnerable in an economic downturn. Another concern is whether the increased role of foreign airlines as investors in these deals threatens national interests or reduces competition.

Yesterday, just as the Trump bid was being announced, the Senate Commerce Committee approved a bill, sponsored by Sen. Wendell H. Ford (D-KY), that would require the Transportation secretary to determine the impact of airline buyouts on safety, the ability of an airline to grow, competition with foreign carriers and other factors.

As word of Trump's bid reached the committee, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D-TX) urged the committee to make the bill retroactive so that it would apply to the Trump deal. The committee is expected to offer an amendment on the Senate floor that would include the Trump deal and any others that may develop.

News of Trump's $120 a share bid pushed the company's stock up $16.87½ a share to close at $99.87½ in heavy trading on the New York Exchange.

The bid followed weeks of rumors that Trump was acquiring stock in AMR and a request by the company to the Securities and Exchange Commission to investigate the rumors. Industry analysts said that the bid appears to be a serious offer at a reasonable price for the airline, rather than merely an attempt to create a quick profit on the surge in the stock.

"The price is not high, though I think it's the kind of bid that can shut out other offers," said Louis A. Marckensano, an analyst with Janney Montgomery Scott.

Marckensano said that bidding more than $120 a share for the airline would probably force a buyer to liquidate some assets to finance the deal—which would be likely to face opposition.

"It's a major-sized deal," said Paul Karos of First Boston.

Trump, who last year acquired the Eastern Air Shuttle for $365 million and renamed it the Trump Shuttle, said yesterday in his letter to AMR's board that he is prepared to commit "at least $1 billion of equity to the transaction." He also said that he believes the rest of the financing can be obtained "within a reasonable period of time." Trump could not be reached to elaborate on his offer or how he plans to finance it, but analysts speculated that he might also seek a foreign airline as a partner. European airlines have been anxious to acquire stakes in U.S. carriers.

Trump said his takeover bid "reflects the enormous respect that I have for the company, its management team and the company's employees" and went on to laud "the outstanding job done by company management." American has been profitable and expansion-minded under Crandall. It has a vast fleet of planes with 482 aircraft plus an additional 201 used for its American Eagle commuter subsidiary. With 2,335 daily departures (plus 1,413 for American Eagle), American overtook United Airlines earlier this year to become the nation's largest carrier.

Although Trump said he was interested in a "negotiated transaction," he also included a jab at the airline's management. Noting that acquistion bids are often met with "immediate rejection and vilification of the author," he added, "I ask you, can such a response genuinely be in the interests of the company's shareholders who, as you are aware, have received no dividends on their shares for many years?" The company paid its last dividend in 1980, according to a spokesman.

American released a statement saying it would consider Trump's offer "in due time" but has not changed "its policy and belief that AMR and its shareholders will be best served by AMR remaining an independent company."

Earlier this year American strengthened a "shareholders rights" plan that makes it more expensive for a bidder for the company to acquire its stock.

Trump said his offer will expire on Oct. 20, unless he extends it.●

TO ANGELO K. TSAKOPOULOS AXIOS' 1989 MAN OF THE YEAR

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, it is with distinct pleasure that Gayle and I extend our congratulations to Angelo K. Tsakopoulos who is being honored this evening by the members of Axios, the venerable organization of Greek Americans, as their 1989 Man of the Year.

It is a particular privilege for me to join in saluting a man who so clearly exemplifies the ideals of the Axios organization, and who has brought honor to his Greek heritage with the multitude of achievements which have marked his life.

There will be many tributes to him this evening, and each will be reflective of the esteem in which he is held in our California community. He is admired not only for the success of his career, but also because he has chosen to generously give a large portion of that success back to countless charities and worthy causes throughout the world, truly illuminating the best of the Hellenic tradition.

I join with the many friends and admirers of Angelo Tsakopoulos in California and throughout the world in offering him warmest best wishes on this occasion of tribute. It is my great privilege to illuminate and honor a most distinguished Greek American in this Chamber of the United States Senate.●

TRIBUTE TO MAYOR RICHARD HACKETT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a man who has dedicated his life to serving Memphis, TN. Memphis Mayor Richard C. "Dick" Hackett has been chosen by the Variety Club of Memphis to receive their Humanitarian Award as an acknowledgement of his untiring work on behalf of the citizens of Memphis.

Since Catherine Variety Sheridan was adopted by the first Variety Club in 1928, Variety has been known internationally for its dedication to the cause of humanity and its devotion to the betterment of mankind. The Variety Club has obtained its reputation by contributing to the welfare of children throughout the world. Mayor Hackett's continuing efforts to raise public awareness in order to improve the condition of Memphis' underprivileged children make him a shining example of the ideals of the club.

Born and educated in Memphis, Mayor Hackett has spent his entire adult life in government service. He has served the city as mayor since 1982, devoting much of his time and energy to children's programs such as the Children's Museum of Memphis. He is a member of the board of directors for St. Peter's Home for Children, St. Joseph Hospital, and the Whitehaven Junior Baseball Association, among other civic institutions. Over the years he has received a number of distinguished awards for his service to the community. This year, he was named Outstanding Young Mayor of America by the U.S. Jaycees.

Mr. President, it is indeed a pleasure to honor this dedicated young public servant, devoted husband, and loving father of three small children of his own. I assure you we have not heard the last of Dick Hackett. I am confident he will continue his outstanding work for the city of Memphis. I join both the Variety Club and the children he has been so instrumental in helping in thanking Mayor Hackett for a job well done.●

ANWAR SADAT

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of a peacemaker and visionary. Mr. President, 8 years ago, on October 6, 1981, Anwar Sadat's life was brought to an abrupt and shocking end. His passing tragically dimmed the ray of hope that emerged during his tenure as leader of Egypt. However, in spite of the myriad problems facing the Middle East today, his legacy, his vision for peace, endures.

In his day, Anwar Sadat toiled to throw off the chains of the past and to make a new beginning. He was handed a society with profound economic problems and disturbing social tensions. Yet through his infitah initiatives, programs of economic and political liberalization, he began a process aimed at curing Egypt's age-old ills.

This vision and this energy carried Sadat beyond the borders of his own country. This man of humble roots escaped the ideological dogmatism of preceding generations and pursued an historic peace with Israel. At Camp David, he told us that four wars in 30 years were too much. It was time to face reality and to walk in peace with Israel. He risked Egypt's traditional role as leader of the Arab world, and he risked losing popular support in his native land. Above all, he risked his own life.

At Camp David, Anwar Sadat helped to create a blueprint for peace in a war-torn land. Today his legacy is in danger. Other Arab leaders have not demonstrated the same resolve. Let those leaders embrace his legacy, forsake war, and begin to work for peace. That, I believe, would be a most fitting way to pay tribute to Anwar Sadat. It is the memorial he would want.●

RECOGNIZING THE 5TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CITY OF ROCHESTER HILLS, MI

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise to join with my colleague Senator DON RIEGLE in recognizing the 5th anniversary of the city of Rochester Hills, MI, which is today the fastest growing residential community in Oakland County.

Since its transition from Avon Township to a city was accomplished on November 20, 1984, as the result of a vote by residents, Rochester Hills has proven itself a responsive and ambitious community.

The accomplishments and activities include a major expansion of water and sewer services throughout the city; the largest single residential street paving project in the history of the city-township, the $5 million Brooklands area project; and adoption of a $9 million recreation bond issue by the voters, leading to a major expansion of the city's park system.

Clearly, Rochester Hills is preparing for a future of growth, prosperity and promise and we congratulate its citizens and officials on the solid foundation they have laid in these past 5 years. For this work and the promise of hard work and success yet to come, Senator RIEGLE and I congratulate you.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS UNDER RULE 35, PARAGRAPH 4, PERMITTING ACCEPTANCE OF A GIFT OF EDUCATIONAL TRAVEL FROM A FOREIGN ORGANIZATION

● Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD notices of Senate employees who participate in programs, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by the foreign government or organization.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Todd G. Andrews, a member of the staff of Senator PELL, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Soochow University, from October 5 to 15, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Andrews in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Soochow University, is in the interest of the Senate of the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Christopher McLean, a member of the staff of Senator EXON, to participate in a program in Tokyo, Japan, sponsored by the Association for International Investment, the Council for Better Investment and the KEIDANREN from October 9 to 14, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. McLean in the program in Japan, at the expense of the KEIDANREN, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mr. Bill Livingston, a member of the staff of Senator WILSON, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Soochow University, from October 6 to 16, 1989.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Livingston in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Soochow University, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

ANGELO TSAKOPOULOS HONORED

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, on Friday, October 13, AXIOS Foundation for Worthiness will honor Angelo Tsakopoulos as "Man of the Year" for his leadership and deep commitment to his fellow citizens. To be recognized by an organization such as AXIOS, which in all its endeavors exemplifies the very best in the Greek-American tradition of devotion to democracy and services to community, is truly an honor.

Mr. Tsakopoulos who immigrated from Greece at age 15, began his career in Chicago shining shoes. Later he labored as a farmworker and, as a young entrepeneur, raised and sold melons.

From these modest beginnings, Angelo Tsakopoulos became a leader in California's business community where he played an instrumental role in transforming Sacramento into one of the Nation's emerging urban centers.

While his success in the business community has become legendary, Angelo is perhaps best known for his dedication to his fellow citizens and Greek heritage. Angelo has established the Kazantzakis Chair at San Francisco State University; has endowed chairs and major programs at the McGeorge School of Law, Dartmouth College, Sacramento State University, and the University of California at Irvine's Thesaurus Linguae Graecae Center; and has funded the teaching of Demotic Greek in local high schools.

Angelo Tsakopoulos has also been a generous supporter of Sacramento's Crocker Art Museum, the Roseville Art Center, and the Folsom Historical Society, and has been a major benefactor of organizations such as the Asian Community Convalescent Home, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Catholic Diocese of Sacramento, and the Sisters of Mercy.

As Angelo has become a leader in busines and his community, he has remained deeply proud of his Hellenic heritage. He cofounded DYNAMIS, an organization which encourages young people to enter the field of public service; is the west coast representative for the Society for the Preservation of Greek Heritage; and is a major supporter of the American Hellenic Institute and the United Hellenic American Conference. He also serves as an archon in the Greek Orthodox Church, the highest honor available to laymen. Perhaps, most importantly, Angelo is known throughout the country for his willingness to help talented Hellenic Americans achieve the dream which brought him to America.

Previous AXIOS "Man of the Year" recipients include George C. Christopher, former mayor of San Francisco; His Eminence Archbishop Iakovos, primate of the Greek Orthodox Church of North and South America; Alex G. Spanos, builder and sportsman; and, in 1988, Dr. John Brademas, former Congressman and president of New York University.

AXIOS, founded in 1978, is comprised of Greek-American business and professional leaders from the Los Angeles area and is involved in charity and scholarship programs and public affairs.

Angelo Tsakopoulos' contributions as a philanthropist, businessman, and as a Greek-American are eloquent testimony to the dedication and ability he has brought to the business community and to all Americans, regardless of ethnic background. The AXIOS "Man of the Year" Award justifiably pays tribute to his hard work and genuine commitment to his fellow man.●

MEASURE DISCHARGED—H.R. 2749

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 2749, authorizing the Secretary of Army to convey certain lands to Whitney Lake, TX, be discharged from the Senate Armed Services Committee and then referred to the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONGRATULATING MALTA ON THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF ITS INDEPENDENCE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 290, Senate Congressional Resolution 71, congratulating Malta on the 25th anniversary of its independence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 71) congratulating Malta on the twenty-fifth anniversary of its independence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. CON. RES. 71

Whereas September 21, 1989, marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the independence of Malta;

Whereas the people of Malta have historically cherished the values of democracy;

Whereas the Maltese, by successfully resisting challenges to democratic rule on Malta, have protected and preserved their heritage for generations to come;

Whereas the Maltese endured tremendous suffering during their heroic struggle against Nazi and other fascist aggression during World War II, and were cited by President Franklin Roosevelt for their bravery and courage;

Whereas a free and democratic Malta is important to peace and stability in the central Mediterranean, a region of particular importance for the interests of the United States;

Whereas the Government of Malta has actively participated in, and made positive contributions to, environmental issues of global concern; and

Whereas relations between the Republic of Malta and the United States, which have been traditionally friendly, have become even closer and stronger in recent years: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress congratulates the people of Malta on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of independence of Malta.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, in my capacity as a Senator from the State of Arizona, the order for the quorum call is rescinded.

RECESS UNTIL 6 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, at the request of the majority leader, concurred in by the minority leader, the Senate stands in recess until 6 p.m. this evening.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 5:15 p.m., recessed until 6 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the President pro tempore.

RECESS UNTIL 7 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to a recess of the Senate until the hour of 7 p.m. today?

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6 p.m., recessed until 7 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the President pro tempore.

RECESS UNTIL 7:30 P.M.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to a 30-minute recess?

There being no objection, at 7:01 p.m., the Senate recessed until 7:30 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Will the Senator suspend and allow the Chair to make an announcement?

ANSWER BY JUDGE WALTER L. NIXON, JR., TO THE AMENDED ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT AGAINST JUDGE NIXON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submits to the Senate for printing in the Senate Journal and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the answer by Judge Walter L. Nixon, Jr., to the amended articles of impeachment against Judge Nixon, pursuant to Senate Resolution 127, 101st Congress, 1st session, and the unanimous-consent agreement obtained October 5, 1989, which answer was received by the Secretary of the Senate on October 11, 1989.

[In the Senate of the United States, Sitting as a Court of Impeachment]

IN RE IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE WALTER L. NIXON, Jr.

ANSWER TO AMENDED ARTICLES OF IMPEACHMENT

Judge Walter L. Nixon, Jr. of the Southern District of Mississippi, through his undersigned counsel, answers the amended Articles of Impeachment received by the Senate on Thursday, October 5, 1989:

ARTICLE I

Article I of the amended Articles of Impeachment alleges that Judge Nixon knowingly made a material false or misleading statement to a federal grand jury in Hattiesburg, Mississippi, on July 18, 1984, to wit, that Forrest County District Attorney Paul Holmes never discussed the Drew Fairchild case with Judge Nixon.

Judge Nixon states that his statement to the grand jury was, in fact, true and correct, and was not made with any intent to mislead, deceive, or give false testimony. Judge Nixon's only relevant conversation with Mr. Holmes concerned allegations by Wiley Fairchild that Mr. Holmes was blackmailing him, and there never was a discussion of the Drew Fairchild case between him and Mr. Holmes.

Judge Nixon states further that his responses to the prosecutor's question on that and other occasions were framed by his understanding, based on the prosecutors' statements, that their investigation concerned how Drew Fairchild's case was transferred from federal to state authorities; Judge Nixon had no knowledge of that transfer or how it occurred, never had any discussion or exchange with any individual on that subject until the investigation began, and understood questioning about the Drew Fairchild case to refer to that matter. Because this understanding also framed Judge Nixon's statements that are the subject of Impeachment Articles II and III, this paragraph of his Answer to Article I is hereby incorporated as part of the Answers to Articles II and III.

Judge Nixon states further that his conviction in court on this allegation was secured through the use of false and perjured testimony and by the suppression of exculpatory evidence, all in violation of basic fairness and the constitutional guarantee of Due Process of Law.

ARTICLE II

Article II of the amended Articles of Impeachment has been materially changed by the amendment. As amended, Article II alleges that Judge Nixon made material false or misleading statements to the grand jury on July 18, 1984, to wit, that he had nothing whatsoever officially or unofficially to do with the Drew Fairchild case in Federal court or state court, that he "never handled any part of it, never had a thing to do with it all, and never talked to anyone, State or Federal, prosecutor or judge, that in any way influenced anybody" with respect to the Drew Fairchild case.

Judge Nixon states that the allegation in Article II unfairly excerpts and takes his testimony out of context, and that the statements he actually made to the grand jury were true and correct and were not made with any intent to mislead, deceive or give false testimony. Judge Nixon was never involved in the Drew Fairchild case in any court and never handled any part of it as a judge, which is the meaning of his unexcerpted grand jury testimony.

The current allegation that Judge Nixon falsely denied that he had influenced any official concerning the Drew Fairchild case is materially different from the previous allegation, which was that Judge Nixon falsely denied that he attempted to influence any official concerning the Drew Fairchild case. The corrected allegation evidently refers to Judge Nixon's exchange with Forrest County District Attorney Paul Holmes about Wiley Fairchild's blackmail allegation. Judge Nixon had absolutely no reason to believe that he had influenced any official—in that exchange with Mr. Holmes or at any other time—concerning the Drew Fairchild case. Accordingly, Judge Nixon's testimony was truthful.

Judge Nixon states further that his conviction in court on an allegation similar to Article II was secured through the use of false and perjured testimony and by the suppression of exculpatory evidence, all in violation of basic fairness and the constitutional guarantee of Due Process of Law.

ARTICLE III

Article III of the amended Articles of Impeachment alleges that Judge Nixon has, through fourteen enumerated statements, raised substantial doubt as to his judicial integrity, undermined confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, betrayed the trust of the people of the United States, disobeyed the laws of the United States and brought disrepute on the Federal courts and the administration of justice by the Federal courts.

As a threshold matter, Judge Nixon denies that this allegation—except for the allegation that he disobeyed the laws of the United States—states an impeachable offense under the Constitution, and he will present a Motion to Dismiss those other aspects of Article III.

A. Article III(1)

This section alleges that Judge Nixon made seven material false or misleading statements when he voluntarily submitted to an interview by the United States Department of Justice on April 19, 1984. These statements include:

(A) That Judge Nixon never discussed with Wiley Fairchild anything about Wiley's son's case. This statement was true and correct and was not made with any intent to mislead, deceive or provide false information. Moreover, the substance of this statement is virtually identical to grand jury testimony by Judge Nixon that was alleged to be false in Count II of his indictment, on which charge Judge Nixon was acquitted by the jury.

(B) That Wiley Fairchild never brought up his son's case. This statement was true and correct and was not made with any intention to mislead, deceive, or provide false information. Moreover, the substance of this statement is virtually identical to grand jury testimony by Judge Nixon that was alleged to be perjury in Count II of this indictment, on which charge Judge Nixon was acquitted by the jury. In addition, the identified statement is virtually identical to the statement charged in Impeachment Article III(1)(A), and therefore this allegation is duplicitous and redundant and should be stricken.

(C) That at the time of the interview Judge Nixon had no knowledge of the Drew Fairchild case and did not even know Drew Fairchild existed, except for what the judge previously read in the newspaper and what he learned from the questions in the interview. This specification does not accurately describe or refer to the actual statements by Judge Nixon, which statements were true and correct and were not made with any intent to mislead, deceive or provide false information.

(D) That nothing was done or nothing was ever mentioned about Wiley Fairchild's son. This allegation refers to a statement that is so vague that it is not possible to determine when, where, or by whom Judge Nixon stated that nothing was done or mentioned about Wiley Fairchild's son. Such a vague and imprecise statement cannot be deemed a material false or misleading statement. To the extent that the substance of the statement can be determined at all, it was true and correct, and was not made with any intent to mislead, deceive or provide false information. The points raised in answer to Impeachment Article I, which concerns a very similar statement by Judge Nixon to the grand jury, are hereby incorporated in this Answer as well.

(E) That Judge Nixon had never heard about the Drew Fairchild case, except what he told the questioners in the interview, and certainly had nothing to do with the case. This allegation distorts Judge Nixon's acutal statement and omits material portions of it in a misleading manner. Judge Nixon's actual statement was true and correct and was not made with any intent to mislead, deceive or provide false information.

(F) That Judge Nixon had done nothing to influence the Drew Fairchild case. This statement was true and correct and was not made with any intent to mislead, deceive or provide false information. Moreover, the allegation of falsity is virtually identical to that alleged in Article III(1)(E), making this allegation duplicitous and redundant.

(G) State prosecutor Paul Holmes never talked to Judge Nixon about the Drew Fairchild case. This allegation does not accurately describe Drew Fairchild's statement, which was that Mr. Holmes did not discuss Drew Fairchild's case with Judge Nixon. Judge Nixon's actual statement was true and correct and was not made with intent to mislead, deceive or provide false information. The points raised in answer to Impeachment Article I, which concerns a very similar statement by Judge Nixon to the grand jury, are hereby incorporated in this Answer as well.

B. Article III(2)

This section alleges that Judge Nixon made seven material false and misleading statements during his grand jury testimony on July 18, 1984. Five of those statements provide the basis for Impeachment Articles I and II: the statement identified in Impeachment Article III(2)(A) is also the basis for Article I; and the statements identified in Impeachment Articles III(2)(D), (E), (F), and (G) are also the basis for Article II. Consequently, it is multipicitous, redundant and fundamentally unfair to include identical allegations in separate Impeachment Articles and Judge Nixon will submit a Motion to Dismiss these elements of Impeachment Article III on those grounds. With respect to those allegations in Impeachment Articles III(2) (A), (D), (E), (F) and (G), Judge Nixon hereby incorporates herein the same answers that are made in the Answers to Impeachment Articles I and II above. (Judge Nixon notes further that the allegation in amended Article III(2)(G) has been changed in a material manner to reflect accurately Judge Nixon's actual grand jury testimony, as is explained above in Judge Nixon's Answer to Article II.)

Article III(2)(B) alleges that Judge Nixon falsely told the grand jury that to the best of his recollection he did not know of any reason he would have met with Wiley Fairchild after the Nixon-Fairchild oil and gas investment was finalized in February 1981. This allegation distorts and misstates Judge Nixon's actual grand jury testimony. Judge Nixon's actual testimony was true and correct and was not made with any intent to mislead, deceive, or provide false information.

Article III(2)(C) alleges that Judge Nixon falsely told the grand jury that he had given it all the information he had and that he could, and that he had withheld nothing during his grand jury testimony. This testimony also was true and correct and was not made with any intention to mislead, deceive or provide false testimony.

FIRST AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

As an affirmative defense, Judge Nixon alleges that he was targeted for investigation and prosecution by executive officials who vindictively resented his ruling against the government in the Petit Bois Island condemnation case, United States v. 717.42 Acres of Land (S.D. Miss., 1981). Such targeting and vindictive prosecution of judicial officers who rule against the government is repugnant to the constitutional separation of powers between the executive and judicial branches, subjects all judicial officers to improper pressure to rule in favor of the government and against private citizens, and works a fundamental distortion of our system of justice.

SECOND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

As an affirmative defense, Judge Nixon alleges that the allegations against him were developed by executive officials who improperly coerced and induced witnesses to give false testimony, which false testimony has been knowingly introduced against him, in violation of Due Process of Law.

Wherefore Judge Nixon denies that any of the Articles of Impeachment states a valid basis for removing him from office under the Constitution and demands a trial before the full United States Senate as provided in the Constitution, Article I, Section 3.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M.; MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Thursday, October 12; and, that following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business until 11 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, it remains my hope that at 11, or as soon thereafter as the Appropriations Committee is able to report out the bill, the Senate proceed to consideration of H.R. 3385, an act to provide assistance to free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

Following discussions with the distinguished Republican leader, the distinguished Senator from Iowa, and others, what I hope to be able to propound to the Senate is a unanimous-consent request that we then debate that bill for 2 hours, following which a cloture petition would be filed by me; then we would proceed to the reconciliation bill until completion of the reconciliation bill; and then we would vote on the cloture petition on the Nicaragua appropriations measure.

We have not been able tonight to obtain consent to do that, but I hope we will be able to do so in the morning and be prepared to propound that request at or shortly after 10:30 in the morning. So if we are able to do so, it remains my intention to proceed in that manner tomorrow.

As I have indicated on several previous occasions Senators should be prepared for lengthy sessions tomorrow and Friday on the reconciliation bill, and, if need be, even beyond that as we attempt to complete action on that prior to October 15.

Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Republican leader at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I share the views expressed by the majority leader, and I think it is fair to say the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] objected, not because he has any opposition to reconciliation but he has concern about one specific provision which he hopes to discuss in the morning.

I am going to encourage him to do that before the 10 o'clock Appropriations Committee meeting because he will need to be there. So we might proceed at 11 o'clock with the bill first mentioned by the majority leader.

I indicate that the Senator from Alaska wanted me to voice for him further that he was not trying to frustrate what the majority leader wishes to do, and he certainly wants to cooperate.

So hopefully we can proceed as outlined by the majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I understand and appreciate that. The distinguished Senator from Alaska has been fully cooperative with me in every respect since I assumed this position. I hope he is able to get his questions answered so we can proceed as outlined tomorrow.

I want to thank all concerned, including the Presiding Officer and chairman of the Appropriations Committee who has agreed to call his committee together tomorrow to act in what we hope will be a prompt manner on the Nicaraguan legislation as it is my hope, as I have said many times, to bring that measure up and ultimately to gain its enactment.

RECESS UNTIL 10:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican leader has no further business, and if no other Senator is seeking recognition, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Thursday, October 12, 1989.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 8:24 p.m., recessed until Thursday, October 12, 1989, at 10:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, October 11, 1989

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Teach us, O loving God, to encourage others as they seek to be the people You would have them be and as they seek fulfillment in their lives. May not jealousy or pride or any selfish motive cause us to hinder another person and so deny them the respect and dignity that the entire human family deserves. May we so pray for our families, our friends, and our colleagues that they will receive those spiritual blessings that are Your gift to each of us. This is our prayer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. McCRERY] come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. McCRERY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR MOTION TO DISPOSE OF SENATE AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 2978, FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. MOAKLEY, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 101-275) on the resolution (H. Res. 262) providing for a motion to dispose of the Senate amendments to the bill (H.R. 2978) to amend section 700 of title 18, United States Code, to protect the physical integrity of the flag, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

PLACING BLAME FOR THE FAILURE OF THE COUP IN PANAMA

(Mr. McCLOSKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, this morning's news accounts are full of stories of the Bush administration's scurrying to place the blame for the Panama fiasco on anyone they can find. So far these scapegoats include the U.S. Senate and the failed rebels themselves. To their credit, they have not yet included Jimmy Carter or Mother Teresa.

I have urged the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. LES ASPIN, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, to conduct an immediate investigation of this whole flawed failed enterprise. It is obvious our policy formulation and intelligence capabilities were lacking, to say the least. It is good that no American lives were lost. However, this appears to have been an accident of serendipity, rather than conscious prudence.

We knew this was coming. We were involved. We covered some roads, but not others. We did not cover the ones with the Noriega troops. Panamanian lives were lost and their country suffers evermore. Let us do everything possible to get the answers on this one.

TRIBUTE TO DR. MARGARET WALKER ALEXANDER

(Mr. PARKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, today I stand in the Halls of Congress of the United States of America, to speak in honor of a great citizen of our country, Dr. Margaret Walker Alexander. Dr. Alexander exemplifies the characteristics that each of us as Members of this Congress would welcome the opportunity to share.

Mrs. Alexander has served her family, her country, and her people well. She has answered the unanswered question asked through out time, "Why does the caged bird sing." Dr. Alexander is the author of many books, including "For My People," "Prophets for a New Day," "Jubilee," and a biography, "The Daemonic Genius of Richard Wright." Her career as a published writer spans more than 50 years since she first appeared in Crisis magazine in May 1934. In 1935 Dr. Alexander received her bachelor of arts degree from Northwestern University. In 1940 she received the masters of arts degree and in 1965 a Ph.D. in English, both from the University of Iowa. Her novels, "For My People" and "Jubilee" became bestsellers. In 1954, she was a Ford Fellow at Yale University. She has appeared on the lecture platform reading her poetry and participating in symposia, seminars, and literary festivals throughout the Nation. As professor of English emeritus at Jackson State University, she founded and directed the black studies program—the Institute for the Study of History, Life and Culture of Black People—from its inception in 1968 until her retirement in 1979.

In the past 20 years, she has been the recipient of six honorary degrees and has received innumerable other awards, citations, certificates, and honors including a Living Legacy Award from President Jimmy Carter.

Her literary works appear in countless anthologies and textbooks throughout the international literary world. She appears in "Who's Who in America, "Who's Who in Southern Women," and "The Dictionary of Modern Literary Biography." She is a soldier who is on the battlefield, fighting for equality and freedom for all mankind, through her poetry and literary works.

UNITED STATES COMMITMENT TO HUMAN RIGHTS AND FREEDOM IN ETHIOPIA

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, the people of Ethiopia are some of the most gifted and innately intelligent people in the world. Ethiopia is one of the oldest cultures in the world. So we ask: Why should they be oppressed and held down?

Now there is hope for change. The regime of Mengistu, Ethiopia's Communist military dictator, is coming apart at the seams. Mengistu's army, the mainstay of his power, has just sustained his third major defeat in less than 2 years.

Opposition guerrilla forces are now within 120 miles of Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia.

But who is riding to the rescue? An article in Sunday's Washington Post reports that some of the administration's officials may favor upgrading diplomatic relations with Mengistu. I can hardly think of a more unwise move under the circumstances.

Mengistu allegedly has the worst human rights violation record in the world. Now is the time for the United States to not only talk but to act upon our commitment to human rights and freedom.

Let us back the democratic forces in Ethiopia. Let us back the people in Ethiopia.

Ethiopia will be one of the great nations of the world some day, and let us be on history's side.

WE MISSED THE CHANCE OF A LIFETIME TO BUST NORIEGA

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, America's drug war is nothing more than busting kids who go to jail and usually get raped, let us face it. When do we go after Mr. Big?

America imports now and drug smugglers bring in 60 metric tons of cocaine and 15 tons of heroin, and we are still busting kids.

Let us tell it like it is. Last week we had a shot, a chance of a lifetime, to bust Mr. Big, General Noriega, and to tell the truth, we got cold feet. We got wobbly knees, that is the bottom line.

Mr. President, if you are going to declare war on drugs, you cannot start by throwing in the towel. If Ronald Reagan were still President today, General Noriega would be in jail.

Mr. President, it is time that you take this matter to heart because Americans are wondering why a 12-year-old in New York can find heroin and our Government cannot seem to find it.

CONGRESS IS WAY BEHIND IN ITS CONSIDERATION OF BUDGET ISSUES

(Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment on the legislative procedure that we have followed for the past several months. I do not mean to be presumptuous in making this observation after only a few months as a Member of the body; however, there may be merit in commenting while still holding the objectivity of newness. I do believe that the people of this country are not well served by the process we've used.

Specifically, it seems to me that the idea of bundling hundreds of issues—which clearly deserve consideration on their own merit—into one-package issues is not a good legislative process.

To compound the problem, the Congress is way behind in its consideration of budget issues. This tardiness clearly brings on a time imperative that reduces the quality of debate and consideration.

Finally, it seems to me that if there were a real commitment to reach a balanced budget, we could do so. Of course no one wants to give up those programs which are closest to their individual hearts and districts. If forced, however, priorities can be set. Other legislative bodies do it and so could we if we had the will.

Mr. Speaker, our procedures are not in the best interests of the people of this country. We should change them.

A DISASTROUS WEEK FOR FOREIGN POLICY IN CENTRAL AMERICA

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this has been a terribly disastrous week for foreign policy in Central America, and it has been a disastrous week for American credibility in Central America.

We started out last Tuesday by the administration denying any involvement whatsoever in this coup attempt. They said:

> We did not instigate it; we did not participate in it, we did not do anything, and we did not have any capability or any signal that there was any capability to get Noriega from the coup plotters or those that eventually carried out the attempted coup.

But yet every day since then, more facts have come out from the same administration that gave us that first day's denial that showed that, ladies and gentlemen of this country, we have been lied to by this administration consistently since last Tuesday. It now turns out that they were offered Noriega and it now turns out that they had a helicopter waiting; it now turns out that they had blocked one of the access roads; it now turns out that they were going to give sanctuary to at least one or more of the families and/or the officers involved in this coup attempt.

What more lies can we expect before we get the truth?

Mr. President, the United States of America, its people, and the world demand the truth. We want to know once and for all why our foreign policy cannot be carried out and Noriega, one of the worst drug traffickers in the world, is still a free man.

It is on your shoulders, Mr. President, you are responsible.

H.R. 2887 PROVIDES FOR PREFERENCE OF U.S. OCEAN TRANSPORTATION OF U.S. GENERATED MAIL

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced H.R. 2887 to require the U.S. Postal Service to use U.S.-flag shipping exclusively for the ocean transportation of U.S. generated mail on trade routes where such service is available at fair and reasonable rates.

Mr. Speaker, my bill is consistent with the recommendations offered by the President's Commission on Merchant Marine and Defense, which suggested that one of the better ways for the Government to assist our ailing merchant marine is for the employment of U.S. vessels in the carriage of Government compelled or generated cargo.

Passage of H.R. 2887 is one small step in that direction and I urge my colleagues to support my bill with their cosponsorship.

GREATEST CASUALTY IN COUP ATTEMPT IN PANAMA WAS CREDIBILITY OF THE PRESIDENT

(Mr. TORRICELLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, Panama, the official word, October 3, the White House:

> We do not know who is involved here.

October 4, the White House:

> Our sources were not directly involved in the insurgency; we never have had direct discussions.

The State Department, October 3:

> Let me note very clearly the United States was not involved.

The State Department, October 4:

> We were not involved in the planning of this. We have no sense of their plans or their intentions.

October 6, the White House:

> There apparently was some direct contact.

October 8, Defense Department:

> The United States blocked some access roads because the coup leaders requested this action.

October 8, the Secretary of State:

> The President committed troops to block these roads because we were requested to do so.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said that in war the first casualty is truth. The greatest casualty in the coup in Panama was the credibility of the President of the United States, and the credibility of the United States is worth more than 100 Panamanian dictators.

In time of crisis, Mr. Speaker, the Members of this institution are prepared to follow the President of the United States, but first, he must be believed.

Perhaps there are Members of this institution who are prepared to follow whether the truth is spoken or it is not. But the American people are entitled to know the truth, to make their judgment and then to follow.

That is a standard for this institution and worthy of the presidency of the United States.

IMPRESSIVE CODEL LEADERSHIP

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I just returned from Brussels and Geneva, as a member of the Congressional Arms Observer Group lead by the majority leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT], and the cochairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD].

I want to praise the way those two gentleman handled this codel. We found very strong support for the President's position on the START talks and on the reduction of conventional arms in Europe.

It was absolutely amazing to me, and I think to all of my colleagues in talking not only to our negotiator but to the Soviet and East bloc negotiators, to find that they are really interested and sincerely concerned about reaching agreement. I came back from that trip and not only was very impressed with the leadership of our codel, but very confident that due to the leadership of President Bush, we will reach agreement in these very important areas.

BROADCAST INITIATIVE

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, last week the European Community took a step which threatens our ability to work together in the future. The European Community voted to limit one of our fastest growing and most successful exports. The 12 nations of the EC voted to limit to 50 percent the amount of American produced television programming which could be shown in the European Community. Programming exports have grown from $100 million in 1980 to $630 million last year. Banning American made programming on European broadcast stations, cable systems and satellite systems is not only unjustifiable, but blatantly discriminatory.

The European broadcast initiative is a clear indicator that the European Community does not believe in competition, and is willing to limit the choice available to television consumers in order to protect its own industry. Many of us had previously kept an open mind on the EC-92 initiative. If the broadcast initiative is a sign of things to come I fear we will be facing "Fortress Europe" with respect to trade. Our current trade problems with Japan will pale in comparison if the EC continues unchecked in this direction. It is time for all branches of our Government to work together in convincing the EC to reverse its unwise position.

As a result of this blatantly anti-U.S. action I am considering legislation which would bar the corporation for public broadcasting from purchasing television programming from any foreign country which limits U.S. made programming. Any support from taxpayer supported institutions in furthering the European entertainment industry is unacceptable as long as the EC broadcast initiative is in effect.

MARYLANDERS TAKE PRIDE IN THE MAGICAL SEASON OF THE BALTIMORE ORIOLES

(Mrs. MORELLA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, with the start of the World Series this week, the attention of the Nation is being captured by bay area baseball teams. Today, I rise to commemorate one such bay area team—not from the San Francisco Bay, however, but from Maryland's Chesapeake Bay—the Baltimore Orioles.

Two weeks ago, the Orioles completed their magical 1989 season with the greatest 1-year improvement of any pennant contender in major league history. Last year, the Orioles opened the season with a record 21 straight losses, finishing in last place. This year, a restructured Orioles team, under the sage tutelage of manager Frank Robinson, and led in the front office by president Larry Lucchino and general manager Roland Hemond, catapulted a collage of enthusiastic rookies, journeymen players, and a few seasoned veterans to an astounding 87 victories. In doing so, the team captured our hearts and imagination, demonstrated to us the wondrous effect of hard work and dedication to exceed all possible expectations, and allowed all Oriole fans to ask collectively "Why Not?" This was the Orioles slogan during this season.

I join my fellow Marylanders in saluting the 1989 Orioles. Just wait until next year. Perhaps, in Baltimore, at this time next year, there will be baseball played in October.

SPENDING OUR GRANDCHILDREN'S SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, the deficit for the next fiscal year, fiscal year 1991, is required by law to be $64 billion or less. Nevertheless, in just a couple of weeks we are planning to increase the Federal debt limit $250 billion which is intended to see us through fiscal year 1991.

Wait a minute. If the deficit is going to be $64 billion, why do we need authority to borrow $250 billion? Because the deficit we count is a big lie but, Mr. Speaker, the biggest part of the lie is the Social Security Trust Fund.

In 1990, the Government will mask $68 billion in spending using Social Security reserves. This number gets even larger in coming years. We are allowing the trust fund to guarantee our deficit spending.

In 1993, the year Social Security is supposed to come off-budget for Gramm-Rudman purposes, it will mask $103 billion in spending. Does anyone believe that Congress will actually allow it to go off-budget?

Mr. Speaker, Congress is fast becoming addicted to spending our grandchildren's Social Security benefits for current consumption because we lack the courage to face the deficit problem head-on and make the tough decisions on spending and revenue. And that, Mr. Speaker, is simply intolerable.

COMPREHENSIVE REVIEW OF LAWS AND PROGRAMS GOVERNING OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS DRILLING

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am announcing that the Subcommittee on Water, Power, and Offshore Energy Resources is initiating a comprehensive review of the Federal Offshore Oil and Gas Drilling Program. This review will include an extensive evaluation of the effectiveness of the current offshore oil drilling law.

Our investigation will begin with a series of field hearings, including one this Saturday, October 14, in Key West, FL, on H.R. 2945, bipartisan legislation to permanently ban offshore drilling in Federal waters off of south Florida and the Florida Keys.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Offshore Drilling Program has become paralyzed by political gridlock. During the 1980's, the main product of the program has been endless litigation and political conflict, not a sound energy policy as was intended by the 1978 amendments that I helped write to the OCS law.

The program has completely lost the confidence of the residents of coastal communities, State and local officials, and the Congress.

The result has been the passage of a series of 1-year congressional moratoria on offshore lease sales to ensure that environmentally harmful oil and gas development does not take place.

The administration is completing its own review of offshore drilling. Unfortunately, the independence of the task force established to conduct that review has been undermined by comments made by its chairman, Interior Secretary Lujan, that clearly indicate his vigorous support for offshore oil drilling. The bias of the President's task force increases the need for an independent review by Congress of the OCS Program.

CONGRATULATIONS TO SAN FRANCISCO

(Ms. PELOSI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise with great pride today to salute the National League champions, the San Francisco Giants, and on behalf of my colleague representing San Francisco, the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER]. I want to not only congratulate the Giants but recall to our colleagues' minds the fact that we rose earlier this year to salute the world champion Superbowl winners, the San Francisco '49ers. This, combined with the A's victory on the American League makes the San Francisco Bay area the undisputed sports capital of the world.

Not only that, but on Monday, the day of our victory, we received the good news that Dr. J. Michael Bishop and Dr. Harold E. Varmus of the University of California, San Francisco, had been awarded the Nobel Prize for medicine for their research for cancer. Appropriately, they celebrated by seeing the Giants' victory that day in Candlestick Park.

I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO], for the Tootsie Rolls, and look forward with great curiosity to the Michigan wine from the Cubs' fan, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON]. Wine in California will be a big amusement.

In addition to that, gentlemen from California [Mr. DELLUMS and Mr. STARK], now it is a question of where the victory party will be—at Jack London Square in Oakland or Fisherman's Wharf in San Francisco.

Mr. Speaker, San Francisco loves baseball, looks forward to the bay series, and congratulates Mr. Bob Lurie of the San Francisco Giants and Mr. Walter Haas of the Oakland A's for their success. We congratulate them for making the San Francisco Bay area the sports' capital of the world. May the better team win.

ADMINISTRATION'S TEAM FALLS SHORT ON PANAMA

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I came to the floor to address the House for 1 minute because I was watching as some Members took the floor to rail against the administration's Panama activities. Similar people railed against this administration when they were involved militarily in Central America. The same people who denied any American involvement militarily in Central America, I think have a tough time getting up and railing against the lack of military involvement at this stage. It sounds to me like a twist on an old proverb where you have the sheep this time in wolf's clothing.

That, however, is not to deny that some serious failure has occurred in Panama, that there has been a tragedy, and, frankly, this administration's team, which is composed of superstars, had better start acting like a team.

AMERICA'S AIRLINE INDUSTRY THREATENED BY CAPITAL VAMPIRISM

(Mr. DEFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, our once proud and competitive airline industry is being dismantled wholesale by leveraged buyouts.

These transactions were not triggered by poor management. The targeted airlines are well managed and profitable. These transactions are not triggered by a need to recapitalize, to expand, or to modernize our airlines. Not a penny of the profits is reinvested in new planes or facilities.

Plainly and simply, these leveraged buyouts are motivated by greed. They are symptoms of a new disease on Wall Street, capital vampirism, sucking the lifeblood, the planes, the equipment, the employees, out of the U.S. airline industry for some short-term gain for some Wall Street raiders.

The flying public is not protected in these raids. They should be. We must give the Secretary of Transportation explicit authority to approve, disapprove, or require modification of these takeovers. We should make certain there is no deterioration in safety or maintenance, we should make certain that the airlines will not be forced to sell off their vital assets to meet debt load, and we should make certain our airlines are able to compete and expand to meet the growing need for safe air travel.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members to join me in sponsoring legislation to slow down the wholesale dismantling of our airline industry.

UNITED STATES INTELLIGENCE IN PANAMA

(Mr. JOHNSTON of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JOHNSTON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I distinguish myself from my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who have criticized the Bush decision or nondecision last week in Panama, inasmuch as I agree with the final decision not to intervene. Unfortunately, the Bush administration arrived at this decision by default. Robert Kennedy said it best during the Cuban missile crisis that in Washington no decision is a decision.

Several months ago, we were faced with the same lethargy when Colonel Higgins was brutally murdered in Lebanon, the administration had no plan and there was no intelligence coordination.

Today, we have a former CIA director in the White House who did not consult the CIA. The Joint Chiefs of Staff did not even sit down together to discuss U.S. strategy.

How many death threats and coup attempts must we endure before the administration coordinates its efforts to act decisively? It's time we faced decisions squarely instead of backing into them. It's time we act on the strength of American intelligence rather than react out of ignorance.

ACID RAIN LEGISLATION SHOULD AWAIT RESULTS OF NATIONAL ACID PRECIPITATION ASSESSMENT PROGRAM

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, Congress would be penny wise and pound foolish if it were to enact prematurely on acid rain legislation before the National Acid Precipitation Program is complete.

In 1981, Congress initiated and authorized a 10-year study at the cost of $500 million involving three nations, Great Britain, Canada, and the United States, to study the effects of acid rain and to conclude that study by 1990. Now, I ask, should we waste half a billion dollars of taxpayers' money by enacting premature legislation?

Without the true facts, we could be destroying the coal industry in the United States. Coal, if used right, will be the energy of the future unless we want to continue to rely on more foreign oil and more foreign gas.

Mr. Speaker, let us not destroy the potential of America's natural energy resource with imprudence, misguidance, and political motive.

WHITE HOUSE SHOULD FOCUS ON PROBLEMS IN CITY OF WASHINGTON

(Mr. BRENNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, since last Friday, 29 people have been wounded in the District of Columbia.

Since last January 1, 353 people have been murdered in Washington.

Washington, DC, is the most important city in the world, yet it is the murder capital of this Nation.

The Bush administration wants to run elections in Nicaragua, it wants to make the rich in this country even richer by an urgent, top priority fight for them to pay less taxes, and it is excited about its Star Wars programs.

What does this say about their priorities?

I ask, why doesn't President Bush care about the wholesale murders of mostly black American citizens a few blocks from the White House?

What will it take to get the President involved in the city in which he lives?

If the same thing were happening in Potomac, Chevy Chase, Bethesda, or other plushy neighborhoods in this country, would the lack of response be the same,

I think that we all know that the response would be different, far different.

Yes, then there would be a sense of urgency, and deep concern about stopping the murders.

Mr. President, I ask, why don't you care about what is happening in the city in which you live? Why don't you try to do something about the unlivable conditions for American citizens just a few blocks from the White House?

UNITED STATES-MEXICO DEBT EXCHANGE AND BORDER DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1989

(Mr. BATES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, I recently introduced H.R. 3146, the United States-Mexico Debt Exchange and Border Development Act of 1989.

Mexico's economic difficulties are primary causes of recent, explosive population increases in border communities and growth in immigration of Mexican citizens into our country, both legal and illegal. The resulting problems include pollution, increased drug trafficking, and intense pressure on the Border Patrol along the world's most heavily traveled border.

This legislation seeks to alleviate some of these problems, acting as a vehicle for establishing programs to exchange the public debt of the Government of Mexico for development in the border region.

The recent visit of President Salinas, and increased awareness of the importance of our neighbor to the south, we, as Members of Congress, must demonstrate leadership and commitment in dealing with these problems in a nation so closely tied to our own. I urge the Members to cosponsor H.R. 3146.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION CHALLENGE GRANTS REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2087) to transfer a certain program with respect to child abuse from title IV of Public Law 98-473 to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Senate amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Child Abuse Prevention Challenge Grants Reauthorization Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. TRANSFER OF CERTAIN PROGRAM TO CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT ACT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 402 through 409 of title IV of Public Law 98-473 (98 Stat. 2197 et seq.) are—

(1) transferred to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.);

(2) redesignated as sections 201 through 208, respectively; and

(3) in the appropriate sequence, inserted after section 15 of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act.

(b) AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS.—With respect to amounts made available in appropriation Acts for carrying out the program transferred by subsection (a) to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, the transfer of such program may not be construed to affect the availability of such amounts for carrying out such program.

SEC. 3. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT ACT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by section 2 of this Act, is further amended—

(1) by redesignating sections 2 through 15 as sections 101 through 114, respectively;

(2) by inserting before section 101 (as so redesignated) the following new heading:

"TITLE I—GENERAL PROGRAM";

and

(3) by inserting before section 201 the following new heading:

"TITLE II—GRANTS WITH RESPECT TO ENCOURAGING STATES TO MAINTAIN CERTAIN FUNDING MECHANISMS".

(b) CROSS-REFERENCES IN TITLE I.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is further amended—

(1) in section 102—

(A) in subsection (c)(1)(A), by striking "section 4" and inserting "section 103";

(B) in subsection (e), by striking "section 4(f)" and inserting "section 103(f)"; and

(C) in subsection (f)(2)(E), by striking "sections 6 and 7" and inserting "sections 105 and 106";

(2) in section 104(b)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "section 6(b)" and inserting "section 105(b)"; and

(B) in paragraph (2)(B), by striking "section 105(a)(1)" and inserting "section 105(a)(1) of the Child Abuse Prevention, Adoption, and Family Services Act of 1988";

(3) in section 105—

(A) in subsection (a)(2)(A), by striking "section 7" and inserting "section 106"; and

(B) in subsection (b)(3), by striking "section 5" and "section 10" and inserting "section 104" and "section 109", respectively;

(4) in section 108—

(A) in subsection (a)(1), by striking "section 8(b)(10)" and inserting "section 107(b)(10)"; and

(B) in subsection (b), by striking "this Act" and inserting "this title";

(5) in section 109(b)(1), by striking "sections 8(b)" and all that follows and inserting the following: "sections 107(b) and 107(e) or receive a waiver under section 107(c);";

(6) in section 112(b)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "section 10" and inserting "section 109"; and

(B) In paragraph (2), by striking "section 9" and inserting "section 108";

(7) in section 113—

(A) in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by striking "this Act" and inserting "this title";

(B) in paragraph (1), by striking "section 3" and inserting "section 102";

(C) in paragraph (2), by striking "section 2" and inserting "section 101"; and

(D) in paragraph (9), by striking "section 4" and inserting "section 103"; and

(8) in section 114—

(A) in subsection (a)—

(i) in the first sentence, by striking "this Act" and inserting "this title"; and

(ii) in the second sentence—

(I) by striking "sections 5, 6, and 7" and inserting "sections 104, 105, and 106";

(II) by striking "sections 8(a) and 9 of this Act" and inserting "sections 107(a) and 108";

(III) by striking "section 7(a) of this Act" and inserting "section 106(a)"; and

(IV) by striking "section 8(f) of this Act" and inserting "section 107(f)"; and

(B) in subsection (b), by striking "this Act" and inserting "this title".

(c) CROSS-REFERENCES IN TITLE II.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is further amended—

(1) in title II, by striking "sections 402 to 409" each place such term appears and inserting "this title";

(2) in section 205(b)(1)(A)—

(A) by striking "section 2" and all that follows through "Treatment Act" and inserting "section 101"; and

(B) by striking "section 5" and inserting "section 204"; and

(3) in section 208, by striking "section 6(b)(1)(C)" and inserting "section 205(b)(1)(C)".

(d) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as otherwise amended by this Act, is amended in section 1(b), in the table of contents—

(1) by redesignating the items relating to sections 2 through 15 as items relating to sections 101 through 114, respectively;

(2) by inserting after the item relating to section 1 the following new item relating to title I:

"TITLE I—GENERAL PROGRAM";

and

(3) by adding at the end the following new items:

"TITLE II—GRANTS WITH RESPECT TO ENCOURAGING STATES TO MAINTAIN CERTAIN FUNDING MECHANISMS

"Sec. 201. Findings and purpose.

(a) SECTION 201.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 201—

(1) by striking all that follows through "The Congress finds that—" in subsection (a) and inserting the following:

"SEC. 201. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

"(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by inserting "PURPOSE.—" after the subsection designation.

(b) SECTION 202.—

(1) DEFINITIONS.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 202 by striking the section heading and all that follows through "As used" and inserting the following:

"SEC. 202. DEFINITIONS.

"As used".

(2) STATE.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 202 by striking out paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) the term 'State' means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, or Palau.".

(c) SECTION 203.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 203—

(1) by striking the section heading and all that follows through "The Secretary" in subsection (a) and inserting the following:

"SEC. 203. GRANTS AUTHORIZED.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary";

(2) in subsection (b), by inserting "PAYMENTS.—" after the subsection designation; and

(3) in subsection (c), by inserting "AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—" after the subsection designation.

(d) SECTION 204.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 204 by striking the section heading and all that follows through "Any State" in the matter preceding paragraph (1) and inserting the following:

"SEC. 204. STATE ELIGIBILITY.

"Any State".

(e) SECTION 205.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 205—

(1) by striking the section heading and all that follows through "Any grant" in subsection (a)(1) and inserting the following:

"SEC. 205. LIMITATIONS.

"(a) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any grant";

(2) in subsection (a)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by moving subparagraphs (A) and (B) two ems to the right so that the left margins of such subparagraphs are indented 6 ems; and

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking all that follows through "paragraph (1)" and inserting the following:

"(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B)"; and

(3) in subsection (b)—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) by striking all that follows through "No grant" in the matter preceding subparagraph (A) and inserting the following:

"(b) APPLICATION.—

"(1) REQUIREMENTS.—No grant"; and

(ii) by moving subparagraphs (A) through (C) two ems to the right so that the left margins of such subparagraphs are indented 6 ems; and

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking all that follows through "The Secretary" and inserting the following:

"(2) APPROVAL.—The Secretary".

(f) SECTION 206.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 206 by striking the section heading and all that follows through "Whenever the Secretary" and inserting the following:

"SEC. 206. WITHHOLDING.

"Whenever the Secretary".

(g) SECTION 207.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 207 by striking the section heading and all that follows through "The Comptroller General" and inserting the following:

"SEC. 207. AUDIT.

"The Comptroller General".

(h) SECTION 208.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 208 by striking the section heading and all that follows through "The Secretary" and inserting the following:

"SEC. 208. REPORT.

"The Secretary".

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR TRANSFERRED PROGRAM.

The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 203(c) by striking "There is authorized" and all that follows and inserting the following: "For the purpose of carrying out this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1989 through 1991, but in no event shall amounts so appropriated exceed $7,000,000 in any fiscal year.".

SEC. 6. AUTHORITY, WITH RESPECT TO TRANSFERRED PROGRAM, OF NATIONAL CLEARINGHOUSE FOR INFORMATION RELATING TO CHILD ABUSE.

The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101 et seq.), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is amended in section 104(b)—

(1) by striking "and" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2)(D) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) directly or through contract, identify effective programs carried out by the States pursuant to title II and provide technical assistance to the States in the implementation of such programs.".

SEC. 7. STUDY OF TRANSFERRED PROGRAM BY GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—With respect to the program transferred by section 2(a) to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, the Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study of the trust funds or other funding mechanisms established by the States pursuant to the program for the purpose of determining, for each State with such a funding mechanism—

(1) whether the amounts provided by the Federal Government under the program are the only Federal funds received by the State for child abuse prevention activities;

(2) if Federal funds received under the program are not the only Federal funds received by the State for such activities, whether receiving the Federal funds under multiple programs constituted an unnecessary administrative burden for the State, and if so, a description of the nature of the burden;

(3) the extent to which, in the fund, amounts received by the State from the Federal Government under the program, together with State funds contributed pursuant to the program, are commingled with other Federal and State funds, including a specification of the total amount contributed by the State to the fund and the percentage constituted by such amount; and

(4) the amount expended by the State from the fund for each of the activities authorized in the eligibility provisions of the program, the percentage of the fund constituted by each such amount, and the policies underlying the allocation among such activities of amounts in the fund.

(b) REPORT.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall, not later than September 30, 1990, complete the study required in subsection (a) and submit to the Congress a report describing the findings made as a result of the study.

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect October 1, 1989, or upon the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs later.

Mr. OWENS of New York (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCDERMOTT). Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BARTLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will not object, but will the gentleman please explain this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2087 is the Child Abuse Prevention Challenge Grants Reauthorization Act of 1989.

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is with continued reluctance that I support H.R. 2087. This program has been a considerable success in the past several years, such a success, in fact, that it has accomplished its mission fully in 48 of the 50 States.

H.R. 2087 provides two additional years of funding to determine the continued mission of the House Child Abuse Grant, so that Congress shall adopt appropriate legislation.

I do rise to support the Senate language in H.R. 2087, the Child Abuse Challenge Grants Act. I note the Senate made two modest improvements to the House bill which I believe are needed. First, the Senate included a $7 million cap on the amount of Federal funds that can be appropriated for this program. This is an improvement over the House bill which set the authorization for Child Abuse Challenge Grants at "such sums." The current fiscal year 1989 appropriation for this program is $4.7 million and 48 States have developed trust funds or other funding mechanisms to prevent child abuse as a result of the Child Abuse Challenge Grants Act.

I think it makes sense to enact a funding cap so that a message is sent to the States that the Congress believes this program has been successful in assisting the States to establish these trust funds but that States must continue to provide the strong level of support necessary to maintain child abuse prevention activities. It is my hope that the Appropriations Committee scrutinizes the need for these funds prior to determining appropriate amounts.

Second, the Senate added the U.S. territories and the District of Columbia as entities eligible to receive Federal funding under this program if they establish a trust fund or other funding mechanism for the purpose of preventing child abuse and neglect.

Finally, I am particularly glad that the Senate retained the House language to require the GAO to conduct a study to determine whether this legislation has a continued purpose or whether we ought to shift these funds into a different and related mission since the Federal Challenge Grant Program may well seem to have accomplished its original goal. This study should provide the Congress with the necessary data on how States spend the Federal dollar so that we can revisit this issue when the Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention and Treatment Act is considered in fiscal year 1991.

I think these improvements were necessary and with these comments I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous material on H.R. 2087, the legislation just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES TEMPORARY CARE REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1989

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2088) to revise and extend the programs established in the Temporary Child Care for Handicapped Children and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Senate amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Children With Disabilities Temporary Care Reauthorization Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. REFERENCES TO CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES.

The Temporary Child Care for Handicapped Children and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 5117) is amended—

(1) in section 203, in the first sentence, by striking "handicapped children" and inserting "children with disabilities"; and

(2) in section 205—

(A) by striking "working with handicapped" and all that follows through "families" in subsection (a)(2)(C), and inserting the following: "working with children with disabilities, with chronically ill children, and with the families of such children,"; and

(B) by striking "the term" and all that follows through "such term in" in subsection (d)(2), and inserting the following: "the term 'children with disabilities' has the meaning given the term 'handicapped children' in".

SEC. 3. STATE INTERAGENCY COORDINATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 205(a)(1) of the Temporary Child Care for Handicapped Children and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 5117) is amended—

(1)(A) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (D) as clauses (i) through (iv), respectively;

(B) in clause (iii) (as so redesignated), by striking "and" after the semicolon at the end;

(C) in clause (iv) (as so redesignated), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(D) by inserting after such clause (iv) the following new clause:

"(v) with respect to State agencies described in subparagraph (B), provide documentation of a commitment by all such agencies to develop a State plan for coordination among the agencies in carrying out programs and activities provided by the State pursuant to a grant under section 203."; and

(2)(A) by inserting "(A)" after "(1)"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) State agencies referred to in subparagraph (A)(v) are State agencies responsible for providing services to children with disabilities or with chronic or terminal illnesses, or responsible for financing services for such children, or both, including State agencies responsible for carrying out State programs that—

"(i) receive Federal financial assistance; and

"(ii) relate to social services, maternal and child health, comprehensive health and mental health, medical assistance and infants, or toddlers and families.".

(b) DEFINITION.—Section 205(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 5117c(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking out "and" at the end thereof;

(2) in paragraph (4), by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) the term 'State' means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands of the United States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, or Palau.".

SEC. 4. REPORTS.

Section 205(c) of the Temporary Child Care for Handicapped Children and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 5117) is amended in the second sentence to read as follows: "Such report shall include—

"(1)(A) information concerning costs, the number of participants, impact on family stability, the incidence of abuse and neglect, the types, amounts, and costs of various services provided, demographic data on recipients of services, and such other information as the Secretary may require; and

"(B) with respect to services provided by the States pursuant to section 203, information concerning the number of families receiving services and documentation of parental satisfaction with the services provided;

"(2) a specification of the amount and source of public funds, and of private funds, expended in the State for temporary child care for children with disabilities or with chronic or terminal illnesses; and

"(3) a State strategy for expanding the availability in the State of temporary child care, and other family support, for families of children with disabilities or with chronic or terminal illnesses, which strategy specifies the manner in which the State intends to expend any Federal financial assistance available to the State for such purpose, including any such assistance provided to the State for programs described in section 205(a)(1)(B).".

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 206 of the Temporary Child Care for Handicapped Children and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 5117) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by inserting before the period the following: ", and $20,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1990 and 1991"; and

(2) in the second sentence, by striking "Such sums" and inserting "Amounts appropriated under the preceding sentence".

SEC. 6. REVISION OF SHORT TITLE.

Section 201 of the Temporary Child Care for Handicapped Children and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 5117) is amended by striking "This title" and all that follows and inserting the following: "This title may be cited as the 'Temporary Child Care for Children With Disabilities and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1986'.".

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect October 1, 1989, or on the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs later.

Mr. OWENS of New York (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BARTLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I will not object because I strongly support this legislation, but I yield to the gentleman from New York to explain his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, the legislation under consideration today signals the continued significance Congress attaches to the protection of children's lives and welfare. These two programs add up to less than $12 million in appropriated dollars compared to the billions that we have committed to the savings and loan fiasco and the arsenal of unnecessary missile systems. The legislation is important to States whose budgets for children's programs continue to be squeezed, in part because of mistaken priorities at the Federal level.

Approximately 10 million children—10 to 15 percent of the population—have a chronic illness. Of these, about 1 million have a severe chronic illness. Of the total, about 96 percent live at home rather than in institutions. Families of children with disabilities are under increased stress. These families are twice as likely to experience separation or divorce. There is a significant relationship between child abuse and children who are developmentally disabled and we know that respite care programs work to reduce the number of children who are abused.

H.R. 2088, the Temporary Child Care for Children With Disabilities and Crisis Nurseries Act of 1989, continues a demonstration grant program to the States to assist public and private agencies and organizations in alleviating the social, emotional, and financial stress among families of children with disabilities. The legislation provides crisis nurseries for children who are abused and neglected, or at risk of abuse and neglect, including families who are receiving child protective services.

I should note for the record that the Senate amendments to the House bill expand the term "State"—for funding eligibility—certain territories and possessions of the United States, including American Samoa.

I want to praise Mr. STEVE BARTLETT, the ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Select Education, for supporting an increased authorization for this program.

The Child Abuse Grant Program was originally enacted in 1984 to encourage States to adopt child abuse prevention funding programs, such as children's trust funds which some States had previously established. These prevention funds are State governmental entities which help communities assume responsibility for the prevention of child abuse by providing needed expertise and funding. Since Kansas established the first children's trust fund in 1980, 49 States have set up some form of specially designated child abuse prevention fund eligible for Federal challenge grants. Despite the relatively low level of funding for this program—one Federal dollar for every $4 raised by the States—Federal funds have leveraged important resources and activities, allowing States to provide more services in a greater number of communities than would have been possible with State revenues alone. Resources, however are still inadequate to meet the needs. Each year, State prevention funds are unable to support thousands of qualified programs. The director of the Wisconsin Children's Trust Fund reports that only 20 percent of total requests are funded. The first request for proposals under the New York State Children and Family Trust Fund attracted 418 applications from service providers, totaling $27 million, but the $2.25 million available allowed for was allocated for that State's trust fund against $1.6 million in requests from proven community based primary prevention services. In some States, the funded grantees run as low as 8 percent of the eligible applicants.

President Bush has continued the practice of the past administration in not requesting funds for this program. Once again, the Congress sends a clear bipartisan message that it is unconscionable to withhold the small but critical Federal dollars from this program at this time when child abuse continues its dramatic rise. Between 1981 and 1986, reports of child abuse and neglect increased by more than 90 percent. In both 1986 and 1987, more than 1,100 children died from abuse or neglect, resulting in an average of three child abuse deaths every day.

H.R. 2087 reauthorizes a State formula Child Abuse Prevention Grant Program for 2 more years and transfers the Child Abuse Challenge Grant Program as a new title IV of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. The Senate amendments to the House-passed bill places a cap of $7 million that can be appropriated for this program.

I urge the quick passage of these critical children's programs, and I include the following material:

NEEDED NEW NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF EDUCATION TO HELP CURE THE NATION'S EDUCATION ILLS

(By Authur E. Wise)

At last month's education summit, President Bush and the nation's governors agreed to set national goals in seven areas: the readiness of all children to start school; the performance of students on international achievement tests; the reduction of dropout rates; the functional literacy of adults; the level of training necessary to guarantee a competitive work force; the supply of qualified teachers and up-to-date technology and the establishment of safe, drug-free schools.

Addressing these concerns—which include some of the most intractable problems in American education—will require strengthened effort on the part of educators and students. Solutions may also mean reallocating existing resources or tapping new resources.

But effort and money alone will not be enough; if they were, the problems would not be so longstanding or so pervasive. New alternatives—new knowledge and new products—will also be necessary. A major source of fresh ideas and techniques can be federally sponsored research and development—provided that the federal educational-research apparatus is overhauled.

With the House Subcommittee on Select Education set to begin hearings soon on the reauthorization of the Education Department's office of educational research and improvement, the time is ripe to mobilize research in seeking cures for the nation's education ills. Taking the summit's proposals as its starting point for these hearings, the Congress should move to replace the current research structure with mission-oriented institutes, each directed at a major educational goal or problem.

Research and development is one of the clearest education responsibilities of the federal government. The reauthorization hearings for O.E.R.I. typically involve abstract discussion of the relative emphasis to be given to basic research, applied research, development, improvement, and dissemination. Or they concern the extent to which the federal government should conduct its research through field-initiated proposals, programmatic research, centers, labs, contracts, nationally planned reforms, and locally initiated reforms.

The hearings sometimes focus on topics to be covered, such as teaching or learning. Ocassionally, they consider the relative merits of psychological, sociological, or economic inquiry. But rarely do they directly engage the nation's educational problems or goals.

The existing structure, that is, is not mission-oriented. O.E.R.I. is currently organized by function: Its agencies include the fund for the improvement and reform of schools and teaching, office of research, programs for the improvement of practice. The office of research itself is organized by area; education and society, higher education and adult learning, learning and instruction, and schools and school professionals. This structure does not create a clear set of targets for research. As a result, the enterprise lacks accountability.

And over the last two decades, the federal government has been systematically disinvesting in educational research. According to the General Accounting Office, the federal investment declined by 70 percent in real terms between the early 1970's and the late 1980's.

As the nation embarks on a restructuring of the education system, it will discover that sound new knowledge and well-tested products are in short supply. It will also find that many of the proposed "solutions" to current problems have no theoretical or empirical grounding. Is school-based management, for example, compatible with externally imposed goals? What are the consequences for students of introducing market incentives to schools and their staffs? Will more measurement of skills create the intellectual capital needed to drive the postindustrial economy?

If the nation's schools must change, our leaders should direct those changes on the basis of established knowledge and well-tested alternatives. Otherwise, schools will change but will not improve. And they will waste resources in poorly grounded efforts simply to do things differently.

Incremental change in the educational-research structure will not do if America's leaders are seeking non-incremental change in schools.

Let us envision a new set of research institutes to be created by the Congress and to be called, perhaps, the "national institutes of education."

As the allusion in this title suggests, one model for such a reorganization of educational research might be the National Institutes of Health. In recent years, the Congress has established new institutes, such as the National Cancer Institute, only to address specific diseases—that is, specific problems. The N.I.H. has grown in importance as the Congress, researchers, and other interested parties have interacted about health issues and research breakthroughs. Congressional hearings concerning the N.I.H. deal less with functions, ways of doing business, or disciplines than with diseases to be cured or problems to be solved.

Each new institute increases the overall activity and impact of the N.I.H., and creates new sponsors, advocates, and constituents, including but extending well beyond members of the medical and the medical-research communities.

Organized in an analogous fashion, the federal structure for educational research could help crystallize thinking about the needs of our schools.

The seven concerns identified by the summit's participants represent one potential set of "missions" on which to found national institutes of education. Several other groups have suggested perspectives that, while differing in some particulars, reflect a large area of consensus about the nation's education problems. Examples of such analyses include outlooks offered recently by the National Academy of Education; the newly formed Business Coalition for Education Reform; Ernest L. Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching; the nation's governors in their agenda for the summit; and Congressional Democrats in their proposed list of national goals.

The imminent reauthorization discussion should focus on these configurations of problems and goals, with a view toward establishing five to seven mission-oriented institutes.

Right now, the nation spends over $300 billion a year on education; the federal government currently spends about $22 billion. Some have suggested that a federal research budget on the order of 1 percent of that figure—$220 million—might be a reasonable target. With a budget of this size, five institutes could be funded at $40 million each. In fact, there is already an institute within the Education Department—but outside O.E.R.I.— functioning at approximately this level; the National Institute of Disability and Rehabilitation Research.

A few other features would round the system out. The institutes should conduct programmatic research and development. But so that the creativity of the field is fully tapped, each institute should also set aside 15 percent of its budget to be separately managed in a field-initiated-studies program of about $30 million. Research centers, operating at $1 million or $2 million a year, could be dedicated to one institute or could serve several. Regional laboratories could help their regions focus on the institute missions.

A "headquarters" could coordinate activities across the institutes. It might, for example, manage center and lab competitions. Headquarters would also balance the ways of doing business, ensuring that there would not be unnecessary duplication.

Not only the organization of the N.I.H. but also those of the National Science Foundation and the newly restructured National Center for Education Statistics might suggest ways of holding the institutes to their emphases, once selected. Once the first institutes are launched, they ought to be around for a long time. As new problems or opportunities emerge, the Congress could consider creating additional institutes.

The renaming—and appropriate reorganizing—of O.E.R.I. as the national institutes of education" would connote serious and sustained federal attention to the nation's most serious education ills.

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving the right to object, I rise in strong support of the Senate language of H.R. 2088, the Temporary Handicapped Children's Child Care and Crisis Nurseries Act. The Senate only made one minor change from the House bill which allows the District of Columbia and the U.S. territories to be eligible for funds under this program.

H.R. 2088 continues demonstration grants to the States to assist private and public organizations in providing respite care to families who have a disabled child. The House passed this legislation on July 11, 1989. Respite is a needed service for parents and families of children with disabilities and it is a program that will ultimately save the taxpayer millions of dollars.

While the reauthorization of $20 million for fiscal year 1990 and fiscal year 1991 is a dramatic increase over the current appropriation, I believe this cost is a small Federal investment in order to keep disabled children in the home and community. Without the availability of respite care, the other alternative for parents is out-of-home residential placement. This alternative currently costs the Federal Government approximately $8.5 billion annually and has negative consequences for the parents, for the disabled child and for the taxpayer.

Respite care is a service that provides parents with severely disabled children an occasional break from the needs of those children. Providing this service is good for the parents; good for the family; good for the disabled child; and, good for the taxpayer.

I strongly support this legislation and urge the House to pass H.R. 2088.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous material on H.R. 2088, the legislation just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2990, DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2990) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, and that the report and Senate amendments be considered as read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of Friday, October 6, 1989, at page 23664.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include therein extraneous material on the conference report and amendments in disagreement on the bill, H.R. 2990.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present the conference report on H.R. 2990, the fiscal year 1990 appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies. The conference agreement provides a total of $156,746,000,000, of which $113,326,000,000 is for mandatory programs and $43,420,000,000 is for discretionary programs whose spending levels are set through the annual appropriations process. The total discretionary funding provided is $2.3 billion above the 1989 level and $1.3 billion above the President's 1990 request. By Department, the conference agreement provides $6,728,000,000 for Labor; $124,803,000,000 for Health and Human Services; and $24,153,000,000 for Education.

I am pleased to inform the Members that this conference agreement stays within our 302(b) allocation for discretionary programs and, further, that we were able to achieve this without an across-the-board reduction of any kind. We have reserved $1,667,000,000 in budget authority and $73,000,000 in outlays, which will be required to fund the antidrug abuse initiative and child care legislation, if it becomes authorized.

Of the 177 amendments considered by the conferees, only 1 remains in disagreement and that relates to Federal funding of abortion. The House bill includes language identical to current law which allows Federal funding for abortions only when the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term. The Senate bill contains additional language extending the circumstances for Federal funding to include rape and incest. The President has indicated that he will veto the bill if the Senate language is retained. At the proper time I will offer a motion to insist on the House language in this matter.

I will not take time to describe the specific agreements on the many programs contained in the bill. But I would like to highlight just a few areas. The agreement provides $8,580 million for biomedical research, which is an 8.1 percent increase over 1989. Over the years, our subcommittee has been convinced of the great benefits of investing in biomedical research, a belief reconfirmed over the weekend with the news that two cancer researchers, who have received $18 million in NIH funding, were awarded the Nobel Prize in medicine.

Another area of special interest is the increase we were able to provide for chapter 1, compensatory education for the disadvantaged. The chapter 1 total of $5,425 million for 1990 is $855 million above the 1989 level—a record increase of 18.7 percent.

The conference agreement includes $6,175 million for student financial assistance, which is an increase of $361 million over the 1989 funding level. This amount includes $131 million specifically to deal with the shortfall in 1989 Pell Grant funds. With this addition and with a series of legislative changes made to reduce costs in 1990, no linear reduction should be required. The maximum grant is retained at $2,300.

I should also mention that although we felt constrained to defer to the Senate's position reducing 1990 funds for State legalization impact assistance grants, the conferees did restore this funding for 1992, a year in which State outlays are expected to be higher.

I would like to take this opportunity to clarify the intent of the conferees with regard to the Refugee and Entrant Assistance Program. The statement of the managers referring to the setaside of 10 percent of targeted assistance funds for highly impacted areas contains a printing effort. The statement should read "including secondary migrants who entered the United States after October 1, 1979" rather than October 1, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, the full conference agreement is described in the statement of the managers accompanying the conference report, which includes a detailed table with appropriate comparisons. The agreement was printed in the RECORD of October 6, 1989. We believe that this is a good bill—a good compromise between the House and the Senate. We urge the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker. I include the following statement:

H.R. 2990—LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS BILL

The paragraph on Conference on H.R. 2990 has reported the FY 1990 Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Bill. The President's senior advisors would recommend that the President sign this bill provided it does not contain the Senate language in section 204 concerning abortion.

The Administration finds unacceptable the Senate's attempt to expand Federal funding for abortion beyond cases where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term. In a letter dated August 2, 1989, regarding the District of Columbia Appropriations Bill, the President stated that he would veto a bill language permitting use of appropriated funds for abortions other than those where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term.

The House is urged to insist on its position so that the President can be presented a bill that he can sign.

□ 1110

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 2990, the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990.

This is the fourth conference report the Appropriations Committee brings to the floor of the House this year, and in my opinion, it is the most important one. If they gave a Nobel Prize for good intentions, this bill would be a shoo-in. It may not do everything for everyone, but we do our best.

If this bill has a target, it is the things we hold dear: Jobs, families, health, and education. It worries about our children, and about our grandparents. This is the bill meant for the neighbor next door, which says there is a level of dignity and opportunity that everyone in this country deserves.

It is never an easy job to work out the differences between the House and Senate in this bill, all 177 of them, when there are so many compelling interests.

That job becomes harder and harder because of the spending restraints that are the current reality. The conference report provides $156.7 billion, $14 billion over last year. That sounds like a lot of money, but listen to this. Of that total, just $43.5 billion is discretionary, that is, only one quarter of the money in this bill is controllable. The rest, we either appropriate or they take us to court.

In the controllable area, the increase is $2.3 billion over last year, $362 million over the House-passed bill and $1.1 billion below the Senate.

There is an increase in line with inflation, no more, no less. No real growth. So if some programs get real increases, others get real decreases.

And it is really even more difficult. The outlay ceilings we must meet do not support the full inflationary increases, so a lot of the increases here are for programs that will not spend the money until next year. Those are the cards we are dealt.

But within that overall picture, using what we had available, this bill makes some significant contributions to meeting legitimate needs.

Let me tick off some of the high points:

For low-income energy, $1.393 billion, an increase of $10 million over last year, the first increase in 4 years, and $293 million over the President's request;

For chapter 1, compensatory education for the disadvantaged, the cornerstone of equal educational opportunity for our school children, $5.425 billion, an increase of $354 million over the President, and $856 million over last year;

For Student Aid, $6.175 billion, $361 million over last year; although we have had to make some changes in the program to save money;

For Head Start, $1.405 billion, $170 million over last year;

For mental health research, $419 million, $65 million over last year, a great help for the schizophrenia and brain research initiatives in this great time of the decade of the brain;

For AIDS, an estimated $1.541 billion, $319 million more for AIDS than last year;

For the homeless, $178 million, an increase of $99 million over last year; and

For retraining workers hit by plant closings, $470 million, an increase of $186 million over last year.

Let me also tick off some of the points of concern:

For the State Alien Legalization Assistance Program, we had to rescind $555 million in 1990 funding, and restore it in funding for 1992;

For drug abuse funding, we have postponed most of the major funding increases until we take up the drug bill in the Transportation bill;

□ 1120

For NIH, while we have provided a significant increase, $539 million over last year, for a total of nearly $7.7 billion, I do not believe we have provided as much as is required to fully maintain the momentum of research. That is of particular concern, coming after the news that two California researchers received the Nobel Prize in Medicine for their work on cancer.

Before anyone takes this money to the bank, though, I warn them of two things. First, absent extraordinary developments in Congress, a sequester is coming on October 16. Because other committees have fallen months behind in passing a reconciliation act, all the appropriations accounts are now in danger of taking an across-the-board cut.

Second, we still have the drug bill, where the Senate has proposed across-the-board cuts to pay for additional drug funding. So the road ahead is not completely clear. But, as for this bill, it is ready to cross the finish line a winner. We are within the 302(b) allocation. The administration is just about on board. It will sign the bill, if, and only if, the House position on abortion prevails. We'll have that vote later.

I want to congratulate the chairman, BILL NATCHER, with whom I have worked on this bill since 1981. If this bill deserves a Nobel Prize, then BILL NATCHER deserves an Oscar.

I also want to thank the new Senate chairman and ranking Republican, Senators HARKIN and SPECTER.

And I also want to thank majority staff and minority staff for all of their hard work.

Mr. Speaker, let's put the pedal to the metal and get this bill where it belongs, on the President's desk.

I am sorry that we are going to have a big issue from the people on the abortion issue, because those are the same people that made out like bandits in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, Chairman NATCHER has already provided the details of the conference report, but let me provide a few highlights.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

For the Labor Department, the conference agreement provides $6.728 billion, $170 million over the fiscal year 1989 level, and $153 million over the administration's request. For the discretionary programs, that's an increase of $297 million over the fiscal year 1989 level, and $152 million over the request.

The major part of that increase is for programs under the Job Training and Partnership Act where we provide a $243 million increase to $3.971 billion. That total includes $709 million for the summer yough program, $813 million for the Job Corps, and $470 million for dislocated workers under the new legislation enacted last year. We continue the trade adjustment assistance program at $284 million and the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit at $25 million. Within the Women's Bureau, we increase the amount for model demonstrations, including the Displaced Homemakers Network by $700,000.

For one of the most important programs operated by the Department, title V, Community Service Employment for Older Americans, the conference agreement provides $362 million, an increase of $18 million over the fiscal year 1989 level, and $26 million more than the administration requested. This program works very well in my home District and across the Nation in helping seniors remain productive in their communities.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Regarding discretionary programs within the Department of Health and Human Services, the leading concerns continue to be funding for energy assistance, AIDS, and biomedical research.

I am proud to announce that for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, the conferees approved $1.393 billion, an increase of $10 million from last year and $293 million over the budget request. After a long and difficult battle, we were able to increase LIHEAP for the first time in 4 years. This amount will continue to help low-income people with their energy bills this winter.

LIHEAP prevents people from being evicted from their homes and is good, strong preventive medicine against homelessness and illness.

For AIDS control, the conferees provide for $1.54 billion, an increase of $319 million from last year. Within this amount, $30 million was included to expand the AZT/AIDS-related drug program. With the proven effectiveness of AZT in prolonging the lives of HIV-infected people, it is imperative that we extend Federal assistance for low-income people. At the same time, the manufacturer of the drug must share responsibility in making AZT more affordable and accessible for low-income people. Even with the recent price cut, the drug remains prohibitively expensive for almost all patients.

The conferees included $20 million for AIDS home health services and $1.5 million for subacute care. These new programs will assist HIV infected patients who are not acutely ill and help to integrate their medical and social needs on an outpatient basis. By providing for outpatient services, these programs will prevent expensive, unnecessary hospitalization of asymptomatic patients.

For biomedical research at the National Institutes of Health, the conference allocated $7.68 billion, which is $538 million more than last year's level. This includes additional funding for NIDDK research on diabetic kidney disease and NINDS research on dystonia and neurogenetic diseases. Sufficient funds are also provided to complete the next major phase of the Child Health/Neuroscience building and $2 million is available for a new intramural program in diagnostic radiology at NIH.

Mental health research received a healthy increase of nearly $30 million from the budget request to $419 million. In the coming Decade of the Brain with exciting new discoveries being made in the biological basis of behavior, mental health research stands poised to make the critical breakthroughs in treatment and cure of many of the most debilitating mental illnesses, such as schizophrenia, Alzheimer's disease and Huntington's disease.

The conferees agreed upon $3.5 million for new outreach activities for potential Supplemental Security Income recipients particularly for the elderly. The Social Security Administration will take the lead on this new program and is encouraged to include a combination of direct services and contract service with organizations such as the existing network of area agencies on aging and the Administration on Aging.

For the homeless programs at HHS, we have provided expanded funds for this urgent problem. Under HRSA we included $34,115,000 for homeless health care with $11,885,000 forward funded into fiscal year 1991. Mental health State grants for homeless will get $28,096,000 and mental health demonstration projects will receive $6,100,000; these programs will provide much needed help for the homeless mentally ill. Substance abuse demonstration projects will be funded at $9,545,000, more than double last year's amount. Community service grants for the homeless will receive $21,959,000 with $8,041,000 forwarded into fiscal year 1991. All together these programs will begin the difficult task of caring for the homeless and to find ways to bring these people back into the economic and social mainstream of our society.

At the Centers for Disease Control, we have appropriated $1.1 billion including $4.5 million for disability prevention, a program I started 2 years ago and which now deserve additional funds for expanded activities among the States. In addition, we are providing more funds to combat Lyme disease, a difficult and sometimes deadly disease to recognize, but is readily treatable.

Family planning programs are funded under Health Resources and Services Administration at $141 million, $2,680,000 more than last year's level. This will continue family planning clinics and assistance to low-income families.

The new Medical Effectiveness Program has received $32 million to begin to conduct research on the treatment regimens that are both efficacious and appropriate for a particular disease. Insight into the best treatments will help to improve our reimbursement policy and help to guide practitioners into providing optimal care across the country.

The Community Services Block Grant program, a vital program for many small communities across the country, will receive $323,630,000, which is $5,000,000 more than last year. CSBG deserves more but at least this amount will keep many services flowing to towns, especially in economically depressed regions.

We have funded Head Start, a program that helps our children to get a strong start in their education, at $1.405 billion a significant increase from last year's level of $1.235 billion. We expect that $50 million of these funds be available to increase Head Start teachers' salaries, which have lagged far behind comparable wages for other instructors.

With the coming of the Decade of the Brain, an initiative I sponsored and recently signed into law by President Bush, funds are provided within OASH to establish with the National Academy of Science/Institute of Medicine a symposium event to bring together scientists and physicians and to discuss potential initiatives in the neurosciences.

No funds are provided or to be used for the reorganization of the Public Health Service regional offices, prior to approval of a reprogramming request. This means HHS can no longer even think about a reorganization on Government time.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

For the Education Department, the conference report contains $24.153 billion, the highest funding level ever, $1.4 billion over the fiscal year 1988 level, and $328 million more than the administration requested.

I am particularly proud of increases for two programs within the $5.425 billion provided for chapter 1—the $6 million increase we were able to give the Capital Expenses Program, and the nearly $10 million increase that we were able to provide for the Even Start Program. The Capital Expenses Program helps to bring chapter 1 services to nonpublic school children, and Even Start reaches out to the very young and their parents so that the learning experience can begin at home for children of parents whose own education may not have left them literate. I started the funding for both of these programs last year, and look forward to continuing them in the future.

I am also pleased that we were able to restore most of the reduction in Impact Aid payments for "b" children that the administration had requested.

For the school improvement programs, the bill is $15.7 million over the fiscal year 1989 level. Included in that total are increases of $286,000 for the inexpensive book distribution program, $442,000 for arts in education, and $1.9 million for the national diffusion network.

The conference agreement increases funding to $4 million for the Comprehensive School Health Education Program authorized and funded for the first time last year, and directs the Secretary to establish the new Office of Comprehensive School Health Education. This is a very important program both in terms of our fight against drugs, and in terms of providing a well-rounded education to our young people.

I am particularly proud of another item in the Secretary's Fund for Innovation—a new demonstration program to begin to deal with underachievers or slow learners. The agreement provides $3 million for this new initiative designed to help young people who are simply being left behind by our current educational system. The new demonstrtion program would fund a number of projects around the country to find innovative ways of reaching and motivating these young people on an individualized basis.

The conference agreement also increases funding for vocational and adult education programs by $62 million over the fiscal year 1989 level, for a total of $1.136 billion. We were also able to increase handicapped education and rehabilitation services by $122 million and $131 million, respectively. In a move that will have major consequences in the disabled community, we were able to nearly triple the funding for the technology related assistance program, and provide $1 million for descriptive video services for the blind.

For student aid, we propose increases for Pell grants, supplemental grants, and income contingent loans. Because of a major misestimate by the administration in the cost of the Pell grant program, we were forced to provide $131 million in supplemental funding for the current school year in order to avoid having already received grants being cut. Additional funds are also expected to be necessary for the 1990-91 academic year, and we have added $286 million in a contingency fund. Unfortunately, we have been forced to achieve some savings in the fiscal year 1990 Pell grant program, and legislative changes are also contained in the conference agreement.

For the other major student grant program, supplemental educational opportunity grants, the agreement provides $465 million, including an increase of $27 million over last year's level. It is my hope that this increase will go a long way toward helping those needy students who depend so heavily on grant assistance to be able to attend. Clearly, the conferees recognize that the SEOG Program—which has been free of abuse throughout its history—has the potential for playing an even greater role in helping needy students attend college.

For the categorical higher education programs, the conference agreement provides $632 million, for an increase of $67 million over the fiscal year 1989 level. Among the programs funded in this account is the TRIO program—special programs for disadvantaged students. We provide a $25 million increase, for a total of $245 million. In addition, the conferees have directed the Secretary to use $7 million of the increase to fund an additional 25 unfunded, but approved, from those submitted in the recently completed upward bound competition.

Also included in this account is the international education and foreign language program, for which we have provided a $9 million increase. I am pleased that included in this increase is $1 million specifically targeted on critical languages, where we are so lacking in our schools and colleges. The Secretary is directed to use this $1 million and work with the Secretary of Defense, using whatever funds he may have available for this purpose, to develop a program of critical language study that can help us meet the need and the demand.

For the remainder of the graduate and professional programs, the conference agreement provides $71 million, a $4 million increase over fiscal year 1989, including a $3 million increase for a new cohort in the graduate assistance in areas of national need program.

For college housing and academic facilities, we provide $30 million, an increase of $360,000 over the fiscal year 1989 level.

The conference agreement also contains an $18 million increase in support for education research and statistics, and nearly level funding for the library programs.

For Gallaudet University, the National Technical Institute for the Deaf, and Howard University, the conference agreement also provides increases. And, to ensure equality of treatment among the 3 institutions, while at the same time ensuring that the Federal subsidy reflects reality of need, the conference agreement directs the Secretary to institute a 50-percent tuition surcharge for foreign students desiring to attend these landmark institutions.

RELATED AGENCIES

I am pleased that the conference agreement provides increased funding for the valuable programs operated by the ACTION agency and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, as well as increases, as necessary, for the 18 remaining related agencies.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like the Members of the House to know that it is a distinct honor and privilege for me and all of the members, not only on the subcommittee, but on the full committee, to serve with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], who is not only the ranking minority member on the subcommittee, but the ranking minority member on the full Committee on Appropriations.

There has never been anyone in the House of Representatives, Mr. Speaker, any Member down through the years, from the first day, March 4, 1789, who was more concerned about the health of our people and the education of our children than my friend, SILVIO CONTE.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky. I really appreciate his kind remark.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EARLY].

Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the committee, for yielding time to me.

I wish to engage the distinguished chairman in a brief colloquy concerning funds in the conference agreement for nurse training programs. Mr. Chairman, the conference agreement includes $1 million for loan repayment for nurses for shortage area service. It is my understanding that these funds are for new loan repayment programs for nurses for service in underserved areas as authorized by Public Law 100-607, including section 716 of said act. Is that correct?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. EARLY. It is also my understanding that the Health Resources and Services Administration is to use a portion of these funds to initiate a loan repayment program pursuant to section 716 of Public Law 100-607. Is this also the chairman's understanding?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. I would like to say to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, that Mr. CONTE and I and all of the other members of this subcommittee enjoy serving with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EARLY]. On Saturday when they announced the two scientists who had won the Nobel Prize for medicine, I thought first of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Since the gentleman has been a member of the Appropriations Committee and all down through the years, no member of this committee has been more concerned about and worked harder in behalf of biomedical research and for the National Institutes of Health, and we appreciate it.

Mr. EARLY. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky and also my good friend and colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], for putting together a bill that is really the best that was available. It is the best for all the people, the poor, the middle class, everyone. I just want to thank both of them and say it is a pleasure to serve with them.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me congratulate both the distinguished chairman of the Labor-HHS Appropriations Subcommittee and the distinguished ranking minority member for a very fine bill under very difficult circumstances.

I rise for the purpose of colloquy with the chairman on the issue of the role of part-time students in the Pell Grant Program.

Mr. Chairman, am I correct in my understanding that according to a recent report by Education Secretary Cavazos, the majority of less than half-time students work full time, are enrolled in 2-year public colleges, not proprietary schools, and are working for an associate's or bachelor's degree: In other words, most less than half-time students are serious students who deserve our encouragement and support?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], that the changes adopted by the conference related to the Pell Grant Program were in response to an immediate need for funds to avoid linear reduction in these awards, both in academic year 1989-90 and academic year 1990-91.

If these changes are not agreed to, Pell grants would be eliminated or reduced for more than 1.4 million students.

These changes, including the restriction on part-time students, are effective only for fiscal year 1990 and do not imply a decision by the committee to permanently exclude less than half-time students.

This situation, Mr. Speaker, is described in detail on pages 39 and 40 of the conference report.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman for that statement. I would like to make one other point.

Am I correct that the Comptroller General has been asked to review the administration's estimating procedures so that radically revised cost estimates, which occurred this year and resulted in cost-cutting measures such as the action on Pell grant eligibility, might not have to occur in the future?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the gentleman from New York that he is correct.

Before the gentleman from New York concludes, on behalf of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and the members of our subcommittee, we want to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN]. Ever since the gentleman has been a Member of Congress he has diligently worked with the committee on this bill, and we appreciate it.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Kentucky for those kind words, and just want to say to the gentleman that I understand the very difficult circumstances under which he has been laboring. Again I want to express my appreciation for all the gentleman has done for the Congress and the country.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, which is the authorization committee.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 2990, the fiscal year 1990 appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. As ranking Republican of the Committee on Education and Labor, I want to commend Chairman NATCHER, the ranking member, Mr. CONTE, and the members of the Labor-HHS-Education Subcommittee, for having so successfully defended the priorities of this House in the vital policy and programmatic areas encompassed by this bill. Moreover, I believe they should be further congratulated for having achieved this success within the constraints set forth by the fiscal year 1990 budget resolution's tight 302(b) allocations.

The Appropriations Committee and this body once again expressed their steadfast commitment to the funding of elementary and secondary education programs. And, as one who has always viewed ESEA's chapter 1 as the backbone of the Federal effort to help all disadvantaged students in school, I was especially pleased to learn how well the conference report supports chapter 1's various programmatic components. Not only was the House's mark for chapter 1's basic grants well defended, but it is clear that our conferees fought to preserve a substantial increase in the funding level of one particularly important chapter 1 component, Even Start, which should permit the program to expand throughout the Nation during our new fiscal year and deal with the illiteracy problem as an intergenerational one which it is.

When this bill was initially considered by the House, I thanked the Appropriations Committee for making what I thought was truly an exceptional gesture. The bill, as you may recall, contained a provision permitting the initial funding, through modest transfers of ESEA chapter 1, part A resources, of two of President Bush's key educational initiatives: the Presidential Merit Schools and the Magnet Schools of Excellence. The only condition imposed for the transfer of the resources needed to launch these two initiatives was that they had to be authorized by the Congress prior to the end of next February.

I was also pleased to see that even though the Senate had deleted this provision from its version of the bill, our conferees had preserved it in the conference report. This action preserves the incentive the respective authorizing committees need to act on the President's educational initiatives and I hope our committee can write these two programs to benefit those most in need, and authorize both.

The conference report also makes it clear, Mr. Speaker, that thanks to the agreements reached by our conferees, two key postsecondary education programs—the Pell Grant and Stafford Student Loan programs—have been provided with levels of resources conforming to recent reestimates of need. In this context, I would also like to express my appreciation to our conferees for preserving almost 95 percent of the House's mark for another vital postsecondary program, Graduate Assistance in Areas of National Need.

Pending enactment of H.R. 1300, which raises Head Start's fiscal year 1990 authorization level to $1.552 billion and would have permitted funding the program at the $1.485 billion level requested by the President, our conferees provided the next best thing by funding Head Start at the current fiscal year 1990 authorization ceiling of $1.405 billion. Given the broad and strong support this program has always enjoyed in the House, I believe our conferees should also be commended for this effort.

□ 1130

Again I thank the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], and I thank the ranking member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank him and say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that since he has been a Member of Congress, not only on the Committee on Education and Labor but on all legislative matters pertaining to our bill, he has worked with us, and we appreciate it.

You know, I had the honor of serving in this House with the gentleman's father.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself and other members of the subcommittee we just want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 2990. I wanted to take a couple of moments to express my deepest appreciation and, I think, the appreciation of all of us who represent States which have had a significant impact as a result of the Immigration Reform and Control Act, and that impact has been a large number of undocumented people who have come out of the shadows into the legalization program under the legislation, the glue for which was a section of that law appropriating for 4 straight fiscal years, starting with fiscal year 1988, $1 billion to reimburse the States and the local governments for the costs in the area of education, in the area of health care and in the area of public assistance that would come as a result of this particular act.

That section was the glue that held this act together. The other body, unfortunately, chose to take some of the fiscal year 1990's appropriation money that was supposed to be appropriated for use any time between the passage of that law back in 1986 and 1994 and appropriate it for specific purposes.

The House did not do such a thing.

In conference committee, with the tremendous constraints and pressures on the budget, that money was used. But thanks, particularly, to the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking minority member of the subcommittee as well as the Senate conferees, the legislation makes clear that this $555 million will be reappropriated in fiscal year 1992, still in time to be utilized for the very important purposes which that money was originally appropriated for.

We did make a commitment to the States and local governments that were going to be impacted by the legalization program. We are talking about English language education, talking about emergency health care costs, talking about public assistance kinds of programs, the critical programs to deal with the 1.8 million people who came forward on the regular legalization, well over 1 million who came forward on the seasonal agricultural worker program.

I cannot tell you how much I appreciate, and I think my colleagues in California and a number of the other impacted States, appreciate the fact that this conference report remains true to that commitment, reappropriates those funds for fiscal year 1992 for the purposes originally intended by the Immigration Reform and Control Act, and to ask my colleagues who are from those States to recall what the Senate did this past time, what the other House did in this particular appropriation, and will undoubtedly come back in fiscal 1991, and we should be wary and eternally vigilant because there will be other pressures to try to take these funds as well.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman and the ranking minority member for their support.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the dean of the Congress is the gentleman from Mississippi, our chairman of the full Committee on Appropriations [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. Speaker, our chairman not only serves as chairman of the full Committee on Appropriations, but as we know, Mr. Speaker, he is chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture of the Committee on Appropriations.

In addition thereto, he serves as a member of all 13 of the appropriations subcommittees.

At all times, not only during the hearings on our bill but at the markup of the bill, and at all times when we need all kinds of help, Mr. Speaker, we receive it from our chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

At this time it is a distinct privilege to yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, may I say to my friend that I shall make a report in the RECORD of the present situation insofar as our appropriations bills are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time to congratulate the other subcommittee members and in particular, the chairman of the subcommittee. We have served together many, many years. I do not know anyone who has better standing with the Congress and with the public than the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

On the other side of the aisle we have Mr. CONTE, the ranking Republican of the committee and this subcommittee who has also done a great job.

SERIOUS FINANCIAL SITUATION

Mr. Speaker, we face at this time perhaps the most serious situation in finances that any nation ever faced. We have a debt that has increased from about $900 billion to over $3 trillion in 9 years. All these things that we think we have saved which show a surplus on trust fund balance sheets have been loaned to the General Fund for use in the operation of the Government. Even with all of these problems that we face and will continue to face as long as we do not realize we live in a competitive world, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], and the members of his subcommittee—and I am proud to be on it—have seen to it that from the funds available we have looked at, and provided for those programs which should come first.

I want to mention just a few of the many important programs and projects covered in the bill before us, the details of which have been covered by Chairman NATCHER.

Funds are provided for the National Institutes of Health which include those seen searching for cures for cancer, AIDS, heart and blood diseases, respiratory disease, and the many other institutions; for education—higher, secondary, vocational, and adult; for community and senior colleges, for Head Start, the handicapped and disadvantaged, for nursing education and other special groups; funds for fighting drugs and drug abuse for low-income energy assistance; funds for the Job Corps and job training assistance; for black lung and many, many other programs, all of which were described in detail by the chairman, BILL NATCHER.

Most of those programs appear in this bill.

APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE RECORD

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations did a great job, not only in my opinion, but as proven by the record.

Since 1945 the Appropriations bills have been $187,628,827,000 below the President's requests.

During the Reagan administration, the committee has been $16,147,670,000 below the President's requests in total.

Since the Budget Act was signed in 1974, entitlements and mandatory spending have grown from $124,000,000,000 to $583,000,000,000—4.7 times.

When the Budget Act was signed, 46 percent of the budget bypassed the committee—now 56 percent bypasses the committee—an increase of 21.7 percent, leaving a balance of only $157.5 billion of budget authority for domestic discretionary programs out of a budget of $1,329,400,000,000.

Under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, without any additional revenue, every entitlement dollar increase has required a discretionary dollar decrease.

This year, through June 27, we have over 4,500 requests from our colleagues in support of matters of importance to their regions.

WHAT HAS CAUSED THE PROBLEM

What has happened is that through commitments, by entitlements, and by entering into contracts that have to be paid we have tied the hands of your Committee on Appropriations. Unless it is stopped or held back, sooner or later you are going to fix it to where we cannot recommend to you the programs that must be funded in order to continue having a nation worth protecting. However, if that happens, it will be my recommendation that we recommend funds for those programs and let you propose cutting them out instead of us because of the budget ceiling which is unrealistic and a Budget Act which is doing opposite to what it was created to do.

□ 1140

May I repeat again, that these entitlements have increased over fourfold, which comes at the expense of what we can do for 4,500 requests by our colleagues, not for them, but for the section that they represent.

I would also like to point out that since we started meeting local problems with national programs, our national wealth—our material wealth—has increased 41 times since 1934 and since 1941 has increased, may I say, 36 times.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his commiserations over the existence of these entitlements that are driving spending in this country, but I have a question for the distingushed chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Has the gentleman brought to the floor of the House, within the last year, the last 5 years, the last 10 years, at any time, a recommendation that we stop the entitlement programs?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, may I say I have not, but neither has the Committee on the Budget contested these increases, as I understand.

However, I will tell the gentleman within the limits that are possible, not only has the committee done a great job, but particularly this subcommittee because it handles most of the real programs for the American people.

May I say also that we are going to have to wake up to the fact that we live in a competitive world. We cannot let the foreign countries send all they have to our country without ruining our domestic market. Not only that, we have to go back and compete in world markets and restore a favorable balance of trade. I realize the gentleman from California has some different ideas than me, but I work where the work goes on.

May I say again, we had 4,500 requests from our colleagues, not for themselves, but for sections of the country they represent.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with all the seniority and dignity the gentleman brings to this House, if the gentleman would come to the floor of the House and recommend that we eliminate entitlement programs, or reduce them or modify them, that recommendation would have an impact that would startle this institution and might surprise Members and be adopted. I wait for the time when the gentleman does that.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out we are not the problem as a CBO analysis, which has been provided to every Member, shows. We can recommend, but only you can pay.

CAUSES OF THE DEFICIT

The Congressional Budget Office has prepared a table showing the causes of the deficit compared with the congressional budget plan for the fiscal years 1981 through 1988.

It is important to note that it is not the Appropriations Committee that has been a significant cause of the increase in the deficit. On average, the appropriations bills have been above the budget resolution by $2.3 billion compared to a total average deficit increase of $43.6 billion. In nearly every instance this increase has been caused by supplemental needs which were not anticipated by the Budget Committee or the Appropriations Committee.

There are three primary causes for the increase in the actual deficit over the assumed deficit, none of which is caused by the Appropriations Committee. These three categories together comprise 90 percent of the problem.

First. Economic reestimates: This is by far the largest contributor to the increase in the deficit. In any discussion of deficit and budget reform, a majority of the attention should be focused here, as unexciting as this category is. On an average percentage basis, this category has amounted to over half of the problem, 53.9 percent.

Second. Technical estimates: This is the second largest category of difference between the assumed and actual deficit. On average, this category has contributed $9.4 billion a year to the increase in the deficit, or 21.6 percent. Again, real budget and deficit reform will have to deal with this category.

Third. Entitlement/direct spending: This is the third largest category and the only major category contributing to the increase in the deficit which can be directly attributed to legislative action or inaction. This category, on average, contributed $6.3 billion to the increase in the deficit over what was assumed in the budget deficit, or 14.4 percent.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my distinguished friend for his service, not only on this subcommittee but on the subcommittee that he is chairman of, the subcommittee that provides the money for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce, one of the great Members of the House, Mr. Speaker, and it is a distinct honor for me to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and also for those kind words.

I commend the gentleman from Kentucky for this bill. It was a very difficult bill to put together, a very large bill, but primarily in addition to other things that have already been said here, I want to say something about drugs.

I was with the former Secretary of Education, who is now the drug czar, Secretary Bennett, all day yesterday and part of the day before at meetings in Iowa. Drug education and rehabilitation, of course, is a part of the war on drugs. A good share of the drug education and rehabilitation is handled in this bill.

Rehabilitation is one of those things that is very difficult to define and takes many approaches because it involves so many local groups which have differing ideas and differing problems to respond to. It involves so many possible programs. However, the gentleman conducts these hearings every year, extensively, and secures volumes of testimony, as to the extent that aid is needed and can be given to help accomplish the objectives of this war on drugs. So this bill also contains money that is very important for a different aspect than law enforcement, and I commend the gentleman for what he has done, and also on research, on chemical substances, alcohol, and those aspects of the drug problems. I commend the gentleman on the bill that he brings before us today. I think it is the best that we can do under the circumstances this year. I certainly will vote for the bill.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Here in the Chamber with Members today is the distinguished gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS]. I would just like the Speaker and all the Members to know how much we appreciate the gentleman's help with our bill each year. He is not only one of the best Members of the House, he, as a successor in the chairmanship of his committee to our friend, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS], has performed in an excellent manner, and I would like the gentleman to know how much I appreciate the help he gives me each year and our subcommittee.

The gentleman has performed well always and helped Members with our bill. I just want the Members to know that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KOSTMAYER].

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question about which I am puzzled. I got a telephone call a couple of hours ago from the people who run the county prison in my district, Bucks County Prison in Pennsylvania. They told me that the prisoners are applying for Pell grants, which is perfectly OK. They are eligible for Pell grants. But apparently, when they are awarded a Pell grant, they also get a living expense allowance, a uniform figure now of about $300 per year. The inmates in the Bucks County Prison are now receiving $300 year as part of a Pell grant living expense allowance.

Unless I am wrong, and I may be wrong, and I hope I am wrong, this is happening not only in Bucks County, PA. It is happening to lucky Federal, county, and State prisoners all across the country and has been, just for the last fiscal year, fiscal year 1989, according to the people of the committee with whom I have spoken on the telephone or with whom members of my staff have spoken. This apparently then is an accurate reflection of what is happening.

Now, it is my understanding that, and again I may be wrong, it is too late to make a correction in the law because it is the conference report we will be voting on in a few minutes.

I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, if there is some way we can avoid this happening for another fiscal year?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I have no information at all in regard to the statement just made by my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania. However, I would like the gentleman to know that in the extension of my remarks I will place the answer in the RECORD today. I want the gentleman to know that I have no information at all and none from the staff on our side.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's response, and again I hope I am wrong, but my staff has spoken to the committee staff, and the committee staff has told me that this may in fact, be the case.

Therefore, while I appreciate the gentleman from Kentucky being willing to place the answer in his extension of remarks, it does not seem to me that that necessarily solves the problem.

Now, it may be that we have to introduce a separate statute, and I am prepared to do that.

I am wondering, and I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky or the gentleman from Massachusetts, is there not a way to avoid this from continuing any longer, if, in fact, it has been going on for the last fiscal year? I am told by authorities at the Bucks County Prison that their inmates are currently receiving this $300 as part of their Pell grant, and of course, the prisoners, scholars all, are now lining up to make themselves eligible for the Pell grants.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman to know that as far as we on this side are concerned, that is not the intention of the subcommittee members. It is not our intention.

I have just inquired to the staff I have with me here today. They know nothing about this.

I say to the gentleman that is not the intention of our subcommittee, and the gentleman will receive a full answer in the RECORD today, and not only that, this will be one of the first matters we take up with the Department downtown when they appear back before our subcommittee.

I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

□ 1150

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding.

Let me just say that this comes as just an outrage to me. But one way we can start to expedite this right now is this: there is a law in this land called the Solomon amendment. That is the effective law, and it says that anyone who is not registered for the draft is ineligible for any kind of college grants or loans, including the Pell grants and including the $300 per month.

I would suggest that the ranking member and the chairman of the subcommittee contact the Education Department and have them immediately set in motion a plan to check those prisoners because we will find that 90 percent of them are not registered for the draft, and, therefore, they would be ineligible for this.

Mr. Speaker, let us start by implementing it in that way, and then we can go after the gentleman's legislation, which I would like to cosponsor.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to add further to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KOSTMAYER].

Here in this country we have about 3.1 million students who are eligible for Pell grants. The maximum at this time to be received under this bill is $2,300. If we had our way, Mr. Speaker, it would be $4,000.

Certainly, with the amount being $2,300, we on this subcommittee and on the full committee, I would say to the gentleman, are not in favor of the situation that has just been described to the House.

I want to add further that after talking to the Department, it is our understanding that this problem has come about because of an amendment to the basis law under the 1986 Higher Education Amendment. Prior to that law, such payments were prohibited by regulation. The 1986 amendment, section 478(a) in particular, restricted the Secretary's authority to ban such payments. We understood the authorizing committee in looking into this matter or they should.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further to me, I just want to say that obviously I know the gentleman from Kentucky does not favor this, and I understand the gentleman from Kentucky was unaware of it. I was unaware of this until just a few hours ago, so I share any blame. I want to thank the gentleman for pledging his cooperation. I commend him on the outstanding job he has done on this legislation, just as he has done in so many years past.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this comes as a surprise to me, too, but I just want to point out that $300 a month times 12 months is $3,600 a year, and they only get $2,300 total for tuition and everything, so there is something wrong here.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is he upset because somebody called him from the Bucks County prison because they say they are not going to get a Pell grant as a result of this?

Mr. KOSTMAYER. No. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, my call did not come from a prisoner; it came from the warden, who is upset because the prison is not able to collect these funds. The prisoners are not required to turn over the money to the prison. I do not think the prisoners should get it at all. It would be better if they turned it over to the prison authorities, but I do not think they should be getting these living expenses.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I think this whole Higher Education Act is going to be reauthorized next year, and that would be the place to direct your attention.

Here is what's in the bill. Our committee fell short on the $2,300 Pell grant, and in order to try to make up for that shortfall, we put some restrictions in here, and one of the restrictions is that the bill removes from eligibility students who are attending on a less-than-half-time basis. I thought maybe that is the reason they are getting a little upset, because they are going to get wiped out since they are not on a full-time basis.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further to me, I had called the committee staff and I had asked the committee staff before I came over here whether this was possible. They said, not only is it possible, it is happening. So the gentleman is right.

Mr. CONTE. Yes.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. That is what I am concerned about. I appreciate the cooperation on both sides. Obviously nobody knew about this. I did not know this was happening. I am not here to criticize. I just think that we ought to take care of it immediately.

We cannot amend the conference report. The conference report is what we are about to vote on. I do not know if we can wait very long. We have to do something about it as soon as possible, and I know the gentleman agrees with me on that.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, we may have a continuing resolution coming up on some other bills here. I am sure we are going to have one. At that time my suggestion is that the gentleman could put in an amendment stating that no funds shall be used for this purpose.

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's response.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it has been stated several times that we are about to be voting on this conference report in just a couple of minutes, and this is, I think the gentleman believes, contained in that conference committee report.

Mr. CONTE. No, no. It is not contained in the report. The conference committee provides the money for Pell grants. We are not the authorizing committee. It was the authorizing committee that passed the law that made them eligible.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. So this is not the proper vehicle in which to remove this $300?

Mr. CONTE. Right. We could do it, though, not in this bill or this conference report, but in a bill when reauthorization comes up, or if we want to put in a limitation on expenditures on a continuing resolution, as we sometimes do. We could provide that no funds shall be used for this purpose. That could be put in a continuing resolution, and there will be other appropriation matters.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. And the gentleman will look into that?

Mr. CONTE. Certainly, by all means. This is the first time I have heard of it.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman indicated that we do provide in this bill that there would be no funds available for those who are attending only part time or half time?

Mr. CONTE. This bill removes the eligibility for students who are attending on a less-than-half-time basis.

Mr. CLINGER. And it is very likely, I would think, that prisoners would not be able to attend full time?

Mr. CONTE. Right. I thought that was what generated the call.

Mr. CLINGER. In that case the problem may be addressed in the bill, if in fact it would exclude prisoners who obviously were not going to school full time?

Mr. CONTE. That is exactly right. That is why I asked the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCDERMOTT). The Chair wishes to inform the Members that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] has 2 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute for a short statement from the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I think that it is very appropriate for the authorizing committee, which I happen to head, to commend both the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

A year and a half ago we passed the School Improvement Act, which was a landmark bill and which, I believe, will go a long way toward removing the disparity between the literate and the illiterate in our country and bring us into the 21st century.

I think the conference report before us amply implements that School Improvement Act. Everybody talks about education, but very few do anything about it. I think the Committee on Appropriations, under the able leadership of these two gentleman I have mentioned, has gone a long way toward improving American education.

The President has indicated that he would like to be known as the Education President. I believe this conference report will give him an ample opportunity, in signing it, to become certainly worthy of that designation. I would hope that this report is overwhelmingly adopted, and that we go on to implement it. We cannot do it overnight, but we need to be starting in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report redirects us and points us in the right direction, and I certainly commend the two gentleman responsible for it.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield my remaining time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FLAKE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FLAKE] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my commendations to the committee for the conference report, which I will support today.

However, I do raise one point, and that is in relationship to the 1990 appropriations for those students who are part time and who are receiving Pell grants. I would ask that the committee make sure that in its future appropriations beyond the 1990 year it returns these moneys.

I think it is important for those persons who have an opportunity to share academic and work experience to get a head start in terms of developing their understanding of the workplace and for those persons who have raised their children in many instances and are working to have an opportunity to go back to school.

Mr. Speaker, I offer my support for the bill and ask the chairman of the subcommittee that we might have an opportunity to work together in this next fiscal year to assure that these moneys are returned.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report.

I want to commend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] for his excellent work on this legislation, and I want to also commend the gentleman from Massachusetts for his efforts, as well as the staff of the subcommittee—they do excellent work as well.

Most significantly, I want to point out the importance of considering these conference reports separately. It is essential that we at least get these spending bills to the President as separate measures if we cannot send them on time.

Mr. Speaker, there is not enough money to go around to take care of everything in this bill, but I believe the conferees have done a pretty good job.

The National Institutes of Health will be able to move forward in the next year with a continued strong research program—not every penny they could use, but all things considered not a bad allocation.

Impact aid is far from receiving the amount necessary to compensate schools for the cost of educating federally connected students, but a decent increase is included in this bill.

There remains, however, a problem with refugee funding—the States will again be forced to shoulder more of the burden of what should be and is a Federal obligation.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees had to make hard choices, but they made good choices. A whole range of vital programs—including library construction, the targeted jobs tax credit, and others have been addressed responsibly in this bill.

I urge all Members to support this conference report, and to see this bill to the White House as quickly as possible.

And I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining nine conference reports will be on this floor post-haste. Another continuing resolution would be unconscionable. And I hope the President will make it clear that he will not tolerate one.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report for fiscal year 1990 Labor, Health and Human Services, Education Appropriations, while stating strong reservations about a number of provisions within the measure.

At this late stage in the fight against AIDS, it is no secret that those who are sexually active outside of a monogamous relationship are at higher risk of AIDS. This being fact, and in the absence of curative drugs to treat AIDS, prevention remains our primary public health strategy.

Thus, it is essential that the Federal Government continue to support effective and targeted information campaigns among the people who are at greater risk. Yet the conference report contains a provision which could undermine this public health effort.

The provision provides that Federal funds not be used for materials that are designed and intended solely for the purpose of promoting or encouraging sexual activity of any nature. It is not the role of the Federal Government to encourage sexual activity, but it should be made clear that Federal funds under this act are to be used to support the development and distribution of materials that prevent transmission of HIV through targeted messages.

The provision includes an additional subsection that states that AIDS educational materials and programs should be designed to provide accurate and effective information to foster changes in behavior necessary to prevent the transmission of HIV infection. Implementation of this provision will require that the CDC issue new guidelines that more appropriately reflect the intent of Congress, and to discard the old, inappropriate guidelines now in use.

In addition, the failure of the conference report to specifically earmark funds for AIDS research by the National Institutes of Health and the Alcohol, Drug Addiction and Mental Health Administration is unwise. In the past 7 years, I have frequently seen the Public Health Service forced to take money from one important effort to pay for another with more political cachet. The President's budget request regarding AIDS research was determined on the basis of the professional judgment of the scientists in the relevant agenices. They operate under a 1-year funding cycle which makes long-range planning difficult. The lack of earmarking for AIDS research could make planning even less certain.

I would also like to express my concern about the provision which delays the eligibility of part-time students for partial Pells grants. This language eliminates financial aid to the fastest growing segment of the college population, hurting thousands of low-income working students.

In 1986, Congress removed a longstanding discriminatory provision from the higher education law which made less-than-half-time students ineligible for Pell grants. Since the deletion of this unfair provision, over 160,000 Americans have gained access to financial aid for bettering their job skills and employment opportunities. I urge my colleagues to encourage and support these hard-working students by insuring that the provision within this year's appropriations bill applies only to the designated fiscal year of 1990 and is not included in future measures.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I commend the conferees and the chairman for this conference report. Their hard work and attention to the complex issues associated with advancing the health of our citizens and educating our next generation is gently appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the level of AIDS-related spending at the Public Health Service [PHS]. This appropriations bill includes $753 million for AIDS-related research at the National Institutes for Health [NIH] and $218 million for research on AIDS-related mental health and substance abuse problems at the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration [ADAMHA]. This level of funding for AIDS-related research is vital to our Nation's continuing efforts to respond to the challenge of this devastating epidemic.

AIDS is not like other diseases. It is caused by a new virus and it is spreading. The HIV epidemic is a public health emergency. At the same time that we continue our ongoing commitment to fund quality basic biomedical research on such critical illnesses as diabetes and Alzheimer's disease, we must respond with highest priority to the HIV epidemic as our most pressing public health threat.

Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased with the inclusion of the Cranston language which clarifies how prevention money can be spent by the Centers for Disease Control [CDC]. The days of the highly restrictive and harmful Helms language are finally over and CDC should move quickly to issue new guidelines in keeping with the spirit of the Cranston language.

Unfortunately, the budget agreement does not allow this bill to do all that needs to be done. In the next year much more attention needs to be directed to the issues of care and treatment—particularly early medical treatments which have now been shown to prolong health and delay or prevent the onset of illness in people with HIV infection. We have the ability to save the lives of people with HIV infection. We must do everthing in our power to see that the money is there to make it happen.

It seems likely that given the explosion of new information on early interventions that the administration will need to look at reprogramming some funds appropriated under this bill. The administration and Congress will also need to look seriously at supplemental appropriations that respond to these new scientific findings.

Mr. Speaker, I again want to thank the chairman and the ranking minority member of the HHS Appropriations Subcommittee. Their continued commitment to working on ways of addressing the new issues in the HIV epidemic is greatly appreciated.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few points about the Labor-HHS-Education conference report we are considering today. First, I think it is unfortunate to adopt an amendment regarding use of funds for needles and bleach without having had the benefit of hearings and analysis on this complex issue. It seems to me this is an area in which we would look for guidance and input from the Public Health Service before moving forward with policy decisions.

In any event, I think it is important to stress the narrow scope of this provision. This provision provides that Federal money may not be used to buy and distribute needles and bleach. It is not intended to affect the range of AIDS prevention programs that the National Institute of Drug Abuse runs for drug users. Such programs, their staffs and their overhead, will continue to be funded and they should continue to engage in aggressive outreach toward the drug using community. The sole restriction of this amendment relates to purchase of clean needles and bleach. Although, as I noted, I have concerns about such a provision, I do think it is important to stress its limited scope.

I would also like to make a comment about another provision of the bill—one which I discussed last year as well. The important point of the Cranston provision adopted by the Senate is to set forth clearly Congress' intent in this area. It is important that this be clear both to the Centers for Disease Control, which administers the funds for AIDS prevention and education, and to the organizations that receive these funds. Under the provision, it is Congress' intent that Federal funds should not be used for materials that are designed and intended solely to increase sexual activity, of whatever kind. That is not the business of Government.

On the other hand, however, Congress does intend that materials that are designed to prevent the further transmission of HIV through targeted messages should be funded. These include materials that use all forms and approaches to encourage behavior change, and that are persuasive in encouraging such behavior change. Thus, the provision in the conference report includes an additional subsection explicitly stating that AIDS educational materials and programs should be designed to provide accurate and effective information that will encourage the behavior change necessary to stop transmission of HIV. Unlike previous provisions that have governed these funds before, our alternative provision is designed specifically not to have a chilling effect on the development of materials by community-based organizations.

I would also like to strongly encourage the Centers for Disease Control to review this provision and to issue new guidelines that appropriately reflect the intent of Congress. From information I have received, the CDC is still using old guidelines promulgated on the basis of previous provisions. That cannot be allowed to continue.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report to H.R. 2990, the fiscal year 1990 Labor-Health and Human Services-Education appropriations bill.

I commend the chairman of the House and Senate subcommittees and the conferees for their efforts on this bill, which contains funding for many vital domestic discretionary programs. For example, the conference report includes funding increases for the Nation's important health research programs. This includes a total of $7.7 billion for the National Institutes of Health. Funding for important AIDS programs is also included within this bill. For example, $1.5 billion is appropriated for all AIDS activities, a sizable increase over the current level of funding. The agreement also appropriates $30 million for the AIDS treatment drug AZT and $20 million for home health services for AIDS patients.

The conference agreement also provides $1.7 billion for the National Cancer Institute, an important research body which is spearheading the fight against cancer. The Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration, another vital institute which is assisting in the war on drugs, would receive $1.9 billion for alcohol, drug abuse and mental health activities for fiscal year 1990.

H.R. 2990 also includes funding increases for important development and education programs. For example, the bill includes $1.4 billion for Head Start. This much-needed program provides comprehensive support and early childhood development services for children from low-income families. This bill also includes $5.4 billion for chapter 1 compensatory education, to assist in the education of disadvantaged students. The measure also includes $1.2 billion for school improvement programs, and $732 million for the impact aid program. The funding levels contained in this legislation will help ensure that these vital programs continue to meet the needs of our Nation's students.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on with the positive impact that the various programs contained in this bill will have on all Americans. Rather, I will close by urging my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the pending conference agreement for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education.

I am pleased to serve on the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, HHS, and Education, and I commend our chairman, Mr. NATCHER, for his leadership on this legislation. It is a distinct pleasure to serve with my good friend from Kentucky.

The conference agreement provides $124.8 billion for the Department of Health and Human Services for fiscal year 1990, an increase of $12.5 billion. Two items within this title, the National Institutes of Health [NIH] and nurse training, are of particular interest to me.

Funding for NIH would increase by more than $500 million in fiscal year 1990. The medical community has made outstanding advances in the treatment of numerous illnesses and diseases during the past decade, and many of these advances would not have been possible without NIH-sponsored research. For example, survival rates for certain cancers are now as high as 80 or 90 percent, cancers that were certain killers only 5 or 10 years ago. The appropriation increase for NIH will help us learn more not only about killer diseases, but also about many aliments suffered by persons of all ages.

I am also pleased that the conferees have provided an increase of over $3 million for nurse training. Our Nation is suffering from a severe nursing shortage in all areas, a shortage that affects hospitals large or small, urban or rural. By providing increased funding for nurse training, we can attract additional students to nursing careers and reduce this shortage.

The conference agreement also provides an increase of $1.4 billion for the Department of Education, including an increase of almost $1 billion for chapter 1 grants. The President has listed improving education as one of his top priorities, from the elementary grades to postsecondary to higher education. Improving our students' skills is absolutely necessary if we hope to compete in a world economy, and I believe the measures taken in this bill is a good start.

I urge my colleagues to support the conference agreement.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of speaking against the provision in the conference report which will deny eligibility for Pell grants to less than part-time students.

There are approximately 154,000 less than part-time students who will be affected by this delay this academic year. In a report by the Secretary of Education the majority of these students are described as older than the traditional student and married. They work full time, and are taking courses at their local community college toward an associate degree or toward a bachelors degree.

They are trying to improve their employability by earning a higher education degree or by taking courses to train for a specific career. They do not attend proprietary schools because they are much more expensive and because they would have to quit their jobs and attend full time.

This is the kind of dedication we are trying to encourage. This is the type of character we applaud. These students are putting their all into trying to improve themselves so that they can have a better life for themselves and for their families.

Why are we knocking them off balance, and even holding them back, by denying them just $268 each toward improving themselves and getting that chance at a better job, a better life?

These students are not asking for much. They are not asking us to pay for expensive classes. They are not asking us to support them and their families while they go through school. They are only asking for a little help in paying their tuition bills while they continue to work and support their own families.

Secretary of Education Laugo Cavazos, has written that less than part-time students "deserve our encouragement and support and should not be denied access to training that may better their job skills or employment opportunties solely because they are unable to enroll for more than one or two classes at a time."

I fully support the Secretary in this assessment and cannot understand why the conference committee would deliberately sabotage, even reluctantly, the progress of these most dedicated students.

Mr. Speaker, the conference committee's "reluctance" in instituting this provision will do nothing to help these students stay in school. They have effectively halted the dreams of at least 154,000 of this Nation's hardworking students by denying them access to Pell grants for this year.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 2990, which makes appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Safety, which has oversight responsibility for worker health and safety issues, I believe that the conferees on H.R. 2990 have reached an agreement that will benefit all working Americans.

The agreement provides sufficient funding for the Occupational Safety and Health Administration [OSHA] and the Mine Health and Safety Administration [MSHA] in the Department of Labor and the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health [NIOSH] in the centers of disease to carry out their duties for fiscal year 1990.

While the previous administration submitted funding proposals that provided less for the agencies than necessary in order to keep up with the rate of inflation, the House and Senate Appropriations Committees have ensured that the agencies directed to protecting America's workers will be able to carry out their assigned tasks.

The conference report provides $3 million more for OSHA than was requested, and includes a modest $2.5 million more for State OSHA Programs.

For MSHA, the conference committee determined that the agency needed $1.5 million more than was recommended by the administration. This will allow the agency to go forth with some very important rulemaking activities.

I am especially pleased that NIOSH was well taken care of in this conference report. It is no secret that the occupational health and safety community was extremely concerned by the budget proposal from the former administration that cut NIOSH funding by nearly 35 percent.

Yes, it is true that the Bush administration revised the numbers, but even then, the proposed budget was exactly the same as the appropriated amount for fiscal year 1989, with no consideration for inflation.

The final figure for NIOSH of $85.9 million, an increase of more than $15 million from 1989, clearly means that the important research and training efforts in the area of occupational safety and health will go forward.

It also means that NIOSH will not suffer the devastating brain drain that the original funding proposal, the one offered by the previous administration, would have meant.

And that brings me to the education portion of the conference report.

While I have some reservations about certain language which will preclude less than half-time students from being eligible for Pell grants, I commend the conferees for their thoughtfulness in handling a delicate situation and for not taking other actions that could have had a severe and drastic impact on some segments of the higher education community.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, this conference report on H.R. 2990, is more than just satisfactory. It continues to show the understanding of the conferees of the critical issues of the day.

I commend the conferees for their efforts and I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for this report.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, this needed appropriation, will certainly pass. However, it is just about 10 percent over last year in budget authority.

If we raised all accounts by 10 percent, we would increase our deficit by $50 billion. Even with a Gramm-Rudman target of $110 billion deficit and a $70 billion add-on of Social Security revenues, an extra $50 billion would be significant.

The whole budget is up on about 4½ percent. This may be a preferred spending center, at least I consider that it is, but I don't think it should command twice the increase that the budget as a whole received.

Most of this bill is worthwhile and needed spending, especially the education portion. Even so, I can't vote for such a great spending increase when the deficit is so overpowering. I regret I must vote "no."

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the fiscal 1990 Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Act. However, I do so with some reluctance because of the language in the bill that denies Pell grant awards to less than half-time students, the so-called nontraditional college students. To be clear, the prohibition on funding for these students will mean that over 160,000 students will not receive Pell grant awards next school year. And who are these students, Mr. Speaker?

By most accounts, over 45 percent of students attending college or vocational school are doing so on a less than full-time basis. For many of these students, attending school full time is a choice they cannot afford. They are raising families or working full time and can only attend school on a part-time basis. We are not talking about a minority of students. We are talking about the wave of the future.

In the last 15 years, the number of nontraditional students has increased over 80 percent. On some college campuses—particularly our 2-year schools—part-time students are a majority. By some accounts, on some college campuses, over 65 percent of students are attending school part time.

The language in this bill denying these hard-working students Pell grants next year is not only discriminatory, it is myopic. A policy of denying the fastest growing segment of our college students needed aid is a step backward.

Mr. Speaker, in 1985 in the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act the Congress went on record in support of nontraditional students. With bipartisan support, we agreed to look at a students financial resources to determine need, and not primarily his or her level of attendance, and this school year, many fo these students are receiving Pell grants. Today, in one provision, tucked away in this huge bill, we pull the rug out from under these needy students.

Colleagues, much has been said on this floor about the need to retrain our workforce for the future, yet today with the passage of this conference report we signal to those who are seeking a better life for themselves and their families that the Congress will not stand with them. Mr. Speaker, the language in this bill prohibiting Pell awards to nontraditional students will cost this Nation greatly in the future. I am deeply troubled by this change in policy.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. MCDERMOTT]. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 364, nays 56, not voting 12, as follows:

Messrs. BUECHNER, OXLEY, MCCURDY, and DEWINE changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to make the vote on H.R. 2990, because my beeper did not go off. Had I been here, I would have voted nay.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall 276, on approving the conference report for H.R. 2990, fiscal year 1990 appropriations for Labor/HHS/Education, I thought I voted "yes" in favor of adoption of the report. However, my vote was registered as a "nay" vote.

I request that the record reflect my intention to vote "yes" on rollcall 276.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, as a result of the House warning bells not ringing in my office, I missed the vote on final passage of the conference report to H.R. 2990, Labor, Health, Human Services, and Education appropriations for 1990.

Had I received timely notice of the vote, I would have voted "yes."

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCDERMOTT). The Clerk will designate the first amendment in disagreement.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Senate amendment No. 8: Page 3, line 6, strike out "$10,000,000" and insert "$13,000,000".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. NATCHER

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NATCHER moves that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: "$13,000,000, of which $1,500,000 shall be available for obligation for the period October 1, 1990 through September 30, 1991,".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Senate amendment No. 12: Page 5, line 1, after "seq.)" insert "; and necessary administrative expenses to carry out the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit Program under section 51 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. NATCHER

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NATCHER moves that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and concur therein.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Senate amendment No. 13: Page 5, line 2, strike out "$2,537,700,000" and insert "$2,587,700,000".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. NATCHER

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NATCHER moves that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate numbered 13 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: "$2,575,200,000".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McDERMOTT). The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Senate amendment No. 90: Page 38, line 18, after "term" insert "; or except for such medical procedures necessary for the victims of rape or incest, when such rape or incest has been reported promptly to a law enforcement agency or public health service. Nor are payments prohibited for drugs or devices to prevent implantation of the fertilized ovum, or for medical procedures necessary for the termination of an ectopic pregnancy. None of the funds appropriated under this Act shall be used to carry out any program of distributing sterile needles for the hypodermic injection of any illegal drug or distributing bleach for the purpose of cleansing needles for such hypodermic injection unless the President of the United States certifies that such programs are effective in stopping the spread of HIV and do not encourage the use of illegal drugs.".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. NATCHER

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NATCHER moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MRS. BOXER

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank in advance the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] for agreeing to allow me 20 minutes for the purpose of debate on this motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mrs. BOXER moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and concur therein with an amendment as follows:

At the end of the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate, insert:

"If the President does so certify, the General Accounting Office shall conduct a study of programs relating to distribution of sterile needles and report their findings to the Congress and the President within 90 days."

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the question be divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be divided.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, may I make a parliamentary inquiry before the gentleman from Illinois begins?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman will state her parliamentary inquiry.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ascertain that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will give me 20 mintutes total so that I can line up my speakers.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, we agree on this side that the gentlewoman have 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, we are going to have a very important debate this afternoon. This important debate asks several questions beyond the mere formulation of the language in the amendment. It asks the question whether we as human beings really live on an anthill or not, whether we are going to be guided by the precepts of animal husbandry, getting rid of the unfit, those that do not quite measure up.

Does being a member of the human family entitle one to protection of the law? Is the law to protect the weak from the strong? That is what we are going to ask.

I suggest the abortion issue is a human rights issue, it is a civil rights issue. Whom do we include within the circle of those society will be responsible for? The aged, the terminally ill, the incorrigibly poor, the profoundly handicapped? What about the unwanted, innocently inconvenient unborn, the little children that are not yet born, that cannot rise up in the streets, that cannot vote, that cannot escape, but are tiny members of the human family?

Have we such little moral imagination that we do not understand that in the womb of the pregnant woman is a tiny member of the human family, and that right to life comes from almighty God? I am not embarrassed to say that, even though the ACLU might smirk at that, because our Nation's birth certificate, the Declaration of Independence, says we hold these truths to be self-evident, beyond dispute, that all men, all mankind, all members of the human family, are created, not born, created equal, and are endowed by their Creator.

Our right to life is an endowment, it is not an achievement. We do not achieve it. We are endowed with that right to life at the moment of our creation.

Among these inalienable rights, they cannot be voted away by this Congress or by a court, is the right to life, the first right, the first human right, the right to life.

The policy of this Congress since 1976 has been not to violate the consciences of those millions of taxpayers who do not want their tax money going to pay to kill unborn children. They use the euphemism, "terminate a pregnancy." Every pregnancy terminates at the end of 9 months. They are talking about exterminating. And exterminating what? A tiny member of the human family, maybe innocently inconvenient, maybe unwanted by somebody, but a member entitled by endowment from the Creator with the right to life. That is what we are talking about.

Make no mistake, abortion is killing. It does not happen to pregnant women, it happens to the baby. Every abortion occurs over somebody's dead body, and that is the child's.

I know that we have to focus on the woman and she has serious human problems, but we can not find humane solutions other than killing? Must we resort to random violence to solve these human problems? Is society so empty, have we not moved from barbarism very far?

The humanity of the unborn. Have my colleagues ever been in a high rise building where the elevator goes 10, 11, 12, 14, 15? You say where is the 13th floor? They say there is not one.

What is holding up the 14th floor? We all know there is a 13th floor, but we do not want to recognize it. It is not convenient. The unborn is the great 13th floor of society—everyone knows it's there, but they pretend it isn't.

Everybody knows that is a baby in a mother's womb, an unborn, preborn member of the human family, needing only time and nourishment to be a child that you would hold in your arms, that one would say nobody can kill.

One cannot strangle that baby once it is born.

What is the difference qualitatively, 10 minutes before one is born, 10 days before one is born, 7 months before one is born? Time and nourishment. The humanity of the unborn.

Now, rape and incest are tragedies. Nobody says they are not. But why visit on the second victim, the unborn child that is the product of that criminal act, capital punishment?

The Supreme Court says we cannot execute the rapist. That is cruel and unusual punishment. By what leap of logic do we visit on the unborn child the penalty, the extreme capital punishment penalty, of execution?

No. The tragedy of rape is a tragedy, but it is a worse tragedy to kill the innocent preborn life. A child, a human life created by rape or incest has the same right to life as one created by a loving couple. No one chooses the condition of his or her conception.

Ethel Waters, the great black star of stage and screen, said that her father raped her mother when she was 12. She then remarked that they named a park after her in Lancaster, PA.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], who has been a tower of strength on this issue along with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE]. If Members stick with BILL NATCHER and SILVIO CONTE they will not go wrong on this issue.

Prompt treatment after rape, within at least 36 hours, and no pregnancy occurs. It takes that long for a pregnancy to occur.

Get prompt treatment, which the law should encourage and avoid venereal disease, get evidence of the rape and prevent conception. Prompt treatment is the solution to this, but to empower anybody to decide with life or death finality that some lives have begun in the wrong way is to trample on the sacredness of all human right to life.

Abortion is killing. Abortion is violence. My friends, this building exists, the courthouses exist, the law exists to protect the weak from the strong. That is why we have law, and there is nobody more weak and defenseless than the preborn.

When the mother, who should be the natural protector of her child, becomes its moral adversary, then the law must step in.

Listen to me. The killing of an innocent human life is never a private matter. God forbid in this country, in this world that people can kill innocent human life and keep it in the closet, keep it in the hospital.

□ 1240

It is a public matter. We are all involved in mankind. "Every man's death diminishes me because I am involved in mankind," said John Donne.

No murder, no killing, no extermination of an innocent life is a private matter; it is a public matter. We ought to cry out to Heaven when it happens.

I bleed for women who are raped and who are victims of incest. They need our help, they need our support, they need our love, and we have to give it to them. But do not kill the innocent victim, the second innocent victim, of that rape.

Now I suggest to you the number of pregnancies is very small, very small as a result of rape or incest. Certainly private money, if abortion is the only answer, can be expended. But do not visit on taxpayers the use of their money to exterminate innocent unborn children. I ask you to focus on the baby as well as the woman. Well intentioned as these people are, focus on the innocent life and remember you, today, have a chance to save a human life. These little children that come into the world with some little message in their fists to explain the mystery of why we are here, to solve the riddle of cancer, to solve the riddle of multiple sclerosis, to write the literature, to discover the secrets and chart the maps. These are little human beings.

We would embrace and love them and help the woman who has had this crime visited on her, but not to kill her unborn child. We are not animals. We do not live on an anthill. We are members of the human family.

This body has always defended human life. Think of your Declaration of Independence, think of the right to life as an endowment from the Creator and that nobody has the right to take that away.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about humanity also. My motion simply asks that the House recede to the Senate language as it relates to the issue of Medicaid funding in cases of rape, incest, and ectopic pregnancy.

Rape, rape has been described as one of the most brutal and one of the most violent crimes. The victim is made to feel helpless, defenseless, dirtied, violated, invaded.

Men are sometimes raped, but they do not have to bear a lifelong memory of that terrifying and horrifying experience. A woman might have to.

Out of the 85,000 reported rapes, many women might have to.

Yet there are those in this House who believe she must have to, especially if she is poor. The Government will not help her. I say that is wrong.

I say that is inhumane, and today is the day that we can reverse that wrong by agreeing to the Senate language.

Suppose a woman is raped in her bed by a violent criminal who scarred her and killed her husband who was lying next to her. It happened in California many times. That is the Night Stalker case, and thank God that criminal is apprenhended and will be put to death.

Suppose that woman was impregnated by this vicious and violent and demented man who then killed her husband in front of her. Should she have to bear that vicious killer's child?

There are those in this Chamber who in the name of humanity say that she must, especially if she is poor. The Government will not help her. I say that is wrong. I say that is inhumane.

Today is the day we can reverse that wrong.

You know, in Oregon there was a sixth-grade child sexually abused by her father, sixth grade, 11 years old. She became pregnant and she cried out for help, and her mother cried out for help, and help was hard to find because this child, this 11-year-old baby did not even know what pregnant meant.

So getting an abortion was complicated and the Government did not help. So she sat like a sitting duck waiting for help. One day her father walked into the room she was sitting in and blew her brains out.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Senate took a needed step forward in making an exception of Medicaid dollars for rape and incest.

I personally believe the entire matter of abortion is a private and a personal one which in this country of individual freedom should only be made by the woman and her doctor and her God and her family.

But what is before us today is not that broad issue. It is just the very narrow issue. The Senate language which would now allow Medicaid funding in these horrendous cases of rape and incest. So for the sake of human compassion, at least allow the females of this Nation to decide for themselves along with their God as to what they want to do.

If they are victims of rape and incest, God knows they do not need any more problems from their government while they are coping with this deep and lifelong decision.

Please support this amendment. Let us support the Senate language in the name of compassion, in the name of life and in the name of human justice.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN].

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recede to the Senate position.

Mr. Speaker, since 1981, Congress has passed the Hyde amendment which has permitted Federal Medicaid funding of abortions only where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term. Members will soon vote on whether to agree to language adopted by the Senate in the fiscal year 1990 Labor/HHS appropriations bill, that would fund abortions based on claims of rape and incest. I urge Members to vote against receding to the Senate for the reason that Mr. Hyde has so eloquently articulated.

I rise in order to assure Members what they are not voting on today. Some have claimed that the vote today will determine whether Medicaid will pay for surgical intervention for women who are experiencing an ectopic pregnancy—which is to say, when the embryo is developing in the falopian tube. Unless surgery is performed and the tiny embryo removed, the wall of the fallopian tube will rupture.

For example, in a news release dated October 6, the vice president of Planned Parenthood stated:

> It is outrageous that the House conferees on the Labor-HHS appropriations bill refused to join the Senate in restoring access to Medicaid-funded abortion for women who are victims of rape, incest and ectopic pregnancies.

Mr. Speaker, this statement is false. The language in the House-passed bill, the Hyde amendment, is the law today as we speak. Exactly the same language has been in effect continuously since June 1981. It is a matter of public record that Medicaid has always paid for treatments for ectopic pregnancies, and continues to do so under the Hyde amendment.

Secretary Sullivan underscores this point in his letter to us, dated October 10, in which he wrote:

Other [Senate-passed] language in H.R. 2990 states that funding is not prohibited for drugs or devices to prevent implantation of the fertilized ovum, or for medical procedures necessary for the termination of an ectopic pregnancy. This language is not part of current law, and is unnecessary because current law permits provision of drugs, devices, and procedures to prevent implantation. Surgical intervention in cases of ectopic pregnancy clearly falls under the "life of the mother" exception.

The claim that the House-passed Hyde amendment would prevent removal of an ectopic pregnancy is a desperate attempt to divert attention from the real issue at hand. It reminds me of the way certain Members, during the debate in August on whether to allow the District of Columbia to pay for abortion on demand, were told that they were voting on whether to allow the District to pay for contraceptives and treatment for ectopic pregnancy. That was demonstrably false on that bill, and it is demonstrably false here. We are talking about defending current law.

The real issue today is whether we should allow many more abortions, due to claimed cases of rape and incest, to be funded. I urge Members to say "no." Let's vote on the real issue, not demagoguery.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Massachusetts for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself very strongly with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], who made an eloquent case for retaining current law. I agree with Mr. HYDE, this issue is a human rights issue.

Mr. Speaker, it would indeed be a tragic mistake if we were to turn back the clock today by altering and weakening the Hyde amendment. The Hyde amendment constitutes a proven, longstanding, humane public policy which has for more than a decade successfully withstood the avalanche of challenges in the courts, in the press and in the Congress.

The Hyde amendment has been instrumental in the saving of thousands of lives from the abuse of the abortionists. If it had not been for the Hyde amendment, more children would have been victimized and killed. If it had not been for the Hyde amendment, more babies would have had to suffer injections of poison and other chemicals designed to destroy them. If it had not been for the Hyde amendment, the Federal Government would have supplied tens of millions of dollars to literally rip apart and dismember the bodies of children through suction abortion and other methods.

□ 1250

The reality of abortion, Mr. Speaker, is death to children, abuse of children by chemical and surgical methods, and the Hyde amendment divests the Federal Government from that carnage.

Prior to enactment in 1976, the Federal Government subsidized approximately 300,000 Medicaid abortions per year. By way of contrast, in fiscal year 1988, 84 abortions were funded under the life endangerment provision.

Mr. Speaker, the House should not today, or ever, retreat from its solid support for the Hyde amendment. Not only have lives been saved, but this amendment is the model statute for Federal and State efforts to end Government subsidies for abortion and replication of it elsewhere in State and Federal law is a tremendous tribute to its distinguished author, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. Speaker, I join all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, on both sides of the abortion issue today in absolutely condemning rape and incest, and all types of sexual assault. Few crimes evoke such a strong reaction, and disgust, as a criminal rape.

Sexual assault against women cries out for justice and swift and sure punishment for the offender. Tough, nonsense penalties for the perpetrators of those horrendous crimes is an issue on which we should find no disagreement.

Rapists belong in jail, Mr. Speaker, off the streets, and our criminal justice system must keep them there. Clearly, then, society's outrage ought to be focused on and directed against the criminal, the rapist.

Yet it seems to me that some of the deep and heartfelt emotion expressed on this issue is focused incorrectly on the innocent child. It is as if some, perhaps upwittingly, wish to visit not only the stigma of rape but the death penalty as well on the innocent unborn child. It seems to me that compassion and fairness compels Members to deeply care for both lives, mother and child. Clearly, both are victims. Clearly, both deserve our love, our empathy, and our compassion.

Mr. Speaker, I believe, for the woman who has been raped, every medical, legal, emotional and compassionate support that can be provided at the time of rape, must be made available. Members should be cognizant of the fact that emergency medical care for rape victims is permitted under the Hyde amendment. I believe counseling and tangible assistance must continue for as long as needed.

If, in the very rare occurrence, pregnancy does occur, positive alternatives should be made available to the woman. I respectfully submit that assaulting the child is not the answer. A child's inherent worth is not diminished by the circumstances of his or her beginning.

Mr. Speaker, again I urge support for the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and urge Members to vote against the motion made by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MCDERMOTT].

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think it is absolutely unconscionable for us to turn our backs on poor women and girls who have been raped or who have suffered the trauma of incest. I am a psychiatrist and a physician who has treated victims of rape and incest. I must tell you, the last thing victims of assault need is to have control over their bodies taken away from them yet again.

Denying Medicaid funding says to the victim, "you have not suffered enough in this painful ordeal, so we are going to force you to bear a child which was conceived out of hatred and violence." Isn't our society more compassionate than that?

We hear a lot of talk on this floor about the horrors of child abuse. Yet, if you are truly outraged about child abuse, how can you possibly say that a child who has been raped should not be able to turn to the Government for assistance in obtaining an abortion?

My friends, this is not just another litmus test which seeks to align you one way or the other on the political issue of abortion. We are not talking about poll results and percentage points here. We are talking about the lives and emotional well-being of women and girls who have suffered a crime second only to murder. In the name of simple human decency, I ask for your support of Medicaid funding for abortions in cases of rape and incest.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEBER].

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, we are being asked today to reverse a longstanding policy, and I think that particularly is important for new Members to understand. The policy of this body has been established for a long period of time, but what the Boxer amendment is asking Members to do is to reverse a longstanding policy that in the view of most, has worked well.

In my judgment, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] and my colleague from New Jersey have outlined the major reasons why the Boxer amendment ought to be rejected, and it is philosophical. The House can be proud they stood up for the unborn. This House can be proud they have stood up for the protection of those taxpayers whose consciences would be violated it they were forced to pay for abortions, against their will. I applaud them for their eloquent statements.

I also, in the limited time I have available, want to make the point that there are practical reasons why this House should not reverse itself and insert an unworkable exception into the rules governing the HHS appropriation. It is worth emphasizing that when the Hyde amendment was originally passed, this was a fairly broad agreement, extending beyond the pro-life community, that exceptions for rape and incest were not workable and should not be part of that agreement. Those objections are reinforced to Members in a letter to Members of this body from Secretary of Health and Human Services, Louis W. Sullivan, and I would like to quote on practical considerations of the Department of Health and Human Services.

I want to address specifically some serious administrative concerns that arise from this language. As Secretary Otis Bowen indicated to Congress in 1988 when a similar question was raised, the judgment that a pregnancy resulted from rape or incest is properly a legal and not a medical one. An onerous responsibility for legal judgment would be placed upon State Medicaid programs, the Department, and health care providers if this language is accepted.

Department regulations would be needed, particularly with respect to the Medicaid program, to define how to determine if rape or incest has occurred. Enforcement of such a provision would require a number of judgments about the nature and extent of notice, certification, and recordkeeping. Revised State procedures also would be necessary to implement changes in Medicaid.

Additional bureaucracy, additional regulations, additional cost to the Department of Health and Human Services, additional cost to the State, probably lawsuits at every level owing to the ill-defined nature of the amendment itself.

Finally, Secretary Sullivan makes the point about ectopic pregnancies:

Surgical intervention in cases of ectopic pregnancy clearly falls under the "life of the mother" exception. This is superfluous language, and its removal from H.R. 2990 will have no substantive effect."

Defeat the Boxer motion.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, this is not a human rights issue. This is a minority view here in the United States and elsewhere in the world. Let Members make that very clear.

What we are talking about here is a poor woman or girl who has been raped or made pregnant by incest. Certainly this poor woman or girl should be able to decide whether or not to have an abortion, but she does not have any money. All of the well-to-do women or girls in the country can have that, but not the poor woman or the poor girl.

Mr. Speaker, virtually every public opinion poll taken over the last 15 years in the United States has found that 8 out of 10 Americans believe that abortion should be available for women and girls who have been subjected to criminal assault. That is what we are talking. Statewide referenda aimed at restricting equal access to abortions for poor women have been defeated 11 of the 12 times that they have been before the public since 1978. The time has come for this House to accede to that same opinion.

The American public is starting to get fed up with the way courts and politicians are dealing with issues of abortion and reproductive rights. They are tired of listening to judges and legislatures telling them how to make the most personal decisions of their lives. They do not want the Government in their bedrooms. They do want compassionate treatment of those who are the victims of criminal assault. They are taking their views to the voting booths in several important elections this fall. They are sending us a message. We should listen.

□ 1300

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Hyde proposition and in opposition to the Boxer motion.

Mr. Speaker, in the wake of the Supreme Court's Webster decision, the issue of abortion has been clouded by misinformation. Now more than ever, it is important to maintain and preserve the integrity of the traditional Hyde amendment banning the use of Federal funds for abortion.

Ever since its inception, the Hyde amendment has made exception where the life of the mother is endangered by her pregnancy. Yet misinformation abounds. Claims are made that the Hyde amendment would disallow abortion for ectopic pregnancies; this is not the case. As Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, Dr. Louis Sullivan, has stated surgical intervention in cases of ectopic pregnancy clearly falls under the "life of the mother" exception.

A life is no less human because it was conceived through rape or incest. A child is no less innocent because of conditions of its birth. The sole issue to be considered is the destruction of innocent human life. Rape and incest are terrible enough; federally funded abortion will only compound the crime.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, there are many ways that we as public policymakers conspire to keep women and children poor in America.

We do not require States to have tough laws on rape and incest. We do not fund a level of enforcement that protects women and a girl child or girl children against rape and incest.

The child abuse figures, and specifically the dramatic percentage of that abuse that is sexual, not physical, demonstrate that we as a society do not effectively protect women and girls from rape and incest. Can you hold your head up as a Member of this U.S. Congress and say that we provide women and children protection against rape and incest? We do not in America.

So will we deny funding to those most common victims, those most vulnerable, those women and girl children who must suffer the consequences of crimes committed against them? Will we deny them funding for what is legal, medical care, and care they need as a result of an inability to protect them from crime?

I hope you will remember that we are talking about 13-year-olds. We are talking about little kids who are raped, who are the victims of incest. Will you deny them funding for legal medical care in America? Would you declare them powerless to protect themselves from the lifelong responsibility to economically, psychologically, and emotionally care for another human being until death do us part, for that is what parenting is all about?

What was the purpose of welfare reform? Do we remember that bill we worked so hard on? The purpose of welfare reform and the requirement for individual case planning was to require young mothers to connect to education and to job training and to take the economic and emotional responsibility for building a strong family. And yet today will you be part of denying that 14- or 15-year-old welfare mother, with one young baby, who is trying desperately to succeed in school, that opportunity? If she is raped by the drug addict next door, if she is invaded by her abusive alcoholic father, will you deny her the medical care your wife or your daughter has access to, and the power over her future she needs to build economic and emotional security for her child?

Mr. Speaker, we must not discriminate solely on the basis of poverty. That is what keeps women there. This is a matter of humanity. This is a matter of equity. Support the amendment.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, for 15 years my major goal in the Congress of the United States has been to try to make this country a little bit kinder and a little bit gentler toward its children and toward its families, and that ranges from tax policy to health care and back again.

I have spent during that period an awful lot of time with women, with girls who have been the subject of abuse. I have sat all night in shelters. I have sat all night in police houses and police stations. I have tried to tell their story, and I have talked to them for months afterwards. I have been to their homes to listen to them.

It must not be that this Congress of the United States is going to treat poor women and girls in this country differently than we do women and girls of means. We may argue about whether or not the right to abortion exists or it does not, but we are now suggesting that it shall exist for some people in most of the communities in which we travel and spend our daily lives, and that decision would be there, but if you were poor, we would deny you that decision as a matter of law by the Congress of the United States.

We made a bad decision in 1981 when we started down this road. The Senate has now changed its mind, and we are asking that the House recede to the Senate language for all of the reasons that the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON] just articulated, and they are the most personal and horrendous reasons we can imagine.

Most of us have not spent that time, most of us have not spent that time with these women and these children. Many of us cannot appreciate what it means to get a woman who has been victimized by incest or by rape to even open her mouth and think about telling another human being. Let us not turn the disgusting, violent, solitary act of rape into a gang rape by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, that must not be the official policy of this country.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Nevada [Mrs. VUCANOVICH].

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the motion to recede.

The language adopted by the other body would require the Federal Government to pay for abortions in claimed cases of rape and incest.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this motion, to recede, and to insist on the traditional House position in support of the Hyde amendment. The Senate language should be rejected as bad public policy, both on the grounds of principle and practicality.

Let us not forget that the Hyde amendment already permits emergency treatment for rape victims which, if administered within 3 days, is 100 percent effective.

Mr. Speaker, there is no way I could express myself as eloquently as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] on this issue. I simply urge my colleagues to oppose this motion to recede, and I thank not only the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] but also the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], and the distinguished vice chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I cannot say anything to underscore with more beautiful eloquence the fact that this is a human rights issue than what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has said, and I hope he will speak one more time and anchor this debate today on the House floor.

Let me do something that is quite mundane but, I think, very important, and that is just talk to our colleagues in an inside way. Twenty-one of our colleagues who are pro-life, so designated and proud of it, were euchred by the whole parliamentary process on the D.C. appropriations debate a few weeks back, and the mass electronic media—electronic, particularly—said, "This is a sea change in the House. The House has shifted from pro-life to pro-abortion." They tried to characterize these 21 switch votes as changing from their lifelong pro-life position to a pro-abortion position. When we interview each one of them singly, we find that is just not the case.

I maintain that with this upcoming Boxer amendment, which I hope these 21 Members will vote against, is a way for them to come halfway home.

□ 1310

Mr. Speaker, the President will veto this appropriations bill if this Senate language is in it. He has also said, and within the last few days reemphasized, that he will veto the D.C. appropriations bill, which may come up later today if it also contains pro-abortion language. Now, if they come halfway home on this, the rest of the trip home to a pro-life position is after the President vetoes the D.C. appropriations bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would not put $5 on that table whether this will be a pro-abortion House a decade from now. I just do not know. Nobody knows. But I know, if any Member stays as long as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] has; he came here in 1942; that is almost pressing half a century, they will still be debating this issue well into the next century because child abuse has risen in our country in direct proportion to this insanity of killing 22 million American citizens in their mother's wombs.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, every time we debate this issue on the floor of the House, it is so easy for us to throw out words like "rape" or "incest," as if they were abstractions, like "grand larcency" or "petty theft."

We can do that because most of us in this House are male, and, when the debate is over, we can walk off this floor, and go about our business, and forget all that has happened here.

But there are some who can never forget. They are the victims. Of rape. Of incest.

Some of my colleagues have daughters. Most Members have wives. I want them to think about rape today. About the act of rape. I want them to imagine how they would feel if it happened to their daughter or their wife.

A rape victim will tell you that beyond the cruelty, and the pain and the injury, rape is the ultimate debasement and degradation of a human being. In the hands of a predator, a rape vicitm is dirt—robbed of personal safety, robbed of privacy, robbed of human dignity.

Now some of my colleagues would add insult to that victim by forcing her to produce the rapist's child? And they call that a "human rights" stand? I do not understand that. More importantly, the American people do not understand.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues, "Would you force your daughter or your wife, if she were raped, to be the incubator of the seed of the rapist?"

I would not. I doubt that my colleagues would. The American people would not either, and they will watch our votes today—and they will remember.

Mr. Speaker, the American people are asking us to support the rights of the victims of rape and incest.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my dear and beloved friend, the gentlewomen from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of discussion in this debate about human rights. One Member said, "All men are created equal." Well, if we do not yield to the Senate version, all women will not be created equal.

Mr. Speaker, how can we say that this Congress is treating women equally if we are forcing women to bear the product of a crime perpetrated against them? We are not only talking about women, we are talking about girls.

Incest: I know of no religion, no religion where incest is considered OK. It goes right to the core of the very sacred family unit.

Rape is the same. It goes right to the core of the family unit.

Mr. Speaker, I would think that everyone in this body would be all for preserving family units. It is very hard to preserve family units if the Federal Government insists that a wife must bear a child that was a product of rape. Think how the husband would feel. It would be awful to think that we are preserving family units if we are forcing young children to bear babies that were born because of incest. My goodness, we are going right against the grain of every single major religion. We keep forgetting about the women and young girls that are the victims of these crimes.

Mr. Speaker, these are very difficult situations that must be balanced out, and I think it is very important that we stand up and say that it is all right to have Medicaid funding in the case of rape and incest. We have had people here say, "Oh, get prompt treatment." What do you think prompt treatment is? It is a DNC, a procedure which is considered to be an abortion by every single State, as well as the anti-abortion people. I think to throw that out is a real red herring.

My colleagues, please do not vote to sustain the Senate language.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I also rise today in support of the conference report language providing Medicare-funded abortions for women whose pregnancy results from rape and incest. In a better world perhaps we would not have to have this debate, but unfortunately our society is still haunted by crimes like rape and incest.

My colleagues have seen the reports from the FBI and other organizations that state that there are 85,000 cases of rape in the United States each year and 100,000 cases of child sexual abuse. Until we eliminate these crimes and some of their underlying causes, it is imperative that the Government provide financial assistance to women and, often, young children involved in these cases.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I want my colleagues to think about fairness. If any one of our daughters were faced with this situation, would we make every medical option available to them? Of course we would. Is it fair then to deny some women medical options based upon their financial situation? I think not.

Mr. Speaker, today we can help all women involved in these horrible crimes to have access to the same legal rights that our children have. They should expect nothing less from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Boxer motion. I do so as a Republican, as a woman and as a mother of three, and I do so in the name of simple decency. I want especially to address my remarks to those of my colleagues who want to keep Government out of our lives.

Mr. Speaker, this issue is the most intimate and most profound moral issue that a woman has to face. Do my colleagues want to put Government into the position of making that decision?

I say to my colleagues that under the language in the conference report we are saying that we support a two-class system. A two-class system in this society that is: those who have the money to make the choice can make their own moral choice for themselves; but those who do not have the money to make the medical choice for themselves, will have to continue to be victimized. In other words, those who cannot afford the legal right to an abortion are victimized twice, and victimized for the rest of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, in the name of simple decency I say to my Republican colleagues that we must keep Government out of this moral decision. Those who are the victims of rape or incest should have a identical legal right to have the same medical choice available to other members of our society.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOLLOHAN].

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recede to the Senate position.

I would urge members to go beyond our debate and to look directly at the language we are discussing. The Senate would amend the traditional Hyde language in two ways——

First, the Senate language would allow abortions, quote:

For the victims of rape or incest, when such rape or incest has been reported promptly to a law enforcement agency or public health service.

Second, the Senate language would specify that payments are not prohibited for quote:

Drugs or devices to prevent implantation of the fertilized ovum, or for medical procedures necessary for the termination of an ectopic pregnancy.

What is intended by this language? On its face, it seems gratuitous, unnecessary. Why does it seem unnecessary? In the case of rape victims, the emergency treatment the victim would routinely receive at the hospital—high doses of estrogen, for example—is 100 percent effective in preventing any pregnancy. The victim of any rape that is "promptly reported," as the provision requires, would receive this treatment.

The second amendment is equally gratuitous. The traditional Hyde language does not and never has prohibited the use of drugs or devices to prevent implantation The language on ectopic pregnancies is especially redundant since the very text of the traditional Hyde amendment allows abortion in those cases in which the life of the mother is endangered. This obviously would apply to ectopic pregnancies.

Secretary Sullivan, commenting on this language, observes that, quote:

Current law permits provision of drugs, devices, and procedures to prevent implantation. Surgical intervention in cases of ectopic pregnancy clearly falls under the "life of the mother" exception. This is superfluous language, and its removal from H.R. 2990 will have no substantive effect.

That is the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

Well then, if this language is unnecessary and gratuitous, why is it in the Senate bill? Why are we debating it and why am I objecting to it? Because its proponents hope to exploit the ambiguity of the rape and incest language to create a loophole that would allow funding of many more abortions.

This ambiguity is manifested in the provisions requirement that the rape be—quote—"promptly reported." What does that mean, promptly reported? As I noted earlier, routine treatment delivered to a rape victim at the hospital prevents any pregnancy.

The ambiguity also is manifested in the provisions requirement that the rape be reported to a—quote—"public health service." These are the same public health services that would in fact be performing the abortions.

Let me emphasize in closing that current Hyde language does not prohibit treatment to victims of rape that terminates any consequent pregnancy and current Hyde language certainly does not prohibit the use of drugs or devices to prevent implantation or to terminate an ectopic pregnancy. Vote down the Senate amendment.

□ 1320

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLLOHAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the motion to recede to the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my strong support for the Boxer motion to concur with the Senate provision on abortion funding to the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education appropriations conference report for fiscal year 1990. However, I would like also to express my objection to the linkage of the provision concerning funds for certain abortions with a provision restricting funds for AIDS-related needle exchange and bleach programs. AIDS and abortion are two discrete and very serious matters that should be treated separately.

By restoring Federal funding for abortion in the cases of rape and incest, Congress would begin to redress our shameful and unjust abortion limitations. Abortion is legal in the United States. Yet, in the 16 years since the Supreme Court affirmed this constitutional right, poor women have been denied this right. We cannot continue a policy that condemns women to the trauma of bringing an unwanted child into the world, or to back alley abortionists, simply because she does not have enough money for a safe abortion.

Every woman—not just the more affluent women—should be allowed to make her own decision about a pregnancy, especially when it is the result of violence and assault. Tragically, since 1981, through the Labor/HHS appropriation bills, Congress has limited access to safe and legal abortion services for poor women who are victims of rape and incest, increasing the risks of the occurrence of dangerous self-induced or nonmedical abortions among these women. Today, we can remedy this travesty of justice with a yes vote on the Boxer motion.

I am deeply disappointed that this vote to remedy current discriminatory abortion laws must be tied to the barring of Federal funds for needle exchange and bleach distribution programs. Bleach distribution programs have been used for several years in cities across the United States with demonstrated success in slowing HIV transmission. Needle exchange programs in certain European cities have also been effective and there are now several such programs in this country.

I believe it is essential to make available to the American people every reasonable method of controlling the spread of this deadly virus, including bleach and needle exchange programs. These are decisions that should properly be made by our public health specialists. In my view, we should not place restrictions on programs such as needle exchange before the public health community has had a chance to evaluate their success. It is true that needle exchange is not a complete solution to the problem of HIV transmission through sharing "works," nor does it solve the problem of drug abuse. However, if the program will save even one adult life, or prevent the birth of even one baby with AIDS, it is worth funding.

The conference report prohibits the use of Federal funds for the distribution of needles or bleach for the prevention of HIV infection. That is, Federal funds cannot be used to buy needles or bleach or to distribute those particular items. However, it does not in any way restrict the authority of the National Institute for Drug Abuse from continuing to carry out the various AIDS education and prevention programs they have undertaken among the IV drug user community. Such programs, including their staffs and overhead expenses continue to be funded under this bill. The sole modification made by this provision is that, if such programs engage in distributing needles or bleach, they must obtain the funds for such materials elsewhere.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to recede, to accept the Senate abortion language. I believe that Congress must move to allow Medicaid funding for abortion services in the cases of rape and incest, as well as to save the life of the mother. Low-income women who are the victims of violent sexual crimes should have the same constitutional right as more affluent women to terminate a resulting pregnancy.

The Senate language would allow Federal funding of abortions only in promptly reported cases of rape and incest. Polls taken over the last 15 years indicate that 8 in 10 Americans believe that abortion should be an available option for women who have been the victims of sexual assault. The vast majority of Americans support this coverage—even many who do not support the Roe versus Wade decision.

Poor women who are pregnant as a result of rape or incest—the victims of brutal acts—should have access to the same health care options available to more affluent women. I urge my colleagues to agree to the Senate language to H.R. 2990.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER].

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I certainly thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak for the rights and lives of American citizens who are women and female children and who are too poor to obtain the procedures that are available to their more prosperous sisters.

I speak today of the victims of rape and incest who some Members of Congress insist be doubly victimized by the cruel requirement to carry the resulting fetus conceived in hate and fear.

In the case of incest, is that not assault upon a child? Is that not the cruelest of child abuse? To think of a child, one with hopes and dreams for her future, yet banished by Government decree.

What interest to society is served by forcing children to have babies? To those who speak most eloquently against women and children, and I do not doubt their sincerity and their deeply held beliefs, I ask this question. If Government cannot protect women and children from the crimes of rape and incest, how dare it compound the felony by denying them any recourse to what has happened to them?

Please, please have the compassion not to let that happen. I beg you to support the Senate language.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. LOWEY].

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that we live in a violent society, but we do, and women, young girls, are too often the victims. Today, we are here to protect the rights of the poorest victims of violent sexual crimes. Women with financial resources will continue to have the freedom to be in control of their lives, to make the most personal decision, but Congress cannot and must not turn its back on the poorest victims of rape and incest who become pregnant by telling them that they cannot have an abortion, that they cannot choose to take control of their lives.

You have heard the shocking reports by the FBI and the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect, 85,000 cases of rape and 100,000 cases of child sexual abuse each year. Those startling numbers are not just numbers. They are people. They are young women, young girls who have suffered pain, violence, abuse, shame, somebody's daughter, maybe yours, God forbid.

If we fail to provide support to low-income women today, society is rendering them double victims, victims of a very cruel society by this Congress; so I urge you to vote aye for the Boxer amendment, to accept the Senate language on rape and incest.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VOLKMER].

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I stand here today in strong opposition to the motion of the gentlewoman from California and in strong support of the gentleman from Kentucky, the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Massachusetts and others here who through the years that I have been here have stood steadfast against Federal funding for abortions.

I can well remember when I first came here in 1977 and this battle raged throughout the summer and into the fall of that year, and we had many votes on it, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] and those of us who believe in the sanctity of life were able to prevail that year and every year since. As a result of that, as I reflect back over those 12 years, and this is the 13th year, I realize that in each year that we did not fund abortions with Federal funds that we saved the lives of 250,000 to 300,000 children.

□ 1330

Those children today are walking the streets of our rural areas and our communities. Their ages from zero to 13 is how old they are. They are out there enjoying the fruits of this country, the freedoms of this country, the opportunity for a good education, for an opportunity to enjoy life as we have enjoyed life.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I feel so strongly that we need to defeat the motion of the gentlewoman from California. Yes, those children are out there. They are out there today, 3 to 4 million of those children who would not be there otherwise.

I feel very much that we should continue to support the language of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

(Mrs. KENNELLY asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I stand to support this amendment to recede, really an amendment of human dignity.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Boxer motion to recede to the Senate in allowing Federal funds to be used for abortions in the case of rape and incest. Incidents of rape and incest are terribly sad situations. Horrendous for the victim, heartbreaking for the families.

It is during debates like this one that I wish we were still a new country, striving to grow and not having government involved in so many aspects of life. Without government involvement the individual, hopefully with the support of family and doctor, would make choices about the best way to handle the situation and then try to get her life back together.

But here it is said we are talking about Federal funds. Nevertheless the situations remain horrendous, and for the reasons of dignity and right to choose the decision should be left to the victim. What difference that she needs Federal funding. Her needs are so great that she needs our help. We as a government body should not make things more difficult. They are bad enough without our restrictions. The Senate is right.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his generous ceding of time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Boxer amendment. Ladies and gentlemen, we are dealing here with the most oppressed, the most victimized people in our society.

If a person is poor, she is victimized. If a person is raped or a victim of incest, she is doubly and horribly victimized, and here today we have the choice to say whether we will triply victimize that person by saying it is us, not this poor, downtrodden woman, who must decide whether she is to continue her pregnancy.

Have we no compassion or understanding for that poor person's predicament? Have we no light in our hearts to say, "If there is rape and incest, you must carry a pregnancy to term simply because you are poor?"

Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues to look at the specific situation we are talking about before they vote.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the Boxer amendment.

Mr. Speaker, a civilized country punishes criminals. It does not punish victims of crime. To deny a remedy to the victims of crime under the rubric of human rights is morally offensive. It is a horrifying moral dereliction for us to enunciate that argument.

The United Nations time after time after time has declared the right of women to control their fertility, to choose the number and spacing of their children as a human right, and here we are asking today whether denying poor women who have been discriminated against to make them poor and further discriminated against as victims of rape and incest, for us to say under the rubric of human rights that we are going to deny those women the right to control their bodies to me is a moral outrage, and the American public thinks so, too.

If we are to call ourselves civilized, we should follow all of our industrialized neighbors and allow victims of rape and incest to terminate pregnancies.

I urge my colleagues to support the Senate language.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the depth of feeling and sincerity of many Members who believe that public funding for abortion should be available only in cases where the life of the woman is in danger if she were to carry the fetus to term. That position reflects the moral convictions of those Members who are opposed to abortion except for the most extreme cases: life endangerment of the mother.

I simply ask that they understand the depth of feeling and sincerity of those of us who believe that the crimes of rape and incest are so heineous and so abominable that to continue to deny assistance to women who are victims of those crimes seriously calls into question our sense of compassion and justice.

Obviously, we, the male Members of this body, will never personally experience pregnancy, whether after rape or incest or otherwise. But how many Members can truly say that if their wives, daughters, or sisters were the victims of such an unspeakable crime as rape, they would not want—indeed expect—to be able to make a decision about a pregnancy arising from that violent, viscious act, without government interference?

Poor women are also wives, sisters, and daughters and we must extend to them the same compassion and, most importantly, the same options available to women with the financial means to exercise their constitutional rights.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Kansas [Mrs. MEYERS].

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that denying funding for abortions to poor victims of rape and incest is a longstanding policy of this House, and it is. However, I think that is a weak argument in favor, because I believe that policy is wrong and has always been wrong.

It has been said that this is a matter of human rights. It is certainly a matter of human rights for 52 percent of the people who are female, because this is not a discussion of abortion in its entirety. It is a discussion of whether women who have no money will be forced to carry a child to term who has been conceived by force and in violence and in criminal action. This is an unbelievably cruel action to take.

I urge a vote against the motion of the gentleman form Kentucky and in favor of the Senate language.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to my good friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LIGHTFOOT].

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to change anyone's mind here today.

There is a group that has not been heard from, and that I think are the children who possibly were the result of an inconvenience, a rape, an incest, or maybe a good time in the back seat of a Chevrolet. I happen to be one of those.

I have no idea why I was conceived or what happened, but to my two loving parents who have raised me, my adoptive parents, who changed my diapers, who took me through a broken arm, who took me through pneumonia and asthma and girlfriends, good and bad, car wrecks and all those good things, I want to join them in saying to the mothers of this world who possibly suffered a lot of indignity because they were pregnant, because they were not married or they were pregnant because of a rape or they were pregnant because of an incest, those of us, your children who live, say, "God bless you. Thank you. We love you."

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the Government has any point. We have heard all of this talk about human dignity. What the hell is dignified about killing an innocent unborn child?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I really want to take this opportunity to point out that we have a statement of administration policy here that the administration finds unacceptable the Senate attempt to expand Federal funding for abortion beyond cases where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term, and that the President will veto this bill if we fail to adhere to the House position.

It would be a tragedy really to have this bill vetoed. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and I and the committee, have worked real hard. I think we have put together one of the best bills that we have ever brought to the House. We have provided more money for AZT, more money for AIDS research, more money for the National Institutes of Health, the institutes on heart, lung, diabetes, cancer, digestive diseases and the others.

We have included more money in this bill for title I, which goes to the disadvantaged children. We have top dollar, as I said on the floor earlier today, top dollar for low-income fuel assistance, the first time we have had an increase in 4 years.

We have more money in this bill for student aid, more money for the handicapped, for Head Start, Job Corps, dislocated workers, and community service jobs for seniors.

I wish this amendment were not in this bill. I will be very honest with the Members, but it is in this bill, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and I have lived with this amendment for a long period of time.

□ 1340

I think it was the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], who mentioned 1981. It was 1976.

Looking at the old RECORD today brought it all back. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] amended the health and human services bill here in the House to provide no money for abortion, period. It went over to the Senate and the Senate did not accept it.

We were in conference with the Senate all summer long on that issue.

I was reading the RECORD from 1976 in the Congressional Quarterly, and it says:

> What finally broke the logjam was a proposal made by Representative SILVIO CONTE to bar the use of Federal funds to pay for abortion, except where the life of the mother would be in danger if the fetus were carried to term, and after adopting the Conte amendment the conference agreed on the language for an accompanying report.

Then it went on to say:

The final agreement came after a 3-hour session during which the chairman the House conferees, Daniel Flood, accused the Senate side of engaging in a fillbuster, and he said, "My people here sit here while Brooke is pounding away for God, motherhood, and Yale." At that point Brooke offered the first in a series of seven last-ditch attempts to weaken the Conte proposal.

And rape and incest was one of those.

Every one of those seven proposals went down to defeat by a vote of 6 to 8. Finally in the end the Senate side voted 10 to 5 to accept the Conte amendment on a rollcall vote.

We do not want to go through that again, and we will go through it again if the Boxer motion prevails. I hope that the Members here today on the floor of the House, and those listening to the boob tube, will vote against the Boxer amendment, vote for the Natcher motion, and let us get this bill, one of the greatest health and human services and education bills that ever passed this House of Representatives, down to the President for his signature.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HENRY HYDE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SLATTERY). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, regarding rape and incest, we have to make a distinction between the horror of the crime and the results of the crime. It is a crucial distinction. We compound the horror by killing a second victim, the innocent unborn child.

Members have heard the number of rapes, but we have not heard the number of pregnancies that result from rape, and there are very few.

I should think that the charitable Planned Parenthood or the Playboy Foundation or Stewart Mott or someone could pay for those few abortions that someone thinks are necessary.

A word about the medical profession. There was a time when the medical profession helped people, alleviated suffering, nurtured pain, but they have become social engineers for the most part since the abortion culture.

They somehow justify killing as a part of the healing process.

The doctor in the well said rape is second only to murder. How right he is. If we define murder as the killing of an innocent human life without legal justification, it seems to me we have defined abortion.

Poor women: It is the unborn of the rich that are at risk. We can save some of the unborn of the poor, and they are worth saving, if by denying Federal tax dollars to exterminate the young of the poor. We can save some poor children. It is the unborn of the rich that are at risk.

If Members could have heard as I have heard time and again people saying:

Why are you against abortion? There are too many of those people. You can solve poverty, you can solve handicapped people, you can solve old people by getting rid of the people.

That is the solution that we offer, get rid of the people. That is the way to solve the solution.

I have heard about polls. Arkansas, Colorado and Michigan took a poll and the States voted against using tax dollars to pay for abortions.

Incidentally, if Jesus Christ had taken a poll in Jerusalem, he would have never preached the gospel.

As far as ectopic pregnancies are concerned, that is a red herring. Ectopic pregnancies are always covered under the Hyde amendment.

Let me ask you a question: Have you ever held a newborn baby in your arms? Ever done that? I want to ask Membrs if the fact of the existence of that little baby is not more important than the circumstances which created the conception of that child? Is it important that we have JIM LIGHTFOOT here in this House?

Child abuse: The ultimate child abuse is abortion. Do Members know what happens to a tiny baby in the womb of a woman during an abortion? It is an outrage. It is the ultimate in child abuse.

Killing is never a solution. Even the babies of poor women deserve a chance at life. Choose life. Vote against the Boxer amendment.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives will vote on the amendment offered by my colleague BARBARA BOXER which would initiate an official Government Accounting Office study on the effect of distributing sterile needles to help fight the spread of AIDS.

Distributing sterile needles is, in my view, a good first step forward in trying to find a solution to this tragic disease.

I want to commend organizations such as The Community Health Awareness Group in Detroit which travel from event to event in Michigan to educate the public about AIDS prevention by distributing informational packages containing sterile needle equipment. During the Michigan State Fair this summer, this organization volunteered and provided these packages.

This policy is good for our public health because it reinforces our efforts to fight against AIDS and other infectious diseases. This policy does not promote drug use in our cities, it is a preventative measure to stop the spread of the AIDS virus.

This policy has been highly effective in other countries. In Amsterdam there were 13 different needle and syringe exchanges, and that needle sharing was drastically reduced with no attendant increase in the patient load on drug free treatment programs. Positive programs have also been reported in Sidney, Australia, and Liverpool, England.

We now know that IV drug users are the primary source of HIV transmission into the heterosexual community. Distributing sterile needles is a chance for us to save lives and help control this disease which now afflicts over 90,000 Americans, nearly 30 percent of whom contracted the disease by sharing nonsterile needles.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this amendment to recede to the Senate to change current law and allow for the use of Federal funds for abortion in cases of rape or incest.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment because the law as it is now is far too narrow. The current law allows the use of federal funds for abortion only if the woman's life would be endangered if she carried the pregnancy to term. The fact that the law does not allow for the use of Federal funds for abortion for women who have suffered rape or incest is cruel.

If a woman who has experienced the trauma of the criminal acts of rape or incest decides to carry the resultant pregnancy to term, she should receive all of the medical and economic support possible. But it must be her decision to make.

Her decision must not be based on whether she has the money to pay for an abortion. And we should not restrict her decision on that basis any more than we should restrict her medically or financially should she decide to continue her pregnancy.

In this country, we do not provide medical treatment to the victims of mugging or assault based on their ability to pay. To have a separate policy regarding the victims of the crimes of rape or incest is clearly discriminatory—and that's just what has happened with the Hyde amendment's restrictions on abortions for the victims of crime.

What this law does is restrict the rights of victims of these terrible and violent crimes. This is as much a contribution to these individuals' traumatic victimization as the perpetrator of the crime itself.

Today we have the opportunity to set this right by allowing for the use of Federal moneys to assist rape and incest victims toward a speedier recovery—regardless of what decisions they themselves make about pregnancies resulting from violent criminal acts. Again, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to help the victims of violent crime.

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government is once again trying to stick its nose into matters that are not within its power. While some disagree on whether abortion is wrong in the cases of rape and incest, I do not see how anyone can say that the funding of abortion is the right of the Federal Government.

This is taxpayers money that we are talking about, and we have an obligation to consider our constituents rights when spending their money. It is wrong to pay for abortions with the money of taxpayers who consider abortion murder.

In matters of preference, such as whether the money should be spent on cleaning up the environment, improving the space program or funding drug prevention programs, the vote is the final word. Although we may sometimes wish the vote went the way we wanted it to go, Members agree that the democratic way to decide in matters of preference is with a vote.

But the issue before us today is not a matter of preference. It is a case of the Federal Government deciding whether it will spend taxpayers money on something these taxpayers consider to be morally wrong. No taxpayer will say drug rehabilitation programs are morally wrong, whether they want to spend money on them or not. No taxpayer will say that cleaning up the environment is morally wrong, although they may want to spend money on drug rehabilitation programs instead. But there are many taxpayers who consider abortion to be killing and the Federal Government has no right to force them to spend their money to fund it.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to limiting funding for abortions for women who do not have the means to pay for them. I believe the right to choose is a hollow right if it applies only to wealthy women. But, given the choices that we have today, we must at a minimum choose the Senate's language. I urge my fellow members to recede to the Senate's language.

The House version would not even provide funding for women who are the vicitms of rape or incest. Providing funding for poor women who choose an abortion when their pregnancy is the result of rape or incest is the absolute minimum of human decency. If a woman in these circumstances does not have access to an abortion, she is victimized twice, first as the victim of a violent act, and then by being denied the choice to deal with the pregnancy that results from that act.

I urge my colleagues to strongly support the Boxer motion.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time, and I move the previous question on the preferential motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, will the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90?

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that he was in doubt.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were yeas 216, nays 206, not voting 10, as follows:

□ 1405

Mr. LOWERY of California, and Mr. GILLMOR changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. CROCKETT and Mrs. UDALL changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SLATTERY). The question now arises on the motion to concur in Senate amendment 90 with an amendment.

The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate, insert: "If the President does so certify, the General Accounting Office shall conduct a study of programs relating to distribution of sterile needles and report their findings to the Congress and the President within 90 days.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

The question was taken and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, precisely what language was just agreed to? I was on my feet because I wanted to hear exactly what that was prior to, perhaps, asking for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk did report the language, without objection, and would the Clerk please restate the language of the amendment?

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate, insert: "If the President does so certify, the General Accounting Office shall conduct a study of programs relating to distribution of sterile needles and report their findings to the Congress and the President within 90 days.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announced the ayes had it.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, continuing the parliamentary inquiry, if I wanted to offer a motion to that, do we first have to defeat that in a motion to concur in the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To amend the Senate amendment in a different way, the pending motion must be rejected.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I would ask further, I have a motion I would like to make that would provide for appropriate action be taken in the case of rape and incest, and make explicit that medical procedures that would be antipregnancy in the case of a rape would be funded under the Hyde amendment, and ask Members if they would, to vote down the amendment or the Boxer amendment so that this particular motion that I would like to be offered would be made in order.

□ 1410

Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SLATTERY). The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has demanded the yeas and nays.

Mrs. BOXER. I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I have asked for a recorded vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from California will state her parliamentary inquiry.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, would the Chair please explain the status? There is some confusion over here on what the status is and what the gentleman is asking for at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had announced that the ayes appeared to have it on the previous motion. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] was standing and seeking recognition from the Chair. The Chair did not see the gentleman from New Jersey, and the Chair is attempting to be fair to all the Members in the Chamber.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the House is about to vote on? We already voted on the Boxer amendment to recede.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey has risen and asked for a vote on the Boxer amendment to Senate amendment 90.

Mrs. BOXER. On the amendment to concur. So it is, in fact, a revote on the same issue?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the second part of the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

If this motion is defeated, it would give the gentleman from New Jersey the ability to amend the Boxer motion; is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is incorrect. There could be another amendment offered to the Senate amendment 90. The motion would not be an amendment to the Boxer motion. The pending vote is on the Boxer amendment.

All those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will please stand. We need one-fifth of those present.

The Chair counts 60 Members standing for a vote on this matter, one-fifth of those present, so the Chair will announce that there will be a vote taken by electronic device.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 212, nays 207, not voting 13, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3026, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 3026) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of Thursday, October 5, 1989, at Page H 6739).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on the bill, H.R. 3026, and on the amendments in disagreement, and that I be permitted to include a tabulation summarizing the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we bring before you today the conference agreement on the District of Columbia Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1990. After 2 days of conferencing, agreement was reached by House and Senate conferees on each of the 22 amendments of the Senate to the House bill.

The conference agreement will provide the District of Columbia government with Federal funds totaling $538 million for fiscal year 1990 which is a net increase of $5.7 million above the budget request and House allowance and the same as the Senate proposal.

We also recommend an advance appropriation of $20.3 million for fiscal year 1991 for the construction of an 800-bed correctional treatment facility in the District which is expected to be completed by November 1991. The facility will cost $85 million of which $70.3 million will be paid by the Federal Government and $14.7 million will be the responsibility of the District government.

In District funds, the conference agreement includes a total of $3.5 billion in new budget authority. This is $58 million above the budget estimates, $32 million above the House allowance, and the same as the Senate bill.

In reaching our agreement, Mr. Speaker, we stayed well within our budget ceiling goals of $560 million in budget authority—we are at $538 million or $22 million below—and $580 million in outlays—we are at $560 million or $20 million below.

FEDERAL FUNDS

Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement now before the House includes $430.5 million for the Federal payment, $8.7 million for the first quarter payment for Federal water and sewer services which is $26 million below the budget request and House allowance; $52 million for the Federal contributions to the police, fire, and teachers retirement funds; $15 million for the transitional payment to St. Elizabeths Hospital, $32 million for the drug emergency; and an advance appropriation for fiscal eyar 1991 of $20.3 million for the construction of an 800-bed correctional treatment facility to be completed by November 1991.

DRUG EMERGENCY

Mr. Speaker, as I noted a moment ago, this conference agreement includes an additional $32 million to bolster the District's efforts on several fronts in the war on drugs. Over $17 million has been added for the Metropolitan Police Department for 700 new police officers to close down open-air drug markets and increase police visibility.

These 700 new officers along with the 300 additional already included in the District's budget will bring the Department's authorized strength to 5,133, the highest ever, exceeding the previous department high of 5,100 reached in fiscal year 1970 and maintained through fiscal year 1974.

For the court system, we recommend funding for eight additional judges for the superior court to assist in attempting to address the critical emergency resulting from the increasing number of violent crimes related to drugs.

Mr. Speaker, we are attempting to tackle this problem not just by enforcement but also through our public schools where we have added almost $2 million for education and prevention programs.

And for those who are addicted, this conference agreement includes over $2 million so that pregnant drug abusers will be able to receive treatment on demand.

The explosion in the number of crack cocaine babies born to addicted mothers is alarming. In addition, to increased funding for drug treatment, we recommend language in section 140 of the bill to establish a "task force on substance abusing pregnant women and infants exposed to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy."

Mr. Speaker, the message has to be loud and clear to those who are involved in any way with drugs—it is not business as usual anymore, and drug dealing or using drugs is completely unacceptable.

If you are caught dealing drugs, you will be tried and punished as swiftly as possible after arrest.

If you are addicted to drugs, there are drug rehabilitation programs.

And to head off young people from the drug scene, there are drug education and drug prevention programs.

Mr. Speaker, this is a step in the right direction and shows a commitment at the Federal and local levels to derail the burgeoning drug increase.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Let me move now to the general provisions part of the bill, and there are four or five that I want to call to your attention.

First, language is included under section 133 changing the payment procedures for a 1-year trial basis to require user agencies and organizations to pay the balance of $26 million for fiscal year 1990 in quarterly amounts through the Federal Treasury based on the annual estimate prepared by the District. The District will not bill individual agencies and organizations since this would necessitate the creation of a bureaucracy.

Instead, the conferees have agreed that based on the estimate prepared by the District for inclusion in the President's annual budget, the Office of Management and Budget will ensure that each agency has included in its budget the amount as indicated in the District's estimate and that a procedure is in place so that the quarterly payments will be made by the Secretary of the Treasury to the District government in advance on the second workday of each fiscal quarter instead of the first day as is presently the case.

It is expected that the District's annual estimate will include the projection for the budget year adjusted to reflect actual usage for the most recent completed fiscal year.

According to information provided by the Office of Management and Budget, a total of $38.1 million has been budgeted in fiscal year 1990 within the budgets of various agencies for Federal water and sewer services even though the actual amount requested by the District in the President's budget for fiscal year 1990 is $34,740,000 or $3,360,000 less. We would assume that a responsible official at OMB can explain why the budgeted amount is 9.67 percent higher than the amount that is to be paid to the District, and hopefully this is not the case with the much larger budgets for rental and maintenance costs.

I would like to point out that the District government has not requested this change in procedure and there is some question as to whether they are prepared administratively or financially to implement the revisions as originally envisioned. However, since OMB has reported that agency budgets include more than the required amounts and concurrent with the sound management and resource conservation reasons for Federal managers to be more alert to their agencies' water usage in the same way they are with their rental and maintenance costs, the conferees are recommending this change.

We believe that this system will enhance Federal managers' accountability for those resources while not burdening the District with the bureaucracy and problems inherent with directly billing and collecting from the Federal and independent agencies' accounts. We do not expect the District government to devote additional resources to this effort and we expect to be advised in writing prior to any increase by the District in personnel or funds for Federal water and sewer services. And it is our understanding that these payments will no longer be subject to sequestration, so the District will not have to subsidize the Federal Government's water and sewer services as was the case in fiscal year 1986.

Second, we have recommended language in amendment No. 15 which the District of Columbia Council designed for the purpose of reallocating existing personnel resources to eliminate nonessential positions. As vacancies occur in areas where services are required and are essential, existng personnel from nonessential possitions are to be moved to the essential positions. The Metropolitan Police Department is specifically exempted from this provision and other exemptions require the certification of the city administrator.

Third, a hiring preference system is included in section 110B for career and educational employees of the District government.

For career employees, the language provides:

First, a maximum of five points to new employees who claim the residency preference;

Second, residency will be a tie breaker, for employees who claim a residency preference on promotions;

Third, in cases of reductions in force, a maximum of 1 year will be added to the service of a resident who claimed the residency preference; and

Fourth, the 5-year District residency requirement will apply only to applicants who claim the preference and are appointed on or after March 16, 1989, and those individuals promoted on or after March 16, 1989 who claim the preference.

For educational service employees District residency of 5 years will be required of only those employees who have received or who will receive a residency preference when hired or promoted on or after March 16, 1989.

There is no change in the present requirement that all excepted and executive service employees hired by the District after December 31, 1979, live in the city for the duration of their employment in those services.

The fourth general provision is the so-called Armstrong amendment which is section 141 and amendment No. 22.

Mr. Speaker, we believe we have reached a fair compromise that does not please everyone but by the same token addresses the problems which caused the Armstrong amendment to be adopted. The language crafted by the conferees states, and I quote:

SEC. 141. Notwithstanding any other provision of the laws of the District of Columbia, it shall not be an unlawful discriminatory practice in the District of Columbia for any educational institution that is affiliated with a religious organization to deny:

(a) the use of any facility, service or benefit set aside for the practice or promotion of religion; or

(b) the granting of any endorsement, approval, or recognition, to any person or persons that are organized for, or engaged in, the promotion of any homosexual or heterosexual lifestyle or belief that is contrary to its religious doctrine.

Mr. Speaker, what this language says is that an educational institution affiliated with a religious organization may allow discriminatory practices in the free exercise of its religious liberties where specific homosexual and heterosexual lifestyles or beliefs are contrary to that institution's particular religious doctrine.

Let me mention one other provision, and that is one dealing with the funding of abortions. As Members may recall, the language adopted on the House floor on August 2 was not changed by the Senate in their consideration of the bill and provides that no Federal funds shall be used for abortions except to save the mother's life, rape, and incest.

It also says that payments are not prohibited for contraceptives and medical procedures to terminate ectopic pregnancies.

Mr. Speaker, this is old Hyde language carried in this bill every year since fiscal year 1980, with the exception of fiscal year 1989 when the language was changed to prohibit the District from using its local funds to perform abortions except to save the mother's life.

At this point in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, I will insert a tabulation summarizing the conference action:

Mr. Speaker, let me take a moment to thank the conferees on both sides of the aisle in this body and in the other body. Some of the issues we faced were difficult public policy issues, and I thank each Member for the good-faith efforts to resolve these matters.

I want to especially thank our new ranking Member, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GALLO]. He is diligent and thorough and a pleasure to work with, and I look forward to working with him for many years to come.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good conference report and one I believe all Members can support.

I urge Members to vote "aye" on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as approved by the conferees, the District of Columbia appropriations bill is a good bill.

It provides Federal budget authority that is 4 percent under our 302(b) allocation. We need to keep in mind the fact that over 80 percent of the appropriations in this bill are funded by local District taxes and fees.

Although I supported the bill that passed the House early in August, I believe that it has been significantly improved in conference by the reallocation of almost $32 million that will be used to combat the terrible effect that addictive substances like crack and cocaine have on the citizens of this city—users and nonusers alike.

The funds appropriated through this conference report will allow the District to hire more than 1,000 new police officers.

This will bring the Metropolitan Police department back to the level of strength it had in the 1970's.

These funds will expand the court system and provide for security of the judges and staff.

The conferees also considered the drug user, as well as the potential user and the innocent victims of drug abuse.

Funds are provided to establish a number of after-school programs that will give children safe places to spend their out-of-school hours and give them constructive alternatives to street life. In addition we provided a drug intervention program for a small number of high risk students, and funds to locate and treat the appalling number of pregnant women who abuse drugs. We must combat the striking increase in the number of babies who are born addicted to crack and cocaine who are abandoned by their mothers and fathers.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many of my colleagues look upon the District of Columbia appropriations process as an avenue for the debate of important issues dealing with public morality.

And I agree with my colleagues—all too often these human issues are placed on the back burner while we focus on dollars and statistics.

Yet, this bill, dealing mainly with locally raised funds, is not the proper forum and I urge my colleagues, and I urge my President, not to hold hostage the people of the District of Columbia in support of legislation that has no effect in any city or State except the District.

I also want to point out that Members who vote in favor of the conference report will still receive an opportunity to debate and vote for, or against, any 1 of the 14 amendments that are in technical disagreement.

Last night, the 353d person suffered a violent death in our Nation's Capital. Most of these deaths are due to the drug epidemic.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to accept the work of the conferees so that the people of this city can get on with their lives.

We must not delay their efforts to hire and train those very needed police, and to set up the after-school programs and to help those infants born abandoned and addicted to crack and cocaine.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a responsible bill, and I urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Adams amendment approved by the conference committee. This amendment is a compromise which is supported by both Georgetown University and the student organizations. The significant point here is that Georgetown, on whose behalf we have been fighting this battle, is satisfied with the arrangement.

The conference amendment stops short of requiring that a religious institution recognize an organization which expresses views inconsistent with that institution's beliefs and so it maintains religious freedom. At the same time, however, the compromise protects the first-amendment rights of students at universities.

Georgetown is happy with the compromise amendment, and I have a copy of the letter the administrators have written to Senator ARMSTRONG telling him so. They expressly do not want to violate District of Columbia home rule, and they do not intend to change their policy regardless of what we here in Congress do. In short, the institution we are trying to help wants us to leave well-enough alone, and I suggest we heed their plea. I urge you to support the conference language in the District of Columbia appropriations bill.

□ 1450

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. I would indicate later the gentleman from California will rise for a motion to disagree with the conference report, an item in disagreement relative to the so-called Armstrong language in the conference report.

I want to raise this issue in muted tone. The last two times we have discussed it we have tried to focus on it in such a way we have not made the issue needlessly emotional and unduly complex and encumbered with debates over questions of morality as the gentleman from New Jersey indicated with his use of language.

I do feel I have to respond to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY]. The fact of the matter is that religious organizations are not in fact totally convinced of the adequacy of the conference report language relative to the Georgetown instance.

Organizations such as the National Association of Evangelicals, the Christian College Coalition, the Public Affairs Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention, the Association of Christian Schools International, the Christian Legal Society, Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, Good News Movement of the United Methodist Church, Center for Catholic Policy, American Association of Christian Schools, and the National Committee of Catholic Laymen, have expressed opposition to the compromise language brought forth in this conference report.

I will, if I may, since I know there will be a motion offered by the gentleman from California, try to address the issue on its merits at that time, unless the chairman of the committee feels it is appropriate to address it at this point in time.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend for yielding time to me. Let me note here my prolife colleagues and I do not intend to make a serious effort to defeat this conference report, owing to the simple fact the President intends to veto the District of Columbia appropriations bill.

Members should make no mistake about it, this bill is coming back to the floor. It is going to come back for a couple of very simple reasons. No. 1, the conference report that we will consider today completely reverses current prolife policy for the District of Columbia which allows abortion only in the case of threat to the mother's life.

The language that is in the bill provides that abortion would be funded on demand, for any reason whatsoever. So it should be very clear we are not even talking about rape and incest, which was a very contentious issue a few minutes ago, we are talking about providing funding for abortion on demand at government expense for the District of Columbia.

I would hope my colleagues would consider voting no on this. I intend to vote no on this conference report. This conference report will be back and we will have a chance to sustain the President's veto.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The gentleman prior to the last speaker indicated that a lot of groups had reservations about the compromise language.

One of the groups was the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs. Although they adopted a resolution on October 3, 1989, supporting the right of religious institutions to enforce their religious doctrines and practices, they also point out that if in fact an organization has some problems in accepting the compromise in amendment No. 22 as reported, that organization is free to not accept direct funding from the government, which in this case is the District of Columbia government.

Obviously the university in question here does not feel that way.

Second, it is true that I received a letter on August 2 from the President of the United States indicating that if the existing language concerning abortion remained in the bill, he would veto it. The abortion language approved by the House was not changed by the Senate and remains in the bill in the same form as when it passed the House.

Quite honestly, the issue is whether the people of the District of Columbia have the right to decide their own local policy. As we know, the bill provides no Federal funds for abortion except for the life of the mother, rape, and incest. For those who feel that District residents should make their own decision on abortions, I think they side with what the courts have very clearly said when they said that it is up to local jurisdictions, meaning State jurisdictions, or in this case the District of Columbia, to make their own decisions.

What I am saying is it defies logic that the President feels that way when the Supreme Court has said that States, including the District of Columbia, should promulgate their own rules if they desire on the issue of abortion. Yet the President says that is good for the 50 States, but not good for the District—it defies logic that he should singlehandedly make the decision that District residents cannot use their own funds.

I would hope that based on what has transpired, the President would take a second look at his decision to veto the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, at last report the President has said he will veto this bill with the District of Columbia language about abortion on demand through all 9 months, both Senate and House. We are down to a real intense crunch on this issue.

I am going to vote no against this. I am sure it will pass. The President will veto it and then the battle will be back again to the 21 Members. I do not know how they voted on these last two prolife votes, but I have the information right here. I will do the exegeses on it and find out who went what way.

I am informed on the issue of sodomy, lesbian, and male homosexual conduct on a college campus, Georgetown Jesuit university of higher education, that the Senate and House conferees said that Georgetown does not have to let lesbians and male homosexual sodomites meet in the chapel, but they can still use other school facilities.

For the life of me, I do not understand how anybody who understands that Western civilization is built on a Judeo-Christian ethic, Mosaic law, there is Moses looking down at me, "in God we trust" up here, how they could vote for the depravity in this bill on these two issues. I do not know. We will see as the vote comes up, one final vote on sending this back to the conferees again.

Georegetown University's conduct has been disgraceful. They would never charter a heterosexual sex club on campus to use their facilities. I was a 17-year-old in my freshman year at a Jesuit school. If you are 17 observing this insanity, heterosexual couples cannot fool around at Georgetown but you can have a meeting for lesbians or homosexual men. They can fool around, but they are going to be denied the chapel if this goes through without Presidential veto, but they can have the rest of the facilities.

Whoever dreamed the United States in 1989 would come down to this insanity? For God's sake and your own soul, vote no on District of Columbia appropriations.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report for H.R. 3026, the District of Columbia Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1990.

The conferees made substantial changes to the House-passed bill, accepting many of the major amendments proposed by the Senate. But in the end, the total amount appropriated remained below the 302-B allocation for this subcommittee. Compared to last year's level, the conference report is $18.8 million below the amount appropriated in fiscal year 1989.

In Federal funds, the conference report provides $430.5 million for the Federal payment to the District, including $5 million for a reimbursement to the Federal prison system for housing District prisoners; $52 million for the Federal contribution to the retirement funds; and $15 million for the transitional payment to St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Conferees accepted a Senate amendment to reduce the Federal payment for water and sewer services from $34.7 million to $8.6 million. This reduction will not result in a smaller payment to the District since each individual Federal agency budgeted for these services, and the District is expected to bill each agency for services rendered to recover costs incurred in viding services to the Federal Government. This approach was requested by the administration.

The conferees used this reduction to partially fund a $31.7 million drug initiative for the city. The funds are designed "to close open air drug markets, increase police visibility, and provide for speedier court processing of drug-related violent cases." Specifically, the additional appropriations are earmarked for the Metropolitan Police Department, including 700 new police officers; the Department of Human Services for women addicts who are pregnant; the D.C. public schools to enhance after-school activities; D.C. courts, where the increase in the number of judges is subject to subsequent authorization by law. The conference report also includes a Senate amendment providing $20 million in advance funding for fiscal year 1991 to complete the construction of a new 800-bed correctional facility in the city.

These additions bring the total Federal funds in the conference report to $538 million, about $6 million more than the amount passed by the House, but still below the subcommittee's 301-B allocation.

The conference report also addresses the Armstrong amendment which sought to amend the District's human rights law with respect to religious organizations. The conferees agreed to compromise language which does not directly amend the D.C. Code, but it does restrict the application of the D.C. human rights statute.

The conference report includes language, contained neither in the House nor Senate bill, which changes the District's residency requirement. In response to congressional direction, the District changed its strict residency rule to a preference system. This language makes further modifications in that system to reflect others concerns not addressed by the District's plan.

The conference report also includes a modified version of section 137, which requires the District to make interest payments on late reimbursements to the Federal prison system for housing District prisoners. Under this provision, the District will be treated as any other State would for purposes of housing non-Federal prisoners. In fact, the District is treated better than other States, since the States must make monthly payments and the District is only required to make the payments on a quarterly basis.

The language was first included in the fiscal year 1989 supplemental, but it was inadvertently limited only to that fiscal year only. The House language in H.R. 3026 made the requirement for late payments permanent law. The Senate struck this provision. The conference report limits the applicability of the provision to fiscal year 1990, with the understanding that the respective committees will revisit the issue in the fiscal year 1991 appropriations process. The conferees had insufficient information about the Federal Government's reciprocal responsibility to reimburse the District for housing Federal prisoners in city jails. When complete information is available, I will push to make this provision permanent law, so that the District is treated just as any other State would be under this program. For the RECORD, I will include a factsheet on this issue for the House to consider.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this conference report. It provides the resources necessary to meet our commitment to the District while staying within the fiscal limitations set in the budget resolution.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PAYMENTS TO BUREAU OF PRISONS

Removal of section 137 from the House FY 1990 District of Columbia Appropriations bill provides an unintended subsidy to the District government. This section would require the District government to pay interest on its quarterly payments that are made more than 60 days late—the same late payment charge applied to State governments.

For housing 2,000 District inmates during the October 1988 to June 1989 period, the District has only paid the Bureau of Prisons (BOP) $3.2 million (13%) of the $24 million billed. More than two-thirds of the outstanding balance is 60 days overdue.

BOP bills State governments monthly and assesses interest (using the prevailing Treasury value of funds rate (currently at 7%) on balances that are more than 60 days late. Conversely, the District is billed quarterly and pays no interest on balances more than 60 days late.

Based on the District's current 60 day overdue balance, the City has received almost a $100 thousand taxpayer subsidy for the six month billing period ended March 1989.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, today we are deciding on one of the most personal issues that an individual faces, a woman's fundamental right to choose what happens to her own body. To deny a woman the right to terminate a pregnancy is manipulation of her life.

What we are considering is dangerous, and could set the clock back to the days when women died from illegal abortions, because they were desperate to end a crisis pregnancy.

Efforts to deny funding for rape and incest cases in the District of Columbia or elsewhere will disproportionally impact on the poor and racial minorities. Over 90 percent of the Medicaid eligible population in the District belongs to a racial minority and I am sure the statistics are similar in other major U.S. cities. Those who can ultimately afford to go elsewhere will be unaffected by any proposed limitation while the poor will have to resort to life endangering, back alley abortions.

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to vote no on the final passage of the District of Columbia conference report. As you know, President Bush has vowed to veto this bill if it "permits the use of appropriations to pay for abortions other than those where the life of the mother would be endangered."

It might be helpful to point out that a vote against the D.C. conference report and/or a vote to sustain a veto will not cut off daily operating funds for the District. The continuing resolution currently in force provides funding for the District of Columbia under the existing policy which contains the life of the mother exception.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I deeply object to the Armstrong amendment and I commend my colleagues for offering a compromise in order to defeat this extreme measure. This compromise strikes a balance between religious liberty and the freedom of association.

The compromise guarantees gay student groups their right to equal treatment under the D.C. Human Rights Act while respecting the rights of religious institutions to promulgate their views on religious issues. Therefore, this language should satisfy Members on each side of the debate.

This compromise is similar to the consent decree which Georgetown and the gay rights coalition signed a year and a half ago. Therefore, those Members who want to make a statement on the Georgetown matter ought to vote for the compromise.

To oppose the compromise and support the original Armstrong language would be to blatantly condone discrimination and to trample on tolerance, justice, home rule, and religious liberty. I urge my colleagues to support the compromise.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 232, nays 186, not voting 14, as follows:

Messrs. GUNDERSON, McMILLAN of North Carolina, LOWERY of California, and HOAGLAND changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. SCHEUER changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2989, TREASURY, POSTAL SERVICE, AND GENERAL GOVERNMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

Mr. ROYBAL submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 2989) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 101-276)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2989) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 12, 22, 30, 36, 41, 43, 47, 63, 69, 70, 72, 75, 79, 84, 88, 90, 101, 104, 105, 106, 113, 114, 115, 116, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 125, 126, 139, 140, 144, 145, 146, 147, 149, 171, 173, 174, 176, 180, 181, 182, 183, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 192, 193, 195, 196, 198, 199, and 200.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 6, 8, 11, 14, 18, 19, 23, 28, 32, 33, 39, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 52, 56, 57, 58, 61, 62, 76, 80, 81, 82, 83, 85, 89, 91, 92, 94, 96, 99, 102, 103, 111, 123, 136, 141, 150, 157, 178, 179, 184, and 197, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the section number stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert: 521; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 169:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 169, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the section number stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert: 525; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 170:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 170, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended as follows:

In lieu of the first section number named in said amendment, insert: 526; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 2, 4, 10, 13, 17, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 31, 34, 35, 38, 40, 42, 51, 53, 55, 60, 65, 66, 67, 68, 71, 73, 74, 77, 78, 86, 93, 95, 97, 98, 100, 107, 108, 109, 110, 117, 124, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 138, 143, 148, 167, 168, 172, 175, 177, 185, 191, 194, 201, 202, and 203.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2989) making appropriations for the Treasury Department, the United States Postal Service, the Executive Office of the President, and certain independent agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

TITLE I—TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Amendment No. 1: Inserts a center heading as proposed by the Senate.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Amendment No. 2: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses of the Office of the Secretary including operation and maintenance of the Treasury Building and Annex; hire of passenger motor vehicles; not to exceed $22,000 for official reception and representation expenses; not to exceed $200,000 for unforeseen emergencies of a confidential nature, to be allocated and expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and to be accounted for solely on his certificate; not less than $2,000,000 and 40 full-time permanent positions for the Office of Foreign Assets Control; not to exceed $1,649,000, to remain available until expended, for systems modernization requirements; not to exceed $573,000, to remain available until expended, for repairs and improvements to the Main Treasury Building and Annex; $58,081,000.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

For necessary expenses of the international affairs function of the Office of the Secretary; hire of passenger motor vehicles; maintenance, repairs, and improvements of, and purchase of commercial insurance policies for, real properties leased or owned overseas, when necessary for the performance of official business; not to exceed $2,000,000 for official travel expenses; and not to exceed $73,000 for official reception and representation expenses; $25,010,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment provides for separate appropriations for the Office of the Secretary and for International Affairs as proposed by the House. It also includes a provision mandating a certain funding and personnel level for the Office of Foreign Assets Control as proposed by the Senate.

In order for the Office of Foreign Assets Control to properly implement its statutory responsibilities, the Conferees instruct the Department to make available $2,000,000 and provide a staffing level of 40 full-time permanent employees in fiscal year 1990 out of the "Salaries and expenses" account. Additionally, the conferees believe this Office should be provided a travel allowance of at least $50,000 on an annual basis for staff travel for enforcement and compliance purposes and to promote a better understanding of U.S. economic and trade sanctions in those communities directly affected by these policies. The Conferees expect to receive quarterly reports from the Department on the successful enforcement of U.S. economic and trade policies from this enhancement. Furthermore, the Conferees expect the Department to include a detailed budget explanation for the Office of Foreign Assets Control in its fiscal year 1991 budget submission.

ANTI-DRUG ABUSE ACT OF 1988

The Department of the Treasury is directed to report to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives by April 1, 1990, on the Department's actions and progress in implementing section 4702 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (P.L. 100-690). The purpose of the negotiations called for in section 4702 was to ensure that financial institutions conducting transactions in U.S. currency outside the United States maintain adequate records of such transactions, and to establish mechanisms through which such records may be made available to U.S. law enforcement officials. In its April 1 report, therefore, the Department of the Treasury is directed to include a report on voluntary currency transaction reporting by foreign banks. The Department may submit a classified annex to protect sensitive information.

FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT TRAINING CENTER

Amendment No. 3: Appropriates $36,000,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $34,664,000 as proposed by the House and $36,277,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The Conferees have recommended an increase of $1,842,000 above the federal level requested by the Administration for fiscal year 1990. This additional funding is to be made available as follows: $473,000 for maintenance of current levels, training, plant operations, and the purchase of equipment; $219,000 to cover increased operational costs at the Marana facility; and $1,150,000 for operational costs of the new Artesia facility.

ACQUISITION, CONSTRUCTION, IMPROVEMENTS AND RELATED EXPENSES

Amendment No. 4: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For expansion of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, for acquisition of necessary additional real property and facilities, and for on-going maintenance, facility improvements and related expenses, $15,000,000, to remain available until expended.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The Conferees have approved the $6,400,000 requested for a new dormitory at the Glynco facility, and $3,480,000 for maintenance, real property acquisition, and facilities improvements. In addition, the Conferees have provided $5,120,000 above the level requested by the Administration to enable the center to implement priority Master Plan projects in fiscal year 1990. The projects to be funded are as follows:

Glynco, GA:
Firearms Training Expansion	$3,714,000
Explosives Range Relocation	481,000

The Conferees expect the Center to notify the Appropriations Committees of changes in the funding requirements for those projects listed above, and to request additional funding in fiscal year 1991 to continue the implementation of its Master Plan.

FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT SERVICE

Amendment No. 5: Deletes a comma as proposed by the Senate.

BUREAU OF ALCOHOL, TOBACCO, AND FIREARMS

Amendment No. 6: Authorizes the purchase of 650 vehicles for police-type use as proposed by the Senate instead of 500 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 7: Makes available $5,000 for official reception and representation expenses as proposed by the House instead of $7,500 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 8: Appropriates $257,565,000 for salaries and expense as proposed by the Senate instead of $245,933,000 as proposed by the House.

The following table reflects the revised funding level:

[In thousands of dollars]

Amendment No. 9: Makes available $19,000,000 solely for enforcement of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act instead of $15,000,000 as proposed by the House and $24,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 10: Mandates that the Bureau achieve a minimum level of 3,850 full-time equivalent positions as proposed by the Senate instead of 3,701 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 11: Mandates that no fewer than 692 full-time equivalent positions be allocated for the Armed Career Criminal Apprehension Program as proposed by the Senate instead of 543 positions as proposed by the House.

U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE

Amendment No. 12: Makes available $10,000 for official reception and representation expenses as proposed by the House instead of $15,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 13: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $1,059,634,000, of which up to $7,000,000 shall be available for the Interagency Border Inspection System, and

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment provides an additional $28,144,000 over the budget estimate for salaries and expenses of the U.S. Customs Service in fiscal year 1990. Of the additional amount, the conferees expect the funds to be allocated as follows: $14,300,000 for the commercial operations activities of the U.S. Customs Servce; $10,833,945 for additional air program personnel; and up to $7,000,000 for the interagency border inspection system, of which $3,000,000 has been included in the total funding level for salaries and expenses and the remaining $4,000,000 shall be taken from the proposed TECS II initiative planned in fiscal year 1990.

It is requested that the Customs Service review the requirements at the Washington Dulles International Airport, the Baltimore-Washington International Airport, the San Jose, California International Airport, and the Orlando, Florida International Airport, and make every effort to provide adequate Customs support.

The Conference agreement provides (1) $500,000 for part-time and temporary positions in the Honolulu Customs District, and (2) an increase of 24 inspectors for Honolulu International Airport over the authorized level (table of organization) for the district for fiscal year 1990. Both actions are intended to enhance and not supplant current staffing levels. The Customs Service is to report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by February 15, 1990 on its compliance with this provision.

Amendment No. 14: Inserts the word "Budget" as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 15: Amends a provision proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate by restoring a prohibition against the redirection of the Equal Employment Opportunity Program as proposed by the House and deleting a prohibition against reducing the number of Customs Service regions as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 16: Establishes a level of employment of 16,976 positions for salaries and expenses instead of 16,600 as proposed by the House and 17,006 as proposed by the Senate.

The following table reflects the summary of employment:

SUMMARY OF EMPLOYMENT

[Number of full-time equivalent positions]

Total, full-time equivalent positions	16,739	16,422	16,976

Amendment No. 17: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: 1990, of which a minimum level of 10,385 full-time equivalent positions shall be allocated to commercial operations activities, and of which a minimum level of 930 full-time equivalent positions shall be allocated to air interdiction activities of the United States Customs Service

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment mandates that 10,385 full-time equivalent positions shall be allocated to commercial operations activities and that 930 full-time equivalent positions shall be allocated to air interdiction efforts of the Customs Service.

Amendment No. 18: Deletes a provision proposed by the House which would have limited the number of personnel in the Headquarters staff. The Conferees direct the Customs Service to maintain the Headquarters staff at the minimum level necessary for efficient operations and to the maximum extent practicable to allocate personnel to operational programs.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE, AIR INTERDICTION PROGRAM

Amendment No. 19: Deletes the word "Interdiction" as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 20: Appropriates $196,728,000 for operation and maintenance instead of $125,128,000 as proposed by the House and $231,728,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The Conferees have provided an additional $68,600,000 over the budget estimate for the "operation and maintenance, air interdiction program" of the U.S. Customs Service in fiscal year 1990. The Conferees expect the additional funds to be expended on the procurement of a third P-3 AEW and 5 interceptor aircraft; upgrades at the C31 Centers; refurbishment of surplus military helicopters to support on-the-ground interdiction missions; and relocation of the Phoenix Air Branch.

Amendment No. 21: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which deletes language proposed by the House which would have made available $7,020,000 for the machine readable document border security program. Funds for this program are appropriated in the Salaries and expenses account. It also inserts language proposed by the Senate which prohibits the transfer of certain equipment outside of the Department of the Treasury.

CUSTOMS FORFEITURE FUND

Amendment No. 22: Establishes $10,000,000 as a limitation on the availability of deposits as proposed by the House instead of $20,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

CUSTOMS SERVICE AT SMALL AIRPORTS

Amendment No. 23: Makes available $2,175,000 to be derived from fees collected for the provision of Customs Services at small airports as proposed by the Senate instead of $1,588,000 as proposed by the House.

The Conferees have provided an appropriation of $2,175,000 for Customs user fee services authorized by law to be derived from fees collected. The level recommended will fund a total staffing level of 30 FTE, an increase of 8 FTE positions over fiscal year 1989. This will allow Customs to continue to provide reimbursable services to the eight small airports currently designated under this program, and to designate additional airports and facilities authorized to receive such services in fiscal year 1990.

The Conferees note that the Customs Service responded to a request in the Conference Report on the Fiscal Year 1989 Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for a study of the feasibility of providing reimbursable services to ports along the Kenai Peninsula, Alaska, with specific emphasis on in-place presence. The report advised that the authorizing statute (19 USC 58b) would have to be changed in order to apply reimbursable Customs services to vessel activity.

The Conferees are aware of efforts being made to amend the authorizing statute to apply reimbursable services to seaports and other facilities. Consequently, the Conferees recommend that when the Customs Service places additional inspectors on a user fee basis, consideration be given to locating an inspector on Kenai Peninsula, Alaska, to service the Kenai Municipal Airport, as well as seaports and trucking facilities on the Kenai Peninsula.

Amendment No. 24: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: or other facilities when authorized by law and

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 25: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: or other facilities when authorized by law and designated by the Secretary of the Treasury,

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

BUREAU OF THE PUBLIC DEBT

Amendment No. 26: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $207,906,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have reduced the budget estimate of the Bureau of the Public Debt for fiscal year 1990 by $36,410,000. The Conferees expect this reduction to be taken in the Bureau's payments to the Federal Reserve Banks for services provided. While the Conferees continue to be sympathetic to the need to fully fund these Federal Reserve Bank services, because of funding shortfalls, the Conferees once again have been unable to provide the funds requested to cover the costs of these activities. The Conferees are advised, however, that this reduction should not have any impact on Federal Reserve Bank services to the Bureau of the Public Debt.

INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

Amendment No. 27: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: expended for research, and of which $128,000 shall remain available until expended for tax systems modernization initiatives

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment makes available $128,000 until expended for tax systems modernization initiatives.

PROCESSING TAX RETURNS

Amendment No. 28: Appropriated $1,946,003,000 for processing tax returns as proposed by the Senate instead of $1,953,446,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 29: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $156,419,000 shall remain available until expended for tax systems redesign initiatives and of which not to exceed $60,000,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment makes $156,419,000 available until expended for tax systems redesign initiatives and makes $60,000,000 available until expended for tax system modernization activities.

Amendment No. 30: Deletes the word "only" proposed by the Senate. The Internal Revenue Service may use $156.4 million for tax systems redesign initiatives and $60 million for systems modernization initiatives.

EXAMINATIONS AND APPEALS

Amendment No. 31: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $1,911,301,000, of which $1,674,000 shall remain available until expended for tax systems modernization initiatives

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The Conferees are agreed that $1,674,000 shall remain available until expended for tax systems modernization initiatives.

INVESTIGATION, COLLECTION AND TAXPAYER SERVICE

Amendment No. 32: Provides $3,000,000 for the Tax Counseling for the Elderly Program as proposed by the Senate instead of $2,800,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 33: Provides that the full $3,000,000 made available for Tax Counseling for the Elderly be absorbed within existing funds as proposed by the Senate instead of $2,800,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 34: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendent of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $1,620,252,000, of which $1,431,000 shall remain available until expended for tax systems modernization initiatives; and of which an additional $7,400,000 shall be available for criminal investigations activities: Provided, That an additional $7,400,000 may be made available within existing funds for criminal investigations

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment appropriates $1,620,252,000 as proposed by the House instead of $1,612,809,000 as proposed by the Senate. It also makes available until expended $1,431,000 for tax systems modernization initiatives as proposed by the Senate. It also provides additional funding for criminal investigations activities.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION—INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

Amendment No. 35: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which allows the transfer of funds within IRS accounts only upon advance approval of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

U.S. SECRET SERVICE

Amendment No. 36: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate which would have authorized the Secret Service to purchase vehicles for police-type use without regard to the general purchase price limitation for the current fiscal year.

Amendment No. 37: Appropriates $370,785,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $371,401,000 as proposed by the House and $360,785,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The Conferees have provided funding for $370,785,000 for the Secret Service "salaries and expenses" account, $2,384,000 above the $368,401,000 requested by the Administration and $10,000,000 above the $360,785,000 recommended by the Senate. Of the additional amount above the level recommended by the Senate, $5,300,000 represents funds added by the Conferees to ensure that the planning, preparation and renovation work required as part of the Service's headquarters consolidation effort can go forward.

The Conferees request the Secret Service to submit to the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate a report on how the remaining $4,700,00 will be expended in fiscal year 1990. This report is to include a new object classification table in support of a total funding level of $370,785,000 and is to be submitted within 45 days to enactment of this Act.

Amendment No. 38: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: Residence, and of which not to exceed $160,000 shall be made available for the protection at the one non-governmental property designated by the President of the United States under provisions of section 12 of the Presidential Protection Assistance Act of 1976 (18 U.S.C. 3056 note)

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This matter is addressed in Amendment No. 172.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 39: Deletes a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which would have limited the operational jurisdiction of the Inspector General of the Treasury Department.

The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study of the extent to which the Inspector General Act of 1978, as amended, is being implemented at the Treasury Department.

Not later than August 1, 1990, the Comptroller General shall report the results of such study, together with such recommendations as the Comptroller General may deem appropriate, to the Senate Committees on Governmental Affairs, the House Committee on Government Operations, the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the House Committee on Appropriations.

Amendment No. 40: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 104. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, beginning October 1, 1990, and thereafter, the Financial Management Service shall be fully and directly reimbursed from the Social Security Trust Funds for the costs it incurs in the issuance of Social Security Trust Funds benefit payments, including all physical costs associated with payment preparation and postage costs. Such direct reimbursement shall also be made for all other trust and special funds which are the recipients of services performed by the Financial Management Service and which prior to enactment of this provision reimburse the General Fund of the Treasury for such services.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment authorizes the Financial Management Service, effective beginning in fiscal year 1991, to receive full and direct reimbursement from the Social Security trust funds for services it provides to the Social Security Administration. Direct reimbursements from the trust funds will cover the direct costs for issuing payments including postage for the mailing of Government checks and all non-personnel payment preparation costs. Currently, these expenses are borne by the FMS without reimbursement; although the trust funds make payments for these purposes to the General Fund of the U.S. Treasury. Direct reimbursement is also authorized for other funds that pay the General Fund for costs incurred by FMS.

Amendment No. 41: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate which would have mandated that the Secretary of the Treasury transfer an aircraft to the Arizona Health Services Center in Tucson, Arizona.

Amendment No. 42: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 105. Not more than $22,640,000 of the funds appropriated by this Act may be obligated or expended for the procurement of advisory or assistance services by the Department of the Treasury.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment limits the amounts of funds which can be obligated for the procurement of advisory or assistance services by the Department of the Treasury.

TITLE II—U.S. POSTAL SERVICE

PAYMENT TO THE POSTAL SERVICE FUND

Amendment No. 43: Appropriates $459,755,000 for payment to the Postal Service Fund as proposed by the House instead of $429,755,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 44: Deletes "—Administrative" as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 45: Inserts the word "General" as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 46: Deletes a provision proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate. The managers agree the language regarding Holly Springs, Mississippi, is unnecessary since the language in the fiscal year 1989 Appropriations Act is permanent law.

Future proposed changes should be done in consultation with the appropriate committees of Congress so as to prevent adverse effects of the proposed changes on service to the public.

MAIL PROCESSING OPERATIONS AT PARKERSBURG, WV

The Conferees strongly recommend that the U.S. Postal Service maintain the outgoing mail processing operations in the Parkersburg Post Office of West Virginia, in the same manner and to the same extent as such operations were in effect on July 1, 1989, and direct the U.S. General Accounting Office to examine the proposed transfer of outgoing mail processing operations in Parkersburg.

POSTAL SERVICE FACILITY FOR TIERRASANTA AREA OF SAN DIEGO, CA

The Conferees continue to be concerned over the lack of a Postal Service facility for the Tierrasanta area of San Diego. The House Committee has been monitoring this issue for several years and has made its views known to the Postal Service.

This project is on the Postal Service's five-year construction plan and was originally scheduled to be completed by 1989. The Conferees believe that this facility should be a priority for the Postal Service in Fiscal Year 1990.

Previously, the Postal Service has stated that it has been unable to obtain a suitable site for a permanent facility for Tierrasanta. However, Postal officials in San Diego have now found a potential site in Tierrasanta that would be suitable for a full-service postal facility.

Postal officials in San Diego have been working with the community on this issue. The Conferees urge the Postal Service to assist the local effort at both the regional and national levels. A permanent full-service postal facility for Tierrasanta is seriously needed and should be accomplished in the most expeditious manner possible.

POSTAL FACILITY IN CHEROKEE VILLAGE, AR

The managers approve of the Postal Service's decision to extend the hours of service at the contract service facility in Cherokee Village, Arkansas. Nevertheless, the managers understand that residents of Cherokee Village still have serious concerns about the quality of service they receive and about Zip Code confusion between Cherokee Village and a neighboring community. The managers therefore reaffirm the directive in the House report concerning this matter.

Amendment No. 47: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate. The Conferees are concerned about the abuse of the subsidized non-profit third-class mail rates by those who use these reduced rates to advertise articles, products, financial, insurance, travel and other services which have no direct relation to the mission of the non-profit organization and which clearly advertise for commercial purposes. Senate language addressing this problem was not accepted by the House Conferees as the issue is currently under study by the Postal Service's authorizing Committee. However, in view of the Conferees continuing concern about the reported abuses, the Postal Service is requested to prepare a report for the Appropriations Committees by February 1, 1990 which includes an accounting of the amount of appropriated funds used to support commercial advertising purposes and which provides the Committees with specific recommendations to eliminate this abusive practice.

TITLE III—EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Amendment No. 48: Inserts a center heading proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 49: Deletes a center heading proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate.

OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 50: Appropriates $18,825,000 for salaries and expenses as proposed by the Senate instead of $18,325,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 51: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which makes available $500,000 for the White House Conference on Indian Education.

EXECUTIVE RESIDENCE AT THE WHITE HOUSE

Amendment No. 52: Appropriates $6,898,000 for operating expenses as proposed by the Senate instead of $6,773,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 53: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which makes available until expended $125,000 for refurbishment of furniture.

NATIONAL CRITICAL MATERIALS COUNCIL

Amendment No. 54: Appropriates $400,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $225,000 as proposed by the House and $550,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The Conferees are advised that costs associated with the Council's activities relative to the Superconductivity Commission are estimated at $150,000. With a budget of $400,000 the Council will be unable to absorb these costs; and therefore, the Conferees suggest that the Council obtain reimbursement from the Department of Energy for any costs it may incur which are associated with work on the Superconductivity Commission.

Amendment No. 55: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which mandates certain employment levels and limits the use of reimbursable detailees.

OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET

Amendment No. 56: Prohibits the Office of Management and Budget from altering transcripts as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 57: Changes a legal citation as proposed by the Seante.

Amendment No. 58: Deletes a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which would have prohibited the funding of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs until authorizing legislation was enacted.

The Conferees understand that it is the intent of the authorizing committees to proceed as expeditiously as possible to complete the OIRA reauthorization process.

INVESTMENT IN MANAGEMENT IMPROVEMENT

Amendment No. 59: Appropriates $500,000 instead of $1,000,000 as proposed by the House and instead of deleting funding as proposed by the Senate. The Conferees are agreed that these funds are to be available to study the feasibility, cost effectiveness and management objectives of this program. The Conferees request that OMB complete this study as soon as practicable and report the results to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations. The Conferees agree that this account be placed under the Office of Management and Budget.

OFFICE OF NATIONAL DRUG CONTROL POLICY

Amendment No. 60: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which authorizes certain research projects, $7,500 for official reception and representation expenses, and for participation in certain projects. It also authorizes the Office to accept, hold, administer and utilize gifts for the purpose of aiding the work of the Office.

SPECIAL FORFEITURE FUND

Amendment No. 61: Deletes an appropriation which would have been derived from the Department of Justice Assets Forfeiture Fund as proposed by the Senate. The House proposed to make $136 million available in 1990.

Amendment No. 62: Inserts a center heading proposed by the Senate.

TITLE IV—INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON FEDERAL PAY

Amendment No. 63: Restores a provision proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate which mandates that the annual report be submitted to Congress at the same time that it is submitted to the President.

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

Amendment No. 64: Appropriates $15,330,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $14,257,000 as proposed by the House and $15,570,000 as proposed by the Senate.

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

FEDERAL BUILDINGS FUND LIMITATION ON THE AVAILABILITY OF REVENUE

Amendment No. 65: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $25,220,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment appropriates $25,220,000 to the Federal Buildings Fund.

Amendment No. 66: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $3,328,345,320

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment establishes a total limitation of $3,328,345,320 for the Federal Buildings Fund.

Amendment No. 67: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $138,843,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment establishes a limitation of $138,843,000 for construction projects in the Federal Buildings Fund.

Amendment No. 68: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides a grant of $5,000,000 to Iowa State University to establish a Supercomputer Access Center.

GENERAL MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 112: Restores a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate, amended to provide $13,152,000 for grants to educational institutions instead of $16,152,000 for grants as proposed by the House.

The Conferees recognizes that management of the National Defense Stockpile was transferred to the Department of Defense in accordance with Executive Order 12626 issued on February 25, 1988. As a result, jurisdiction over the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund now rests entirely with the Defense Subcommittees of the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate.

The managers on the part of the Senate have agreed to provide the $13,152,000 in GSA's Management and Administration account, as proposed by the House, for grants for strategic materials research, facilities, equipment, and related activities at certain institutions of higher learning. The Senate Conferees take the position, however, that this is the last year funding for grants to universities for strategic materials research, equipment, centers or facilities related to the National Defense Stockpile Transaction Fund will be provided in the Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Appropriations Act.

Amendment No. 113: Restores a provision proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate which authorizes funds made available to the General Services Administration for payment of rent under certain circumstances.

Amendment No. 114: Restores a provision proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate which authorizes the Administrator of General Services to charge the Department of the Interior for design and alteration to property located at Avondale, Maryland.

Dowsett et als, and being a portion of the land described in Transfer Certificate of Title No. 86,019 issued to said grantor, situated at Lualualei, Waianae, Oahu, Hawaii, and also excluding therefrom, Parcel "B" of WAIANAENUI WATERSHED PROJECT, MAILI CHANNEL IMPROVEMENT, LINES M-5 and M-6: All of that certain parcel of land being a portion of Grant 4751 to H.M. Von Holt (Portion of U.S. Civil No. 868), situated at Lualualei, Waianae, Oahu, Hawaii, approximately 2.861 acres.

(c) CONDITIONS OF CONVEYANCES.—(1) The Administrator shall convey the approximately 89.274 acres described in subsection (b) to the State of Hawaii on the condition that the State of Hawaii, within 3 years of date of conveyance, exchange such property and other appropriate consideration (if necessary) for an equal total amount of consideration that includes one or more parcels of Hawaiian home lands on the islands of Hawaii, Oahu, and Molokai consisting of: (1) approximately 6.00 acres of real property located in Keaukaha (Tract 1), Waiakea, Hilo, Hawaii, being the present site of Keaukaha School; (2) approximately 26.207 acres of real property filed in the Office of the Department of Land and Natural Resources in C.S.F. No. 20282 and a separate parcel, being the present site of Molokai High School and Athletic Field; and (3) approximately 13.675 acres, filed in the Office of the Department of Land and Natural Resources in C.S.F. Nos. 12325, 10414, and 6324, being the present site of Nanaikapono Elementary School.

In the event the exchange of the property is not completed within the time period as specified herein, including recording the deed for the conveyance of the property from the State of Hawaii in accordance with all applicable laws, all right, title and interest to such property shall revert to the United States and the United States shall have the immediate right of entry thereon.

(2) Prior to the conveyance by the Administrator of approximately 89.274 acres described in subsection (b), as a condition of the conveyance, the State of Hawaii shall agree that the Hawaiian Home Land properties to be acquired by the State of Hawaii in the exchange described in subsection (c)(1) shall only be used for educational purposes in perpetuity, and in the event the properties cease to be so used, all or any portion of such properties shall, in its existing condition, revert to the United States.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment transfers certain lands to the State of Hawaii as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 128: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 18. (a) Notwithstanding Sec. 203(k) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, any implementing regulations, and the conveyance of Deed Without Warranty of June 5, 1968 recorded in Book 250 pages 183 through 196 of the Deed Records of Chaves County, New Mexico, on June 5, 1968, and Correction Deed of January 6, 1969, to the Deed Without Warranty of June 5, 1968, recorded in Book 252 pages 100 through 115 of the Deed Records of Chaves County, New Mexico, from the United States of America to the Board of Regents, Eastern New Mexico University (ENMU), the Secretary of Education shall, as to the property described in subsection (b), grant a release to ENMU from all terms, conditions, reservations, and restrictions required by the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act, implementing regulations or contained in the above mentioned Deeds, subject to the United States retaining until June 5, 1998, a reversionary interest, which runs with the land, if any part of the property described in subsection (b) is not used for educational or training purposes.

(b) The property referred to in this section is described as a tract of land lying and being situated in Section 33, Township 11 South, Range 24 East, NMPM, Chaves County, New Mexico and being more particularly described as follows: Beginning at a point on the South boundary of the PECOS VALLEY VILLAGE SUBDIVISION from which the Northwest corner of said Section 33 bears N 6°16'28" W a distance of 2382.64 feet, said point being the intersection of said South boundary and the centerline of Gail Harris Street; thence S 89°37'30" E along the south boundary of the PECOS VALLEY VILLAGE SUBDIVISION, a distance of 753.38 feet; thence S 0°00'43" E a distance of 2382.10 feet; thence S 89°58'24" W a distance of 771.18 feet to the centerline of Gail Harris Street; thence N 6°24'51" E along said centerline, a distance of 2387.43 feet to the point of beginning. Containing 41.7245 acres, more or less.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment permits the leasing of certain Federal lands currently deeded to Eastern New Mexico University (ENMU) to the City of Roswell, New Mexico, for educational or training purposes. This change in law does not affect ENMU's compliance with the 30 year educational use requirement and the earning of the public benefit allowance.

Amendment No. 129: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 19. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator of General Services—

(a) shall convey, without consideration, jurisdiction (custody, accountability and control) to the Institute of American Indian and Alaska Native Culture and Arts Development (Institute), over approximately 31,006 square feet of real property, together with any improvements, structures, and fixtures located thereon and related personal property, located at Cathedral Place at Palace, in Ward Number 4 of the City of Santa Fe and Precinct Number 18 of the County of Santa Fe, New Mexico, and

(b) shall transfer to the Institute, from revenues and collections in the fund established pursuant to section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 United States Code 490(f)), the sum of $2,130,000 for carrying out, in consultation with the Administrator of General Services, repairs and alterations to the facility transferred by this section.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment transfers certain Federal property in Santa Fe, New Mexico to the Institute of American Indian and Alaska Native Culture and Arts Development.

Goods and services provided in connection with the conferences may include, but are not limited to, food and refreshments; rental of seminar rooms, banquet rooms, and facilities; and use of communications, printing and other equipment. Awards of minimal intrinsic value will be allowed. Gifts provided by an individual donor shall not exceed 50 percent of the total value of the gifts provided at each location; $112,430,000 of which no less than $250,000 shall be made available to establish a program to facilitate the use of job sharing arrangements in agencies as authorized in section 3402 of title 5, United States Code, and of which not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be made available for establishment of Federal health promotion and disease prevention programs for Federal employees*

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment authorizes the acceptance of certain gifts. It also appropriates $112,430,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $113,668,000 as proposed by the House and $111,192,000 as proposed by the Senate. It also makes available $250,000 to establish a job sharing program and makes available $1,000,000 for Federal health promotion programs.

Amendment No. 139: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have appropriated $111,192,000 for salaries and expenses and would have made $1,000,000 available for certain programs.

Amendment No. 140: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate which would have amended a provision of the Federal Employees Health Benefits Act.

OFFICE OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

Amendment No. 141: Capitalizes a center heading as proposed by the Senate.

FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS AUTHORITY

Amendment No. 142: Appropriates $17,590,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $17,500,000 as proposed by the House and $17,680,000 as proposed by the Senate.

TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS THIS ACT

Amendment No. 143: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 501. Where appropriations in this Act are expendable for travel expenses of employees and no specific limitation has been placed thereon, the expenditures for such travel expenses may not exceed the amount set forth therefor in the budget estimates submitted for the appropriations without the advance approval of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations: Provided, That this section shall not apply to travel performed by uncompensated officials of local boards and appeal boards of the Selective Service System; to travel performed directly in connection with care and treatment of medical beneficiaries of the Department of Veterans Affairs; to travel of the Office of Personnel Management in carrying out its observation responsibilities of the Voting Rights Act; or to payments to interagency motor pools where separately set forth in the budget schedules.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment prohibits agencies from exceeding the travel limitations contained in the budget estimate unless advance approval is obtained from the House and Senate Appropriations Committees.

Amendment No. 144: Restores section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 145: Restores section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 146: Restores section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 147: Restores section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 148: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the first section number named in said amendment, insert the following: 505A

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment prohibits the procurement of hand tools produced outside of the United States except under certain circumstances.

Amendment No. 149: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate regarding the employment of guards, elevator operators, messengers and custodians.

Amendment No. 150: Deletes a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate related to competitive procurement of electric utility service. Because a more comprehensive provision was enacted into permanent law (Section 8093 of Public Law 100-202, 101 Stat. 1329-79) it is not necessary to include the provision in this bill.

Amendment No. 151: Restores a provision proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate which prohibits the closing of a Federal Information Center in Sacramento, California.

Amendment No. 152: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 153: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 154: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 155: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 156: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 157: Deletes a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate regarding gasoline mileage requirements.

Amendment No. 158: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 159: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 160: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 161: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 162: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 163: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 164: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 165: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 166: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 167: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 522. The Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service shall take such action as necessary to maintain the existing staffing level without any downgrading of existing employees at the Detroit Data Center in the course of modifying certain payroll and personnel processing operations in the Office of Fiscal Operations and in the Resources Systems Development Division and modifying the capabilities of the Center to achieve backup compatibility with the Internal Revenue Service Martinsburg Computer Center in West Virginia.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment directs the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service to take such action as necessary to maintain the existing staffing level without any downgrading of existing employees at the Detroit data center in the course of modifying certain payroll and personnel processing operations in the Office of Fiscal Operations and in the Resources Systems Development Division and modifying the capabilities of the center to achieve backup compatibility with the IRS Martinsburg computer center in West Virginia.

Amendment No. 168: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 523. The Director of National Drug Control Policy, as established by the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, Public Law No. 100-690, 102 Stat. 4181 (1989), is hereby authorized in cooperation with the Administrator of General Services to select a site not to exceed 30,000 occupiable square feet for housing the Office of National Drug Control Policy suitable to meet the mission and security requirements of such Office, and the Administrator of General Services is hereby authorized to enter into a lease for such site under such terms and conditions as the Administrator finds to be in the best interests of the United States, notwithstanding any other provisions of law.

SEC. 524. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the United States Customs Service may acquire by purchase land in the Bahamas for the operation of an aerostat site. Appropriations for the Air Program shall be available for the acquisition of such land.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment deletes a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate regarding certain employees located in certain wage areas. It inserts a provision authorizing the acquisition of space for the Director of National Drug Control Policy.

The Conferees have been advised that the existing space of the Office of National Drug Control Policy (ONDCP) is inadequate and does not meet the Office's unique security requirements. The Conferees are further advised that discussions between the Office of National Drug Control Policy and the General Services Administration have resulted in a mutual concurrence that in order for the ONDCP to secure space which is more suitable to its needs the normal rules governing the leasing of space need to be suspended. The Conferees have, therefore, included a provision in the bill which authorizes the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, in cooperation with the Administrator of General Services, to select a site for housing which will provide up to 30,000 square feet of occupiable space and authorizes the Administrator of General Services to enter into a lease, which is in the best interests of the Federal government, for such site. The provision included in the bill will permit the ONDCP to occupy the new space, which shall include enhanced security, by no later than January 1, 1990. If the Director of ONDCP and the Administrator determine that the space requirements exceed 30,000 square feet, they are directed to notify the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations of the additional needs for approval.

This amendment also authorizes the U.S. Customs Service to purchase land for the operation of an aerostat site.

Amendment No. 169: Inserts a new section number.

Amendment No. 170: Restores a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which retroactively changes the effect of a law regarding a hospital in Sullivan, Missouri.

Amendment No. 171: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate which would have provided for bonus pay to certain Federal employees.

Amendment No. 172: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 527. The Presidential Protection Assistance Act of 1976 (18 U.S.C. 3056 note) is amended by adding at the end thereof:

"SEC. 12. In carrying out the protection of the President of the United States, pursuant to section 3056(a) of title 18, at the one non-governmental property designated by the President of the United States to be fully secured by the United States Secret Service on a permanent basis, as provided in section 3.(a) of Public Law 94-524, the Secretary of the Treasury may utilize, with their consent, the law enforcement services, personnel, equipment, and facilities of the affected State and local governments. Further, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to reimburse such State and local governments for the utilization of such services, personnel, equipment, and facilities. All claims for such reimbursement by the affected governments will be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury on a quarterly basis. Expenditures for this reimbursement are authorized not to exceed $160,000 in any one fiscal year: Provided, that the designated site is located in a municipality or political subdivision of any State where the permanent resident population is 7,000 or less and where the absence of such Federal assistance would place an undue economic burden on the affected State and local governments."

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment authorizes the Secret Service to reimburse such state, municipalities, and political subdivisions, for the utilization of services, personnel, equipment, and facilities related to the non-governmental residence of the President.

The conferees understand that there is a serious financial burden imposed on the small town of Kennebunkport, Maine, when the President stays at his residence located there. The town recently informed the President that it could no longer provide for his protection as it had exhausted available funds.

The conferees are concerned that the expenses incurred by the town are incurred as a direct result of assistance requested by the Secret Service detailed to that area. In that regard, the conferees believe that the protection of the President should be of primary concern and that given the town's inability to raise the funds to adequately fulfill requests by the Secret Service, $160,000 shall be appropriated. All claims for reimbursement by the affected governments shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury on a quarterly basis. Expenditures for this reimbursement are authorized not to exceed $160,000 in any one fiscal year.

Amendment No. 173: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 174: Restores a provision proposed by the House and deleted by the Senate which prohibits funds in this Act from being used to implement or enforce certain sections of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Amendment No. 175: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the first section number named in said amendment, insert the following: 529

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment prohibits the purchase of stainless steel flatware outside of the United States except under certain circumstances.

Amendment No. 176: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate which would have authorized certain payments by the Federal government to state and local law enforcement agencies made by the U.S. Customs Service in law enforcement activities.

Amendment No. 177: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the section number named in said amendment, insert the following: 530

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment provides that the fiscal year 1990 pay raises for programs funded by this Act shall be absorbed within the levels appropriated by this Act.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

DEPARTMENTS, AGENCIES AND CORPORATIONS

Amendment No. 178: Establishes a limitation of $7,100 for purchase of passenger motor vehicles as proposed by the Senate instead of $6,600 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 179: Establishes a limitation of $8,100 on the purchase of station wagons as proposed by the Senate instead of $7,600 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 180: Restores a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate. This provision authorizes the payment of rent in the District of Columbia.

Amendment No. 181: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 182: Restores a section number proposed by the House

Amendment No. 183: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 184: Deletes a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate regarding the status of guards employed by the General Services Administration.

Amendment No. 185: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the first section number named in said amendment, insert the following: 609

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment grants certain authority to guards employed by the Postal Service and changes a section number.

Amendment No. 186: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 187: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 188: Deletes a provision proposed by the Senate which mandates that the amount of space and service provided by GSA will be commensurate with the amounts appropriated or made available in Appropriations Acts.

Amendment No. 189: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 190: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

The Conferees recognize the uniqueness of the function of collecting duties on repairs to U.S. vessels in foreign shipyards. Accordingly, the Conferees intend that Section 613 not apply to this function and that the Customs Service may consolidate this function in one location as appropriate.

Amendment No. 191: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 614. During the period in which the head of any department or agency, or any other officer or civilian employee of the Government appointed by the President of the United States, holds office, no fund may be obligated or expended in excess of $5,000 to furnish or redecorate the office of such department head, agency head, officer, or employee, or to purchase furniture or make improvements for any such office, unless advance notice of such furnishing, or redecoration is expressly approved by the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the house to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment continues a limitation of $5,000 on furnishing or redecorating certain offices unless advance notice is approved by the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

Amendment No. 192: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 193: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 194: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 619. Section 622(b) of this Act shall have no force or effect.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment deletes a provision of this Act which differs from permanent law.

Amendment No. 195: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 196: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 197: Deletes a provision proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate.

The Conferees are concerned that funding for the pay increase should not be provided in a way that would result in any involuntary separations or other adverse personnel actions and direct all agencies to notify the Committees on Appropriations no less than 60 days before implementing any proposed personnel reduction or other adverse personnel action.

Amendment No. 198: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 199: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 200: Restores a section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 201: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers of the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 623. (a) No amount of any grant made by a Federal agency shall be used to finance the acquisition of goods or services (including construction services) unless the recipient of the grant agrees, as a condition for the receipt of such grant, to—

(1) announce in any solicitation for offers to procure such goods or services (including construction services) the amount of Federal funds that will be used to finance the acquisition for which such offers are being solicited; and

(2) express the amount announced pursuant to paragraph (1) as a percentage of the total costs of the planned acquisition.

(b) The requirements of subsection (a) shall not apply to a procurement for goods or services (including construction services) that has an aggregate value of less than $500,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment requires that certain information be provided regarding grants.

Amendment No. 202: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the section number named in said amendment, insert the following: 624

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment authorizes certain funds to be used for national security and emergency preparedness telecommunications activities.

Amendment No. 203: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate, amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 625. (a) Section 5384(c) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "(c)" and inserting "(c)(1)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) not less than a majority of the members of any review board referred to in paragraph (1) shall be career appointees whenever making recommendations under such paragraph with respect to a career appointee. The requirement of the preceding sentence shall not apply in any case in which the Office of Personnel Management determines that there exists an insufficient number of career appointees available to comply with the requirement."

(b) Section 5381 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting "' career appointee'," before "and".

(c) None of the funds in this Act may be used to reduce the rank or rate of pay of a career appointee in the Senior Executive Service upon reassignment or transfer.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment amends certain sections of title 5 of the United States Code regarding Federal employees.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3026, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SLATTERY). The Clerk will designate the first amendment in disagreement.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 8, 14, and 21 be considered en bloc and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The texts of the various Senate amendments referred to in the foregoing request are as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 3, after line 7, insert:

For an additional amount for the design and construction of a prison within the District of Columbia, $20,300,000 to become available October 1, 1990: Provided, That these funds shall remain in the United States Treasury and shall be transferred to the District of Columbia government only to the extent that outstanding obligations are due and payable to entities other than agencies and organizations of the District of Columbia government, and payments to such agencies and organizations may be made only in reimbursement for amounts actually expended in furtherance of the design and construction of the prison.

Senate amendment No. 3: Page 4, after line 8, insert:

DRUG EMERGENCY

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia, $31,772,000, to remain available until expended, to close open air drug markets, increase police visibility, and provide for speedier court processing of drug-related violent cases.

Senate amendment No. 4: Page 5, line 13, strike out all after "report" down to and including "sion" in line 23 and insert ": Provided further, That an additional $150,000 out of local funds shall remain available until expended, to close open air drug markets, increase police visibility, and provide for speedier court processing of drug-related violent cases".

Senate amendment No. 8: Page 10, line 11, after "involved" insert ": Provided further, That of funds provided to the Department of Corrections $36,311,000 shall be for the expense of housing D.C. Code violators in Federal Bureau of Prisons facilities, including $5,064,000 of payments previously forgiven".

Senate amendment No. 14: Page 16, line 20, after "cility" insert "to be constructed in the District of Columbia which is financed with Federal funds appropriated to the District of Columbia for fiscal year 1991".

Senate amendment No. 21: Page 31, after line 2, insert:

SEC. 140. TASK FORCE ON SUBSTANCE ABUSING PREGNANT WOMEN AND INFANTS EXPOSED TO MATERNAL SUBSTANCE ABUSE DURING PREGNANCY.—(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Department of Human Services of the District of Columbia (referred to as the "Director") shall establish a task force, to be known as the District of Columbia Task Force for Coordinated Service to Drug-Exposed Infants (referred to as the "Task Force"), to develop a plan for the most efficient and effective delivery of services to substance abusing pregnant women and infants who were exposed to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy, including recommendations to ensure maximum cooperation between service providers.

(b) MEMBERS.—(1) The Director shall appoint no more than 15 persons to serve on the Task Force, including persons with experience in treating substance-exposed infants, representing the following organizations and disciplines:

(A) Child protection and welfare.

(B) Local hospitals.

(C) Health care professionals, including drug treatment specialists, public health experts, primary care providers, and child development specialists.

(D) Public safety and justice.

(E) Public education.

(F) Community-based organizations serving substance abusing pregnant and post partum women and their infants.

(G) Public housing officials.

(H) Other human support services.

(2) In addition to the members of the Task Force appointed pursuant to paragraph (1), the United States Attorney or a designee of the United States Attorney shall be a member of the Task Force.

(3) The Director or the designee of the Director shall act as chairman of the Task Force and provide such clerical support as the Task Force requires.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act the Task Force shall submit a report to Congress making findings and recommendations for legislative or other action, and including a specific plan detailing how the District will provide for the care of abandoned or otherwise abused infants for whom foster homes have not been found within 6 months of birth; and a timetable for implementing its recommendations.

(d) TERMINATION.—The Task Force shall terminate on submission of its report in accordance with subsection (c).

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DIXON

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIXON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number stricker and inserted by said amendment, insert the following "39,262."

SEC. 110A. (a) No funds appropriated by this Act may be expended for the compensation of any person appointed to fill any vancant position in any agency under the personnel control of the Mayor unless:

(1) The position is to be filled by a sworn officer of the Metropolitan Police Department; or

(2) The position is to be filled as follows:

(A) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level that is equal to the grade level of the position to be filled; or

(B) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level higher than the grade level of the position to be filled, and who is willing to assume a lower grade level in order to fill the position.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to any position for which the City Administrator certifies that:

(1) The position is necessary to the fulfillment of an identified essential governmental function; and

(2) The position cannot be filled from within the District of Columbia government:

(A) At a grade level that is equal to the grade level of the position to be filled; or

(B) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level higher than the grade level of the position to be filled, and who is willing to assume a lower grade level in order to fill the position.

(c) The City Administrator shall submit the certification required by subsection (b) of this section to the Council on the 1st day of each month.

SEC. 110B. (a) APPLICATION FOR EMPLOYMENT, PROMOTIONS, AND REDUCTIONS IN FORCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The rules issued pursuant to the amendments to the District of Columbia Government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 made by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 (D.C. Law 7-203) shall include the provisions described in paragraph (2).

(2) DESCRIPTION OF POLICIES.—

(A) POLICY REGARDING APPLICATION FOR EMPLOYMENT.—The Mayor of the District of Columbia may not give an applicant for District of Columbia government employment in the Career Service who claims a District residency preference more than a 5-point hiring preference over an applicant not claiming such a preference, and, in the case of equally qualified applicants, shall give an applicant claiming such a preference priority in hiring over an applicant not claiming such a preference.

(B) POLICY REGARDING PROMOTIONS AND REDUCTIONS IN FORCE FOR CAREER SERVICE EMPLOYEES.—In calculating years of service for the purpose of implementing a reduction-in-force, the Mayor may not credit an employee in the Career Service who claims a District residency preference with more than 1 year of additional service credit, and in the case of equally qualified employees, shall give an employee claiming such a preference priority in promotion over an employee not claiming such a preference.

(C) INDIVIDUALS SUBJECT TO PROVISIONS.—The amendments to the District of Columbia Government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 made by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 shall apply only with respect to individuals claiming a District residency preference or applying for employment with the District of Columbia on or after March 16, 1989.

(b) SCOPE OF 5-YEAR DISTRICT RESIDENCY REQUIREMENT FOR EMPLOYEES CLAIMING PREFERENCE.—

(1) CAREER SERVICE EMPLOYEES.—Section 801(e)(5) of the District of Columbia government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 (section 1-608.1(e)(5), D.C. Code), as amended by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 (D.C. Law 7-203), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Mayor may not require an individual to reside in the District of Columbia as a condition of employment in the Career Service.

"(B) The Mayor shall provide notice to each employee in the Career Service of the provisions of this subsection that require an employee claiming a residency preference to maintain District residency for 5 consecutive years, and shall only apply such provisions with respect to employees claiming a residency preference on or after March 16, 1989.".

(2) EDUCATIONAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES.—Section 801A(d) of such Act (section 1-609.1(d), D.C. Code), as amended by the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988 (D.C. Law 7-203), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Boards may not require an individual to reside in the District of Columbia as a condition of employment in the Educational Services.

"(B) The Mayor shall provide notice to each employee in the Educational Service of the provisions of this subsection that require an employee claiming a residency preference to maintain District residency for 5 consecutive years, and shall only apply such provisions with respect to employees claiming a residency preference on or after March 16, 1989."

Mr. GALLO (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the amendment contained in the motion is not germane to Senate amendment 15 and therefore violates clause 7 of House rule XVI, for the reason that Senate amendment 15 merely relates to the employment ceiling for the District of Columbia government, while this amendment inserts language in section 110B under section 132 of the District's budget.

That language relates to a hiring preference system for career and educational employees of the District government and among other things, makes the new D.C. preference system effective as of March 16, 1989, provides for a maximum five-point hiring preference for new employees, provides that residency will be a tie-breaker rather than a point advantage to a resident who claims preference on promotions, provides that the 5-year residency requirement will apply only to applicants who claim preference and are appointed on or after March 16, 1989, and for educational service, provides that residency will be required of only those employees who receive a preference on or after March 16, 1989.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the amendment introduces an entirely new subject and is therefore not germane.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] desire to be heard on this point of order?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, on the point of order of the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNT-

ROY], the amendment in question, amendment No. 15, is added to section 110 of the bill, line 6, which deals with personnel levels. The amendment itself deals with the preference system that has been discussed by the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, in last year's District of Columbia bill there was a requirement that the District of Columbia promulgate a preference system. In point of fact, on March 16, 1989, they issued a preference system. That preference system, however, was to be modified subsequent to the adoption of the bill on the House floor, but then went to the Senate. The Senate dealt with personnel levels. It did not deal, however, with the preference system.

In point of fact, Mr. Speaker, the preference system was drawn, in this Member's opinion, to an extent that in fact the residency requirement is still in effect because of the substantial discrepancies between the preference between the District of Columbia residents and nonresidents, effectively making nonresidents second-class employees, which of course obviates the substitute of the residency requirement by preference system.

I, therefore, submit to the Chair that the amendment at this point in the bill is relevant to the personnel system and the personnel levels and who are eligible for those personnel positions in the District of Columbia, and I would, therefore, submit to the Chair that it is not nongermane and was, in fact, germane to the subject matter before the conference.

Furthermore, I would suggest to the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY], my distinguished friend, that absent this one passing, there will be other versions that will pass and he may like even less the ones that will pass at that time. As he knows, the gentleman from Virginia is very interested in this matter, as well as myself and others.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Chair that, in fact, this amendment is germane, and the point of the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY] is not well taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DIXON. No, Mr. Speaker, I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARNARD). The Chair is prepared to rule.

In the opinion of the Chair, the arguments of the gentleman from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY] are accurate pertaining to the point of order, and so his point of order is sustained.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DIXON

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIXON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the number stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "39,262.".

SEC. 110A. (a) No funds appropriated by this Act may be expended for the compensation of any person appointed to fill any vacant position in any agency under the personnel control of the Mayor unless:

(1) The position is to be filled by a sworn officer of the Metropolitan Police Department; or

(2) The position is to be filled as follows:

(A) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level that is equal to the grade level of the position to be filled; or

(B) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level higher than the grade level of the position to be filled, and who is willing to assume a lower grade level in order to fill the position.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to any position for which the City Administrator certifies that:

(1) The position is necessary to the fulfillment of an identified essential governmental function; and

(2) The position cannot be filled from within the District of Columbia government:

(A) At a grade level that is equal to the grade level of the position to be filled; or

(B) By a person who is currently employed by the District of Columbia government at a grade level higher than the grade level of the position to be filled, and who is willing to assume a lower grade level in order to fill the position.

(c) The City Administrator shall submit the certification required by subsection (b) of this section to the Council on the 1st day of each month

Mr. DIXON (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief on this.

Mr. Speaker, this is the language that was sent up from the city council with the bill. I know of no objection to it.

Mr. GALLO. We have no objections, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DIXON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Senate amendment No. 16: Page 29, strike out lines 12 to 21, and insert:

SEC. 133(a) It is the purpose of this section to improve the means by which the District of Columbia is paid for water and sanitary sewer services furnished to the Government of the United States or any department, agency, of independent establishment thereof.

(1) striking in subsection (a) all that follows the sentence beginning with "Payment shall be made as provided in subsection (b)"; and

(2) amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Beginning in the second quarter of fiscal year 1990 and thereafter, the government of the District of Columbia shall bill directly on a quarterly basis and in advance for water services provided to all buildings, establishments, or other places owned by the Government of the United States. Bills for each such building, establishment, or place shall be directed to the Federal department, independent establishment, or agency responsible for paying other utility charges for the location. The District government shall adjust its individual billings to reflect actual usage of water services not later than 2 years after the conclusion of each quarter.

"(2) Each Federal department, independent establishment, or agency responsible for making payments described in paragraph (1) for utility services to buildings, establishments, or other places shall pay from funds available to it, quarterly on the first day of each fiscal quarter to the account in the United States Treasury designated or established for Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services,' the amount billed by the District government for water services to be furnished. Amounts in the account shall be made available to the District government on the 5th day of each fiscal quarter but in no case later than 30 days after payments are received from Federal agencies.

"(3) The amount or time period for late payment of water charges involving a building, establishment, or other place owned by the Government of the United States imposed by the District of Columbia shall not be different from those imposed by the District of Columbia on its most favored customer.".

(c) Section 212 of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 108; D.C. Stat. 43-1612) is amended by—

(1) striking in subsection (a) all that follows ": Provided, That"; and

(2) amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Beginning in the second quarter of fiscal year 1990 and thereafter, the government of the District of Columbia shall bill directly on a quarterly basis and in advance all buildings, establishments, or other places owned by the Government of the United States for the sanitary sewer services it receives. The District government shall adjust its individual billings to reflect actual usage of sanitary sewer services not later than 2 years after the conclusion of each quarter.

"(2) Each Federal department, independent establishment, or agency responsible for making payments described in paragraph (1) for utility services to buildings, establishments, or other places shall pay from funds available to it, quarterly on the first day of each fiscal quarter to the account in the United States Treasury designated or established for 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services,' the amount billed by the District government for sanitary sewer services to be furnished. Amounts in the account shall be made availabe to the District government on the 5th day of each fiscal quarter but in no case later than 30 days after payments are received from Federal agencies.

"(3) The amount of time period for late payment of water charges involving a building, establishment, or other place owned by the Government of the United States imposed by the District of Columbia shall not be different from those imposed by the District of Columbia on its most favored customers.".

(d) The first sentence of subsection (d) of section 207 of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 106) is amended to read as follows: "Whenever a property upon which a sanitary sewer service charge is a public park, or uses water from the water supply system of the District for an industrial or commercial purposes in such a manner that the water so used is likewise not discharged into the sanitary sewage works of the District, the quantity of water so used and not discharged into the sanitary sewage works of the District may be excluded in determining the sanitary sewer service charge on such property, if such exclusion is previously requested in writing by the owner or occupant thereof.".

(e) The amendments made by this section shall take effect January 1, 1990.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DIXON

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIXON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 133. (a) It is the purpose of this section to improve the means by which the District of Columbia is paid for water and sanitary sewer services furnished to the Government of the United States or any department, agency, or independent establishment thereof.

(b) Section 106 of title I of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 102; D.C. Code, sec. 43-1552) is amended by—

(1) striking in subsection (a) all that follows the sentence beginning with "Payment shall be made as provided in subsection (b)"; and

(2) amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Beginning in the second quarter of fiscal year 1990, the government of the District of Columbia shall receive payment for water services from funds appropriated or otherwise available to the Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies. In accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, one-fourth (25 percent) of the annual estimate prepared by the District government shall be paid, not later than the second day of each fiscal quarter, to the District government by the Secretary of the Treasury from funds deposited by said departments, establishments, or agencies in a United States Treasury account entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services'. In the absence of sufficient funds in said account, payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury from funds available to the United States Treasury and shall be reimbursed promptly to the United States Treasury by the respective user agencies. Payments shall be made to the District government by the Secretary of the Treasury without further justification, and shall be equal to one-fourth (25 percent) of the annual estimate prepared by the District government pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(2) By April 15 of each calendar year the District shall provide the Office of Management and Budget, for inclusion in the President's budget of the respective Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies, an estimate of the cost of service for the fiscal year commencing October 1st of the following calendar year. The estimate shall provide the total estimated annual cost of such service and an itemized estimate of such costs by Federal department, independent establishment, or agency. The District's estimates on a yearly basis shall reflect such adjustments as are necessary to (1) account for actual usage variances from the estimated amounts for the fiscal year ending on September 30th of the calendar year preceding April 15th, and (2) reflect changes in rates charged for water and sewer services resulting from public laws or rate covenants pursuant to water and sewer revenue bond sales.

(3) Each Federal department, independent establishment, or agency receiving water services in buildings, establishments, or other places shall pay from funds specifically appropriated or otherwise available to it, quarterly and on the first day of each such fiscal quarter, to an account in the United States Treasury entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services' an amount equal to one-fourth (25 percent) of the annual estimate for said services as provided for in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(4) The amount or time period for late payment of water charges involving a building, establishment, or other place owned by the Government of the United States imposed by the District of Columbia shall not be different from those imposed by the District of Columbia on its most favored customer.".

(c) Section 212 of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 108; D.C. Code, sec. 43-1612) is amended by—

(1) striking in subsection (a) all that follows ": Provided, That"; and

(2) amending subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Beginning in the second quarter of fiscal year 1990, the government of the District of Columbia shall receive payment for sanitary sewer services from funds appropriated or otherwise available to the Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies. In accordance with the provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, one-fourth (25 percent) of the annual estimate prepared by the District government shall be paid, not later than the second day of each fiscal quarter, to the District government by the Secretary of the Treasury from funds deposited by said departments, establishments, or agencies in a United States Treasury account entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services'. In the absence of sufficient funds in said account, payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury from funds available to the United States Treasury and shall be reimbursed promptly to the United States Treasury by the respective user agencies. Payments shall be made to the District government by the Secretary of the Treasury without further justification, and shall be equal to one-fourth (25 percent) of the annual estimate prepared by the District government pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(2) By April 15 of each calendar year the District shall provide the Office of Management and Budget, for inclusion in the President's budget of the respective Federal departments, independent establishments, or agencies, an estimate of the cost of service for the fiscal year commencing October 1st of the following calendar year. The estimate shall provide the total estimated annual cost of such service and an itemized estimate of such costs by Federal department, independent establishment, or agency. The District's estimates on a yearly basis shall reflect such adjustments as are necessary to (1) account for actual usage variances from the estimated amounts for the fiscal year ending on September 30th of the calendar year preceding April 15th, and (2) reflect changes in rates charged for water and sewer services resulting from public laws or rate covenants pursuant to water and sewer revenue bond sales.

(3) Each Federal department, independent establishment, or agency receiving sanitary sewer services in buildings, establishments, or other places shall pay from funds specifically appropriated or otherwise available to it, quarterly and on the first day of each such fiscal quarter, to an account in the United States Treasury entitled 'Federal Payment for Water and Sewer Services' an amount equal to one-fourth (25 percent) of the annual estimate for said services as provided for in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(4) The amount or time period for late payment of charges for sanitary sewer services involving a building, establishment, or other place owned by the Government of the United States imposed by the District of Columbia shall not be different from those imposed by the District of Columbia on its most favored customer.".

(d) The first sentence of subsection (d) of section 207 of the District of Columbia Public Works Act of 1954 (68 Stat. 106) is amended to read as follows: "Whenever a property upon which a sanitary sewer service charge is a public park, or uses water from the water supply system of the District for an industrial or commercial purpose in such a manner that the water so used is likewise not discharged into the sanitary sewage works of the District, the quantity of water so used and not discharged into the sanitary sewage works of the District may be excluded in determining the sanitary sewer service charge on such property, if such exclusion is previously requested in writing by the owner or occupant thereof and approved in writing by the District government in advance of the billing period involved.".

(e) The amendments made by this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, and shall terminate December 31, 1990.
